Mr. McGrady: I thank the hon. Member for his helpful and supportive intervention. I did not say that in response to the criticisms from the other side of the Committee, simply because it is a fact that is well known and does not require constant repetition from me or any other member of my party. We have had members who have been killed, blown up, maimed, assaulted, burned out or stabbed to death. We have never, by word, deed, policy or statement, on any occasion encouraged or supported violence. In fact, our total stance for 25 or 30 years has been to fight it, not just in the media, but on the streets of our communities and villages and at election times, when we did it time and again.

When most other people were keeping their heads below the parapet, it was my party that kept faith with democracy and non-violence. In the long run, although it is now criticised for some reason, that led other people who were engaged in violence out of that violence and into the democratic process, in the hope that we could eradicate that violence once and for all from our community.

That is what this Belfast Good Friday agreement is about. As I said, one of the twin pillars is to ensure that violence and the gun are taken out of Irish politics once and for all, after hundreds of years of revolution, rebellion and violence. That other pillar is to promote the economic and social well-being of our people, because they do go hand in hand: we cannot have one without the other.

[Mr. McGrady]

However, I warn the Committee not to expect that, in the community that we have created, if you like, in Northern Ireland over the past 30 years of violence, intolerance and desensitising to the horrors of violence, we can magically at 12 o'clock on some appointed day turn off all violence. I would love that to happen, but I am not so stupid as to believe it will. That is why we have to be careful not unnecessarily to drive people who have been cajoled, coaxed and brought from violence to peace, back into violence. That is vital.

I say to the Committee again, so that I will not be asked the question again, that my party and I will support the Belfast agreement to the letter and spirit of the law. If any party is associated with violence, we will dissociate from it in relation to participation in ministerial position.

I could extrapolate on this, but I do not want to. We have a phrase in Northern Ireland: "what aboutery". One person says one thing, and another comes back by way of argument with, "What about . . . ?" I could refer to Drumcree, and politicians who were there.

Violence occurred at Drumcree. A machine gun was used against the police at Drumcree. Blast bombs and steel darts were used. I was not there, but certainly other Members of this House were. Are they associated with that violence? I am not going to make that judgment. I am going to have to wait for the judgment of the police, security forces and the rest as to whether a party is inextricably linked with an act of violence, not with an organisation of violence. Then, rightly, the agreement, in spirit and law, must be applied.

The amendment is restrictive, because the simple language already in the Bill is all-embracing and does reflect, as the hon. Member for Belfast, East and the right hon. Member for Bracknell have quoted, paragraph 25 of the agreement, which states:

"Those who hold office should use only democratic, non-violent means".

That is all-embracing, and that is what the Bill is saying. In fact, the agreement goes much further, and makes it a condition of office that the pledge of office be faithfully and fully implemented.

The Bill goes even further, which causes me concern, although I have not tabled an amendment on it. It states that the Assembly may resolve that a Minister no longer enjoys the confidence of the Assembly "for any other reason". That is all-embracing for persons or parties. I draw the Committee's attention to clause 23, which says that individuals can be debarred not only for their personal act, but for the acts of their party. That is clearly stated. That has not been highlighted in some of the debate that we have had so far.

The hon. Member for Belfast, East said that he went up and down Northern Ireland saying that Sinn Fein, as he said, although I am sure that he meant anyone else, could not be removed from office if its members were found to be guilty of participation and association with an act of violence. Clause 23 clearly states that there are several mechanisms by which they can be removed—by the Assembly, by the Secretary of State and by the Presiding Officer, with cross-community support. There are at least three mechanisms by which a Minister can be removed from office.

Mr. Robert McCartney: I think that the hon. Gentleman misquotes the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson), who is not in his place. The hon. Member said that the Unionist community could not have those people either excluded or removed from office because of the requirement for cross-community consensus. If that cross-community consensus were not made available by the SDLP, they would remain. That is the point he made.

Mr. McGrady: The hon. and learned Gentleman makes his valid point. I heard what I heard, but I am subject to that correction. I will certainly read Hansard in the morning, because it was said on two different occasions this evening. On one occasion, it was certainly said that, if these people are put in office, they cannot be removed. There was no qualification as to by whom and by what mechanism.

Ministers who are appointed and who contravene the spirit and the law of the Belfast agreement can be removed under clause 23 by the Assembly, by the Presiding Officer, and by the Secretary of State acting through the Presiding Officer. Those are three clear mechanisms and they can be brought into operation by saying that those persons did not use only democratic and non-violent means. Paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subsection (1) give the broadest possible reasons for such mechanisms to be applied and voted upon.

I understand the intent of the right hon. Member for Bracknell in his amendment, and I understand what lies behind the amendment of the hon. Member for Vauxhall. However, in a real way the provisions in those amendments are totally embodied in the general descriptions in subsection (1). If we were to move away from that general description, I would be fearful of restricting the rights of the Assembly, the Presiding Officer or the Secretary of State, and of circumscribing their actions.

I feel, without feeling very strongly, that we should leave the clause as it is. It is all-embracing and would deal with a catch-all situation that we might not anticipate tonight, but which may arise in the months ahead. I am inclined to leave the Bill as it stands.

Mr. Öpik: As I understand it, the hon. Gentleman does not object in principle to the general content of the amendment. What would we lose by the additional clarification that the amendment would provide?

Mr. McGrady: Amendment No. 15 states that we should leave out lines 28 and 29 and insert the five paragraphs. Those five paragraphs are specific, whereas what would be removed is general. The general is always better than the specific. The right hon. Member for Bracknell and the hon. Member for Vauxhall rightly drew attention to decommissioning, punishment beatings and other aspects and attributes of violence, but they are all there in the terms of the agreement. Although I understand the reasoning and the sentiment behind them, I believe that the amendments would restrict the ability to deal with matters not specifically mentioned.

Mr. Hunter: I want to speak primarily to amendments Nos. 15 and 16. Many of the salient points have already been made, not least by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bracknell (Mr. MacKay) and there is no reason to revisit them. In passing, I must say how strongly I agree with the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey). I want to re-express one of her points in my own way. We are so heartily sickened by Northern Ireland's sectarian violence and so earnestly yearn for it to end that there is a danger that we will suspend our critical faculties and, like automatons, support any measure or gesture that purports to promote peace. There is a danger in so doing that we will defeat the objective.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) has returned to the Chamber. I listened carefully to his speech, and I want to make my main points in reply to his arguments. He said—I paraphrase—that we should not, could not, must not or cannot legislate outside the agreement. My arguments in support of amendments Nos. 15 and 16 comply with the remit that the hon. Gentleman wishes to impose on the debate. I do not agree with him that we must not, could not, should not, or cannot legislate outside the agreement. My understanding of the triple lock is that Parliament has a proactive role in the process and has every right to interpret and implement the agreement. However, that is not my main point.

I recognise the imperfection and inadequacies of amendments Nos. 15 and 16. They were pointed out by the hon. Member for Belfast, East. However, I believe that the amendments are a distinct step in the right direction, and I shall argue that they are entirely consistent with the agreement. They arise essentially from the same arguments as those put by Conservative Members during the debate on the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill. I cannot really understand why the Government will not accept them. I will clarify and enlarge on that point.

Mr. Winnick: Will the hon. Gentleman acknowledge that he is against the agreement and that he voted, as he has every right to do, against the Bill on Second Reading?

Mr. Hunter: Oh, yes. I have never sought to conceal that. It is irrelevant to the amendment, but my opposition to the agreement is on public record.

Amendments Nos. 15 and 16 consist of five unnumbered paragraphs. The essential point is that all those unnumbered paragraphs are entirely consistent with the spirit and the letter of the agreement. The first unnumbered paragraph reflects closely and is a re-expression of clause 23(1)(a). The second unnumbered paragraph is as near as possible identical to subsection (7)(b). The third paragraph is a re-expression of subsection (7)(c) and the fifth paragraph is virtually identical to subsection (7)(d). We immediately establish in four of the five paragraphs of the amendment that there is no difference in degree or kind from the content of the Bill as it stands.

The one area in which the amendments introduce a novel dimension is in the fourth paragraph. We need to compare that paragraph with paragraph 3 of the section entitled "Decommissioning" on page 20 of the agreement. I defy any hon. Member to say where that paragraph differs in substance, significance or meaning from paragraph 3 of the decommissioning section in the agreement. This is the issue on which many Conservative Members had difficulty in understanding the Government's opposition to a comparable amendment to the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill just a month ago.

We are tabling amendments that are entirely consistent with the spirit and the letter of the agreement as interpreted by the Government in the Bill and in the agreement itself. I do not believe that our argument was answered adequately by the Government during the debate on the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill, and, like many other hon. Members, I look forward to what will be said today.

Reduced to simplicity, amendments Nos. 15 and 16 are consistent with the agreement and comply with the requirements demanded by the hon. Member for Walsall, North and, within the hon. Gentleman's remit for the debate, they cannot be rejected.

There is a second basis of argument for my belief that the amendments are essential. I pick up a point made by the hon. Member for Belfast, East, and perhaps made also in an intervention by the hon. and learned Member for North Down. It is a generally agreed fact that very many Unionists voted yes in the referendum because of their understanding, and the media's reporting, of what the Prime Minister said on two visits to Belfast—one on the Thursday just over a week before referendum day, and the other on the day before polling day. There was also the handwritten note, and the letter that he wrote, which was published in the Irish News and the Belfast News Letter. I should like briefly to concentrate on that letter.

The Prime Minister's letter appeared in those two major Northern Ireland newspapers on the morning of referendum day. He wrote:

"Representatives of parties intimately linked to paramilitary groups can only be in a future NI government if it is clear that there will be no more violence and the threat of violence has gone.

That doesn't mean just decommissioning but all bombings, killings, beatings and an end to targeting, recruiting and all the structures of terrorism."

"I have set out the tests for this. They will be enshrined by law and these tests will be applied".

That is what the Prime Minister said. However, the perception remains that he and the Government have yet to deliver on that pledge.

Mr. Robert McCartney: Those such as myself—perhaps lawyers—accustomed to the language felt that the Prime Minister's pledges had as many holes as a colander. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the undoubted intention of the pledges was to persuade the electorate of their substance, regardless of the escape clauses with which they were festooned?

Mr. Hunter: I very strongly agree with the hon. and learned Gentleman that that is indeed the case. If one analyses extremely carefully the Prime Minister's quoted words, one realises that they equate with neither the media presentation nor the general public's perception of them.

A point that I have made more than once is that the media presentation and public perception of those words were public matters—published in the press—and that the Northern Ireland Office did not issue any statement of correction or denial. Unwittingly, I have no doubt—I must be charitable—it perpetuated and enhanced the misunderstanding.

I come to the end of the argument that I want to present. First and foremost, amendments Nos. 15 and 16 are consistent with the agreement and with the Government's interpretation of the agreement as presented in the Bill. Secondly, the Government have still to account for the perception and the reality of the Prime Minister's as yet unfulfilled pledges.

Mrs. Maria Fyfe (Glasgow, Maryhill): I affirm my own total and unequivocal opposition to violence in politics within a democracy—in case any Committee member wishes to ask me about my position on the matter. In fact, I am so opposed to such violence that I should include in my definition of it not only life-threatening actions but intimidatory or insulting behaviour within a political body that might silence those who have a view to express. That definition should express the fulness of my commitment to anti-violence. I am not a recent convert to that view, but have held it throughout my political life.

The hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) expressed my own thoughts so well that I have curtailed my speech, and will add only a few further thoughts.

If the words of clause 23 did not fit the agreement, I am quite that Ministers would themselves have tabled amendments for debate today so that the words fit the agreement entirely. As they have not tabled such amendments, I can only presume—as I have not been involved in the talks that arrived at the agreement—that the Bill's words fit the agreement.

This debate has lasted for the best part of three hours, and it is interesting that the violence committed by only one quarter has been mentioned. Let me say—having expressed my total opposition to violence of any kind—that it is interesting that only violence committed by the nationalist side of the equation has been mentioned, except when the hon. Member for South Down, correctly, said that he was opposed to violence from any quarter, nationalist or Unionist.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Robert McCartney: Is the hon. Lady aware that the reason for concentration on what might be loosely called "republican" violence—as opposed to so-called "loyalist" violence—is that, under the d'Hondt principles, the only representatives inextricably linked with violence who have any prospect of becoming a Minister in the Executive are those associated with republican violence? However, I am sure that every Committee member will endorse her sentiments—with which I should like expressly to be associated—about opposition to violence of any kind.

Mrs. Fyfe: I am aware of the d'Hondt principles, but let me continue with the point that I was making.

Opposition Members would have done their case more credit if they had been even-handed in their references to violence. We have, after all, only in recent weeks seen extreme violence at Drumcree. Can it be the case that not a single person aiming missiles at police and the Army is a member of any political party? Perhaps that is so. However, if any person taking part in the violence was a member of a party, I wonder what that party is doing about expelling that member? It cannot be taken for granted that that party is totally opposed to violence if it ignores a member behaving in that manner. Although I certainly do not know for certain, it is hard to credit that not one of those engaged in that extreme violence against our own police and Army has membership in any political party.

I agree with another point made by the hon. Member for South Down—about how senseless it is to expect that violence will totally stop. South Africa, for example, would still be in the throes of apartheid if, on both sides, its people of good will had not been willing to come together and acknowledge that extremists on both sides would regard some actions of people on their own side as a sell-out and refuse to accept them. We have to try to move forward, and the Bill is a part of it.

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Worthing, West): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Fyfe: I shall continue.

Far greater risks come from not supporting the Bill. I was really worried when I heard an Opposition Member—whose constituency I forget, but we are colleagues in the Council of Europe, and we agree on so many things—say that he is now dubious about the Bill. I am seriously worried about that.

Committee members have criticised what they consider to be the loose terminology of the phrase "any other reason", which is mentioned in two parts of the Bill. The phrase is all-inclusive, and could mean any type of violent activity. If one is going to object to someone on the grounds of only one particular aspect of violence, we will be back to an exercise of, "What about?" Human ingenuity can create endless ways in which to act violently or to intimidate others. Should the Bill contain an endless list of every form of violence that anyone has imagined? Of course not. The phrase "any other reason" has therefore been included in the Bill, so that the Assembly itself can act as it sees fit in each case.

Mr. MacKay: I know that the hon. Lady would not want deliberately to mislead the House, and I shall help her put the record straight. I made it clear in my opening remarks that I condemned all violence, and I mentioned the number of paramilitary punishment beatings as well as the number of IRA punishment beatings. The hon. Lady was present for Second Reading on Monday, and heard me condemn what had happened at Drumcree and elsewhere. I suspect that she was also present last Wednesday during Northern Ireland questions, when the same condemnation was made. At no point, have I or any member of my party been anything but even-handed in our condemnation of terrorism, violence and intimidation.

We are now discussing the Assembly, however. As the hon. and learned Member for North Down said, there is only one paramilitary party that, under the d'Hondt principle, could possibly take ministerial office, and that is Sinn Fein-IRA. Inevitably, we have had to concentrate on that.

Mrs. Fyfe: I missed the opening sentence of the right hon. Gentleman's speech, so he possibly made that reference then, but it was not in my hearing. I apologise if I have misrepresented what he said, but I find—I am sure that Hansard will show me to be correct—that most of the debate has been about violence from one side.

Opposition Members are talking about the current situation, but we are talking about creating an Assembly which, we must surely hope, will last for many years, so the same issue could arise in future in respect of a member of some other group, Unionist or nationalist. My point is that it is perfectly reasonable to retain the words "for any other reason" in the Bill, because that allows the widest possible interpretation of what the Assembly itself could decide was unacceptable conduct. To return to my earlier point, I would even include in the term "any other reason" intimidatory behaviour in the Chamber.

Mr. Öpik: I am sure that the hon. Lady agrees that one of the biggest problems in this debate, and, one can predict, one of the biggest problems of the Assembly's actions in regard to violence, is likely to centre on interpretation. How does the hon. Lady feel about what I presume to be the intention behind the amendment, which is to specify as much as we can in order to reduce the element of subjectivity—and, more to the point, the vagueness—which could cause enormous dispute within the Assembly itself?

Mrs. Fyfe: I thought that I had dealt with that point. If we were to attempt to include every possible activity that could be counted as a violent act, the Bill would have umpteen pages, and still leave something out. It is better to leave the words "for any other reason", so that the Assembly has the authority to act on what it finds unacceptable.

I hope that what I have said has contributed to the debate. It is important to get behind the Bill, and behind the agreement. We all know what will happen if they should fail.

Mr. Donaldson: Government Members, especially the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), have referred many times to those of us who oppose the agreement. The referendum is over, lest the hon. Gentleman has not noticed. The people of Northern Ireland voted for the agreement, and that is why we are discussing the Bill. The hon. Gentleman seemed to be saying that any issue that we raise is invalid because we oppose the agreement. I hope that that is not the case, but he keeps asking the same question and one wonders what his motive is.

We are dealing specifically with the issue of the holding of ministerial office. It is important to focus on that aspect of the clause, because some of the contributions today have ranged very widely.

For the benefit of the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), let me make it clear that my colleagues and I have always opposed terrorist violence, from whatever quarter it comes. When I was 18 years old, I joined the Ulster Defence Regiment, part of Her Majesty's security forces, to fight terrorism. I had the option to join the Ulster Volunteer Force, but I am opposed to paramilitary, terrorist violence and went out to defend the community against all forms of terrorism and paramilitary organisations. Let the hon. Lady be in no doubt that my colleagues and I oppose terrorist violence from wherever it comes.

Let us understand what we are dealing with. The only terrorist organisation with political representatives in the Assembly that is eligible to hold ministerial office is the IRA. That is the reality. The UVF's representatives—the Progressive Unionist party—secured only two seats in the Assembly, so they would not be eligible for ministerial office. The Ulster Democratic party, representing the UDA, had no one elected to the Assembly and has not the remotest prospect of holding ministerial office. The only organisation eligible to hold ministerial office is the IRA, and we are focusing on that because the clause deals with the holding of ministerial office. I hope that the hon. Member for Maryhill understands why that has been the focus of our attention. We have to deal with the reality.

The IRA has the prospect of holding ministerial office in the Northern Ireland Assembly—and I mean the IRA, because many of the members of Sinn Fein who have been elected to the Assembly are senior members of the Provisional IRA. The hon. Members for Belfast, West (Mr. Adams) and for Mid-Ulster (Mr. McGuinness), who do not take their seats in the House, are both acknowledged publicly to have been in the past, if they are not at present, members of the army council of the IRA. Those are the very people who are about to become Ministers in the Government of Northern Ireland. Let us understand the reality of the situation.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I understand my hon. Friend's argument, but does he accept that the legislation would cover any party or any person engaged in violence? Therefore, it is not aimed at any particular party or person, although I understand my hon. Friend's argument in the context of the current situation.

Mr. Donaldson: I thank my hon. Friend for that intervention. Of course, the principle applies to all paramilitary and terrorist organisations. We believe that the provisions in this Bill, like those in the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill, are inadequate. They do not define clearly the requirement for paramilitary-linked political parties to be committed to exclusively peaceful and democratic means. I know that Labour Members say that the agreement and the Bill state that people holding office should be committed to peaceful means, but there must be some accountability. There must be some means of holding people to that commitment. Our view is that the Bill's provisions are inadequate for holding people to account. That is where I am coming from.

I was present during the talks that led to the agreement. I was present because I wanted a fair and honourable agreement that provided the basis for a way forward for Northern Ireland. I voted against the agreement because of the situation that we are discussing now. I am not prepared to accept as Ministers in the Government of Northern Ireland people who are members of the IRA army council—members of an organisation which has not given up violence for good.

What we have is a ceasefire from the IRA. It was breached at the weekend by the murder of Andrew Kearney. It was breached by the beating of Vincent McKenna, and it has been breached on numerous occasions since it was brought into effect. It is not a permanent end to violence; nor does it represent a commitment to exclusively peaceful means. Those who hold ministerial office should be committed to peaceful means, and the organisations to which they are linked must demonstrate that in a tangible form before people become eligible to hold ministerial office. I object to the

[Mr. Donaldson]

Bill because it contains nothing that would prevent representatives of Sinn Fein-IRA from becoming Ministers in the Government of Northern Ireland.

6.30 pm

I understand that the Secretary of State will lay before the House next week an order specifying the organisations that will benefit from the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill by having their terrorist prisoners released early. It will be interesting to discover what she does—whether she specifies that the Provisional IRA will benefit from the provisions of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill in the aftermath of the murder of Andrew Kearney and the beating of Vincent McKenna.

That will be the first test of the commitment of the Government and the Secretary of State to hold those organisations—including the Provisional IRA—to the commitment to exclusively peaceful means. We shall see whether the Government have the courage to take those people on and hold them to account or whether, when it comes to the test, they will do what they have done in the past, and will no doubt do in future, and fudge the issue and walk away. The prisoners will be released, the murderers will walk on to the streets early, and representatives of Sinn Fein-IRA will hold ministerial office.

There are transitional arrangements in the agreement to cover the period between the establishment of the Assembly following the election on 25 June and the transfer of power from Parliament to the Assembly. The transitional arrangements include provisions for shadow Ministers. Paragraph 35 of the agreement refers to "those . . . serving as shadow Ministers".

Even before the provisions of the Bill can be implemented, representatives of Sinn Fein-IRA will be entitled to be appointed as shadow Ministers. So what will happen on the transfer of power? Schedule 14 states:

"Any nomination of a person to hold a Ministerial office made before the appointed day shall on and after that day have effect as if it had been made under section 15."

In other words, when representatives of Sinn Fein are appointed as shadow Ministers without any of the provisions of the Bill and the so-called safeguards in it coming into effect, they will automatically become fully appointed Ministers. So how can we prevent them from taking up office? How can we hold them to the commitment to exclusively peaceful means?

The only real provision is for a cross-community vote in the Assembly. The three options set out in the Bill to exclude people from office require the passing of a vote in the Assembly based on cross-community support. In effect, that gives a veto to one political party in Northern Ireland—the SDLP. Will the SDLP ever vote to remove Sinn Fein-IRA from office? That question was posed to the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady), but he has not yet answered it. It was also posed to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) and he has not yet answered it.

What are the circumstances in which the SDLP will vote in the Assembly to have Sinn Fein-IRA removed from office? I do not believe that it is in the interests of Northern Ireland or in the interests of the agreement—even though I opposed it—and the workability of the institutions established by it to leave one political party to decide whether Ministers who are linked to an organisation that is engaged in violence should continue to hold office. If that continues to be the only effective mechanism whereby those people can be excluded from office, I do not believe that the agreement or the institutions created under it will work effectively or properly.

Mr. John D. Taylor: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that there is a precedent in the attitude of the SDLP at the talks at Dublin castle? He will remember that we went there for a week, but the talks never took place because the IRA had committed an offence just the day before. The question arose whether Sinn Fein representatives should be expelled from the talks, and the SDLP was against their expulsion.

Mr. Donaldson: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for his intervention. He is absolutely right. On the one occasion when the SDLP was put to the test on the exclusion of Sinn Fein from the talks, on the basis that the IRA had breached the Mitchell principles, it opposed the expulsion of Sinn Fein.

Rev. Ian Paisley: Will the hon. Gentleman inform the Committee what was the punishment for the deaths of two Roman Catholics? Two of its own co-religionists were murdered and it was proved that they were IRA killings. What punishment did Sinn Fein receive?

Mr. Donaldson: I can answer that. The punishment was two weeks' expulsion from the talks process. It was one week for one murder. That was the penalty, and it was opposed by the SDLP. What confidence can I or the people of Northern Ireland have in the mechanisms in the Bill that provide that people who breach the commitment to peaceful means will be removed from office? I am afraid that I have no confidence in those mechanisms.

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. Paul Murphy): We have had an extremely important debate—possibly one of the most important debates during our consideration of the Bill in Committee. It partly, but not completely, mirrors the debate on the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill. The circumstances are different and we are considering a different law, but some of the points that were made in respect of that Bill were made in respect of this one, too.

I fully acknowledge the importance and seriousness of the issues that reflect real concerns not just of right hon. and hon. Members, but of very large numbers of people who live and work in Northern Ireland.

I also understand the point made by the right hon. Member for Bracknell (Mr. MacKay). I know that he is fully committed to the agreement and its success. I am grateful to him for his kind words. I do not know whether he knows everything that I know, but I admire the fact that he spoke in the spirit of the agreement that he and I support.

I accept that those who did not support the agreement spoke with complete sincerity on the basis that we need to address the issue. We have partly done so in this debate. I hope to answer a number of points that have been raised, and to make some points of my own.

The debate is set against a backcloth of appalling violence and civil unrest in the past three weeks in Northern Ireland. There has been violent disorder, disgraceful attacks on the forces of law and order, and the deaths of three young boys. Many right hon. and hon. Members have referred to the dreadful beating of Mr. McKenna and the murder of Mr. Kearney. Of course, the Government join all right hon. and hon. Members in utterly condemning such murders and so-called punishment beatings which, as a number of hon. Members have said, have no place in a civilised society. A vigorous police investigation into Mr. Kearney's death is under way. The RUC is pursuing the possibility that the murder was carried out by the Provisional IRA. We await the outcome of those investigations.

It is important to consider the issues in the context not just of what has happened in the past three or four weeks, but of what has happened since the referendum. The issues were rightly raised during the referendum campaign. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister sought to respond to those concerns carefully, responsibly and within the terms of the agreement. He clarified them in his speech at Balmoral on 14 May. Clause 23 reflects what the parties negotiated in the agreement and what the Prime Minister promised during the referendum campaign.

The details of the clause are important, but we must not lose sight of the fundamental principles underlying the agreement. The first is set out in paragraph 25 of strand 1, which says:

"Those who hold office should use only democratic, non-violent means and those who do not should be excluded or removed from office".

As my right hon. Friend said in his Balmoral speech:

"Those who have used the twin tactics of the ballot box and the gun must make a clear choice. There can be no fudge between democracy and terror."

Rev. Ian Paisley: Is the Minister saying that what the Prime Minister said was not outside the terms of the agreement?

Mr. Murphy: The Prime Minister clarified the agreement during the referendum campaign. He made it clear what he, as the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, believed to be the case on the agreement. Taking all the responsibilities of his office, he assured people of the issues to which I have referred.

The second fundamental principle of the agreement is that the new institutions of government in Northern Ireland are open to all those who share a common commitment to democratic and exclusively peaceful means. As the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) said when he addressed the first meeting of the new Assembly:

"We are not saying, and we have never said, that the fact that someone has a certain past means that he cannot have a future. We have always acknowledged that it is possible for people to change."

The third fundamental principle is that the agreement stands or falls as a package. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said at Balmoral:

"The agreement is what has to be implemented in all its parts."

There can be no cherry-picking. The agreement was negotiated by the parties and was approved overwhelmingly by the people of Northern Ireland. Our task is to implement it fairly and fully.

That means that we must work to implement all the elements of the agreement—those that benefit us and those that are uncomfortable for us. We have listened carefully to the arguments, but we cannot accept proposals that call those fundamental principles into question.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is clearly the responsibility of Members of Parliament to stand by the side of the victims—those who are still being intimidated and beaten up, and those who have been killed. The actions of paramilitaries are directed at generating publicity and public reaction—local or national. Our job is to try to ensure that the publicity and the public reaction work against them. Will the Minister make it clear how we can turn the temperature up so that those who might exclude themselves by association with continuing violence will say so openly, or stop the violence so that there are no more victims?

Mr. Murphy: That is achievable in the context of the clause. Our overriding task is to give effect to the agreement. Paragraph 25 says:

"An individual may be removed from office following a decision of the Assembly taken on a cross-community basis, if (s)he loses the confidence of the Assembly, voting on a cross-community basis, for failure to meet his or her responsibilities, including, inter alia, those set out in the Pledge of Office. Those who hold office should use only democratic, non-violent means and those who do not should be excluded or removed from office under these provisions."

That paragraph makes some fundamental points: any decision on exclusion from ministerial office is for the Assembly; such a decision must be taken on the basis of cross-community voting; the relevant grounds are any failure to meet the Minister's responsibilities; and, in particular, those grounds include any breach of the commitment in the pledge of office required of all Ministers, to

"non-violence and exclusively peaceful and democratic means".

The clause reflects each of those elements. It is right that the grounds for exclusion emphasised in subsections (1) and (2) reflect the agreement's emphasis on the use of only democratic, non-violent means and embrace other breaches of the pledge of office.

6.45 pm

I understand the thinking behind the amendments, but I cannot accept them, because they would replace or add to the grounds for exclusion set out in subsections (1) and (2), which closely reflect the terms of paragraph 25 of strand 1 of the agreement and the accompanying pledge of office, with other tests and criteria, however well meant or sensible. To do so, would be to move away from the specific terms of paragraph 25 of strand 1. I am confident that the wide grounds available under the clause fully meet the requirement of the agreement that those who do not use only democratic and non-violent means should be excluded from office.

I cannot accept the amendments tabled by the Democratic Unionist party, because they would remove the requirement for cross-community support, which is a key element of the agreement, repeated twice in paragraph 25.

We have set out to give effect to the promise of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his Balmoral speech to give legislative expression directly and plainly to the factors that he set out. The Prime Minister's starting point was:

"The Agreement is what has to be implemented in all its parts."

That is also the starting point of the clause. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said:

"In clarifying whether the terms and spirit of the agreement are being met and whether violence has genuinely been given up for good, there are a range of factors to take into account".

The four factors that he set out are in the Bill. He said:

"Those factors provide evidence upon which to base an overall judgment—a judgment which will necessarily become more rigorous over time."

Subsections (6) and (7) provide for the Secretary of State to reach such an overall judgment, taking into account the four factors that the Prime Minister set out. The Secretary of State can then communicate her opinion to the Assembly and require it to consider whether to exclude someone from ministerial office. However, the final decision is for the Assembly. That is vital to the agreement.

Mr. William Thompson (West Tyrone): Is it not a waste of time for us to be here considering the Bill in Committee if everything must be exactly as set out in the agreement? Does that not show that this Parliament, which is supposed to be sovereign, has to give way to an agreement? If this is a sovereign Parliament, we have the right to put forward amendments, which the Minister should consider on their merits, rather than being stuck with an agreement that appears to be set in stone, like the laws of the Medes and the Persians.

Mr. Murphy: I do not know too much about Medes and Persians. The people of Northern Ireland were clear about what they wanted. They voted for the agreement by a large majority in the referendum. The fact that we have spent the past three hours debating just one clause of an 82-clause Bill shows that our time has not been wasted and that the House of Commons is an important place for such discussions. Indeed, in the next 15 or 20 minutes, we shall doubtless be voting on whether we should accept the clause.

It is no surprise to be faced with amendments very similar to those tabled to the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill. They fall broadly into two groups. Some propose new factors, and some seek to turn the factors from ones leading to an overall judgment to ones leading to four separate tests or hurdles. Some try to do both. Of course, we listened during proceedings on the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Bill. As the Committee will know, the factors were changed and improved as a result of those debates. In particular, factor (d) was expanded, at the urging of the right hon. Member for Upper Bann, to make it clear that there must be full co-operation in implementing the decommissioning section of the Belfast agreement. I cannot accept amendments that would add to the factors set out by the Prime Minister. Nor can I accept those that turn the factors into separate tests. As the Prime Minister said:

"We are not setting new preconditions or barriers."

Of course gaps must be filled. In answer to the hon. Member for West Tyrone (Mr. Thompson), another reason why the House of Commons must debate such matters is precisely that there are gaps to fill. In places where the agreement is silent, we, as a House of Commons, must legislate. We have in all events to follow the spirit of the agreement. The agreement is silent on the length of any period of exclusion, for instance, so we have inserted a 12-month period of exclusion. Additionally, there is provision in the Bill to exclude parties. There could also be breaches that give grounds for exclusion that are not personal, but have to do with party policy or the position of the party as a whole. In such cases, it would be nonsense to exclude one Minister, only to see him or her replaced by another from the same party who, for exactly the same reason, would be in breach of his or her responsibilities.

I have received representations from hon. Members, particularly those representing Northern Ireland, regarding the phrase "for any other reason". Indeed it must be rethought. We shall be consulting parties during the next month or two before the Bill goes to the other place to see whether we can make an acceptable change to that part of the clause. A number of the concerns expressed come down to this: the provisions in the clause sound fine in theory, but will not be used in practice; they will prove ineffective. If so, the Prime Minister has made it clear that we shall support changes to make the provisions effective.

I assure the Committee that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take her responsibilities extremely seriously. Where she considers that a genuine issue arises on whether a party or an individual has breached the fundamental commitment to exclusively peaceful and democratic means, she will act to ensure that the Assembly considers the issue. She will, of course, closely consult security advisers, particularly the Chief Constable. She will particularly take into account not only the activities of an individual or a party, but those of any paramilitary organisation to which an individual or party is clearly and inextricably linked in a relationship of support.

The hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Donaldson) referred to cases that have arisen in recent weeks. If it is found that the murder of Mr. Kearney may have been carried out by members of the Provisional IRA, the Secretary of State must take that factor into account during her deliberations. All such matters can be taken into account only by her, because she receives the proper advice from the Chief Constable, the security forces and others.

Then—this is the essence—the matter will be relayed to the Assembly, which can discuss it if one of three triggers is used. The First Minister and the Deputy First Minister can initiate a debate; the Assembly, with its 30 Members, can ask for and initiate a debate; or the Assembly can be obliged to debate a matter if my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State so writes to it as a result of the four factors to which I have referred. Those factors are to be taken in the round by the Secretary of State as an indicator of whether there is a genuine commitment to non-violence and to democracy.

Ultimately, it is and must be the Assembly which has control over such matters. I am responsible to the House of Commons as a Minister; an Assembly Minister is responsible to the Assembly. That is a very important concept, which the Assembly must take into account.

I simply repeat that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has indicated—my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has, too—that, in the event of this not working properly, we shall have to look at it again, when that time comes. Of course, I hope that that time will never come. I also hope that the right hon. Member for Bracknell will feel inclined to withdraw his amendment.

Rev. Ian Paisley: The Minister has said that he is answerable to this House and, therefore, for its decisions. What would he say if a majority of Tories, rather than a majority of his own party, was required to keep him in office?

Mr. Murphy: I should be a very lucky man.

Mr. MacKay: On behalf of the Opposition, I cannot guarantee that we would keep the Minister in office, much as we admire him.

I have listened carefully to the Minister's very reasonable response, but I regret to say that I am still convinced that we would be right to press our amendment to the vote. The Prime Minister clarified the agreement on the Floor of the House on 6 May and subsequently in his Balmoral speech. Our amendments are within the scope of the agreement. They would strengthen the working of the Assembly. Given a background of violence, punishment beatings and—so far—no co-operation with the decommissioning commission, it is in the interests of the House and of the Assembly that the amendments are agreed.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

Question agreed to.

Clause 23 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 14

FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Mr. Peter Robinson: I beg to move amendment No. 71, in page 7, leave out lines 13 and 14.

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 72, in page 7, line 15, leave out 'Two candidates standing jointly', and insert 'Candidates'.

No. 73, in page 7, leave out lines 26 to 28.

No. 99, in page 7, line 27, leave out from 'otherwise' to end of line 28 and insert

'the Secretary of State may by Order permit the other to continue in office for not more than seven days.'.

No. 141, in page 7, line 27, leave out from 'shall' to end of line 28 and insert

'hold office as a caretaker for up to three months pending the election of a First Minister and Deputy First Minister'.

No. 74, in page 7, leave out lines 29 and 30 and insert—

'(7) Where the office of either the First Minister or the deputy First Minister is vacant, an election shall be held under this section to fill the vacancy.'.

No. 142, in page 7, line 29, after 'Where', insert 'either'.

No. 143, in page 7, line 30, leave out 'to fill the vacancies'.

Mr. Robinson: The amendments are probing, as the Minister will recognise. It is remarkable that the principal position in the Assembly Executive will be held jointly. Will the Minister say whether there are any circumstances in which the First Minister can act independently of the Deputy First Minister? I see none.

Paragraph 9 of schedule 12 states:

"A reference to—

(a) the Prime Minister of Northern Ireland; or

(b) the chief executive member, shall be construed as a reference to the First Minister and deputy First Minister acting jointly."

There was a Prime Minister in the old Parliament in Northern Ireland and a Chief Executive under the power-sharing arrangement. Under the Bill, however, two people must at all times act jointly, but what will happen when it is physically impossible for them to do so?

It seems as though the First Minister and his deputy are joined at the hip; I doubt whether they can even go to the water closet without each other. The system seems most unworkable. Is the Minister prepared to add provisions to the Bill to allow the First Minister some independence, so that, at some stage, he can be his own man rather than the prisoner of his deputy?

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): I draw the attention of the Committee to amendment No. 99, which I tabled because I believed that the Bill contained a flaw: it does not provide for what would happen if—I hasten to add that I do not want this to happen—either the First Minister or the Deputy First Minister died in office. There is a problem about what would happen in what I call the interregnum between the expiry of the First Minister or the Deputy First Minister and the election of a successor. The Bill requires the Assembly to provide for the election of a replacement under its Standing Orders.

If either the First Minister or Deputy First Minister dies, the other one no longer holds office and, I believe, the Ministry will fall or be in paralysis. Clause 18 states:

"The executive power in Northern Ireland shall continue to be vested in Her Majesty . . . As respects transferred matters, the prerogative and other executive functions of Her Majesty shall be exercisable on Her Majesty's behalf by the First Minister and the deputy First Minister acting jointly."

I invite the Committee to consider that, if there is no First Minister or Deputy First Minister, power cannot be conveyed to subordinate Ministers, who, under clause 18(3), derive their functions from the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister acting jointly.

We must be sensible and provide for what would happen if the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) or their successors were suddenly to lose office—most likely by dying, although I hope that that does not happen. Northern Ireland needs a continuing Government; I do not have to remind the Committee that a lapse of Executive authority even for a few hours could be catastrophic. If either of the offices was vacant, it would clearly take some days for the vacancy to be filled under the Standing Orders of the Assembly.

Amendment No. 99 would allow the First Minister or the Deputy First Minister to continue in office for seven days—that would allow the Ministry to continue. I shall be interested to hear whether my hon. Friend the Minister believes that my contention is legally flawed. I do not think it is; I think that the flaw in the Bill is the problem.

If my suggestion of extending the power of the surviving office holder by seven days does not commend itself to the Minister, I hope that an amendment will be tabled in another place to provide for a list of automatic succession so that, if a vacancy occurs, a named or designated postholder in the Ulster Unionist party or the SDLP would click in for long enough to allow the parties to regularise the appointment.

I do not want to labour the point, although the matter does need to be resolved in Committee. The Minister may say—as was said to me sotto voce a couple of nights ago—that the matter is provided for in the Assembly Standing Orders. With respect, I do not believe that it can be—no matter how those Standing Orders are drawn up, a vacancy cannot be filled instantly. The vacancy may occur while one of the office holders is on holiday in another part of the world. Nevertheless, at that moment, the other Minister falls and, I believe, the whole Ministry will fall or be paralysed, as its powers derive from the First Minister and Deputy First Minister.

I hope that my amendment commends itself to the Minister. If not, I would like an undertaking that this void or flaw in the drafting of the Bill will be remedied in another place.

Mr. Trimble: The hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) makes a good point. It is, as he says, very much a Committee point, and there is a certain sense of relief at getting down to some real Committee points in this Committee. It is a pity that we have the ghastly programme which does not give us time to look at all the Committee points in the Bill. However, the hon. Gentleman is absolutely right in his contention.

The way in which the exercise of Executive functions is provided for in the Bill is a mess. All I can say in defence of the draftsmen is that the hon. Member for Thurrock should have seen the earlier draft—it was a worse mess. I do not know how many more drafts there will be, or how long it will be before we get something that is workable. However, what we have at the moment has clearly not been thought through, and some provision has to be made.

I am not sure that the absence of a Government is truly catastrophic. There is a lot to be said, in certain circumstances, for minimal government. There is a tendency for those in government to think that they should always be doing things.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): Like giving themselves decent holidays.

Mr. Trimble: I am certainly thinking of the holidays which I hope to have within the next few days, and which I hope will be decent.

The seven-day continuation contained in the amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Thurrock is inappropriate. If either the First Minister or Deputy First Minister resigns, we have a crisis. There might be a different situation if either stepped in front of the proverbial bus. Some of the police officers on duty here have reproved me for jumping off buses before they stop, but that is by the way. If there is a resignation, we will have a crisis. It is optimistic to assume that that crisis will be resolved that quickly.

That is why our amendment contains the provision for the survivor, if I can use that term, to continue on a caretaker basis for a period. Using the term "caretaker" in the Bill may be inappropriate, and the draftsman may wish to reflect on that. The amendment suggests a period of three months, but that is just picking a term. That matches with the provisions in amendments that we have tabled which we shall debate later.

If there is a resignation—and therefore a crisis within the Administration which may or may not be resolvable—we could have a deadlock. Something will have to be done to resolve the deadlock, and the obvious thing is to provide for an election. However, we are dealing with a body with a fixed term. While there might be circumstances which might precipitate an election—or in which an election becomes inevitable—it should not be an easy option.

If it is an easy option, that undermines the concept of a fixed-term Assembly, and it becomes an Assembly with a maximum term of four years which can be terminated earlier than that. We need a period so that people are under some pressure to try to find a way of resolving the crisis. Amendments Nos. 141, 142 and 143 deal with that situation, but there is a need to provide for a vacancy and for Executive functions to be discharged on a better basis.

I have said to the Minister that the best way to do that is to follow what is done in the Government of Wales Bill, where Executive functions are vested in the Assembly as a whole. We then provide for those functions to be exercised in accordance with standing orders in the Assembly as a whole to reflect the fact that we will not have in the Northern Ireland Assembly a Cabinet or Executive bound by collective responsibility.

We are not analogous to Scotland. We will have a looser form of Administration and vesting the matter in the Assembly, subject to it being exercised in accordance with standing orders, preserves the safeguard for minorities which exists with the need for standing orders to be approved on a cross-community vote. We will deal with the problem flexibly, but we must still take account of the need to protect minorities.

The hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) made some points in a characteristic fashion, and he had a substantial point. Repeatedly in the Bill, functions are conferred on the First Minister and Deputy First Minister jointly. As has been made clear, the Bill's purpose is to carry into effect the agreement, and it is important that we stick to the agreement. I defy anyone to find in the agreement any significant functions that are to be exercised in the way envisaged in the Bill. A couple of minor functions are to be exercised jointly by the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister, but general governmental functions are not.

The hon. Member for Belfast, East made a useful point, but he chose the wrong clause on which to make it. The election of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister is the clearest point in the agreement. The agreement says that that is to be done jointly. It is consistent with that principle that the death or resignation of one should call into question the position of the other. We then have to look at the practicalities of providing for the continuation of the Administration and for re-election. However, the basic principle—that, as the First Minister and Deputy First Minister have been elected jointly, the survivor cannot continue indefinitely if there is a death or resignation—is clearly right. That it is clear in the agreement.

I believe that my amendments deal with the practicalities better than the amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Thurrock. However, the Minister may have a better way, and we wait to hear what he has to say. The practicalities have to be dealt with, but the general point raised by the hon. Member for Belfast, East must be addressed. As I said on Monday, it seems to me that, every time the draftsman encountered a difficulty, he decided to dump it on us. That is not appropriate. I would prefer to dump it on the Assembly as a whole.

Dr. Godman: I was struck by what the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) said about the two roles seeming to be "joined at the hip", and I listened carefully to the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), who referred to the First Minister in the Welsh Assembly.

I would like to ask Ministers a question. Paragraph 18 of strand 1 of the agreement says:

"The duties of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister will include, inter alia, dealing with and co-ordinating the work of the Executive Committee and the response of the Northern Ireland administration to external relationships."

The term "inter alia" can be used liberally.

Let us put away such terrible things as people falling under buses. What happens if the First Minister is absent from Northern Ireland? Can I assume that the Deputy First Minister takes on the role in his absence? If any emergency arises, would he have the right to deal with everyday matters and any critical matters that might arise?

The right hon. Member for Upper Bann mentioned the Welsh Assembly, but I wish to refer to the Scottish Parliament. Clauses 42 to 44 of the Scotland Bill provide for the appointment and term of office of the First Minister and the Ministers, and that is entirely different from what is proposed here.

The right hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Belfast, East have raised critical questions, as has my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay). Can I assume that a deputy would deputise and take on the role of First Minister in his colleague's absence? It might be worth looking at the appropriate clauses in the Government of Wales Bill and clauses 42 to 44 of the Scotland Bill, which may provide the means by which those questions can be answered sensibly and democratically.

Mr. Öpik: First, I must echo the practical concerns about what would happen should one of the positions become vacant. The Northern Ireland Assembly is not comparable with the Welsh Assembly, and the difficulties are not the same. In the former, indivisibility is there for a purpose, and a sensible purpose at that. As the agreement is absolutely clear, we do not need to debate that matter. As the right hon. Member for Upper Bann elucidated, we are discussing a practical question and, far from decoupling the two positions, we want to maintain some continuity should one or other of the individuals disappear from the role.

7.30 pm

Can the Minister give us some assurance that continuity in the event of a vacancy will be considered during the summer, perhaps as a drafting amendment? One thing is sure: if a crisis leads to the resignation of the First Minister or Deputy First Minister for whatever reason, that crisis would be exacerbated if both roles became vacant at once. The intent of the amendments tabled by the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) and the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) is to prevent a crisis from deepening because of poor planning for the continuity of the two roles.

Mr. Robert McCartney: I shall be brief. Much of the difficulty arises because of the looseness of the terminology. To describe as First Minister and Deputy First Minister the roles designated to the two Executive officers is a misnomer. Clearly, the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) is in no sense the deputy of the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble). They are joint consuls, as in imperial Rome, each with the power to stop the other.

Mr. Trimble: Like Rome perhaps, but not imperial Rome.

Mr. McCartney: We will leave Caligula and Nero out of it for the moment and concentrate on the consuls rather than the emperor.

Mr. McNamara: And the hon. Gentleman is one of the vestal virgins.

Mr. McCartney: I do not think so. As the father of four children, even in a male sense I do not think that there is any justification for that remark.

The concept of a deputy is that, if the principal is, for any reason, unable to discharge his functions, the deputy will assume the executive role of the principal. In the Assembly, the deputy would immediately have to leave office should anything happen to his principal, and vice versa.

The terminology is indicative of the louche way in which the Bill has been drafted. It is meant to feed the Unionist electoral majority with the idea that, the leader of the largest party is in some way a First Minister and the leader of the nationalist Social Democratic and Labour party—the second largest party—is in some way a deputy. That is the image that the language is intended to project, which is completely out of kilter with the essence of the provisions.

We talk about introducing democracy, but there is no democracy as it is popularly understood in the arrangement. Such is the distrust, or mistrust, that, if one of the joint consuls is incommoded in any way—whether by falling under a bus, or becoming of unsound mind, memory or understanding—the whole thing is scuppered. It is unreal nonsense.

Mr. Trimble: I hope that what I am about to say is accurate and I am sure that I will be corrected if it is not, but I think that the hon. Gentleman will be relieved to know that there is no provision to remove either Minister on the basis of his being of unsound mind.

Mr. McCartney: I am prepared to accept the right hon. Gentleman's assurances, but the test may ultimately become objective rather than a subjective demonstration of any weakness of the mind.

The issue is that the language used in the Bill in no way reflects the reality of the situation. Some people would say that it is another manifestation of the Government's obsession with making form much more important than substance.

Mr. Paul Murphy: This has been an interesting debate and I shall deal with one of the least contentious points first. Hon. Members referred to the prerogative powers mentioned in clause 18, which are a tiny proportion of all the powers. Ministers will continue in office with full powers. In that case, prerogative powers merely encompass public holidays and a few other specialist powers.

Mr. Mackinlay: I hesitate to intervene, but although I think that I understand what prerogative powers are, clause 18(2) also mentions and it would seem that everything and anything that a Minister in the Northern Ireland Assembly does is derived from that subsection. With the greatest respect, I hope that the Government will reflect on that.

I apologise to my hon. Friend the Minister if I am wrong, but it seems to me that, if both the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister posts are vacant, Ministers will be denied the capacity to exercise their statutory functions, and there would be paralysis in the Administration. They might say, "That's only convention. We can skip over that." However, any actions that they took, or that were taken on their behalf, in the interregnum would then be subject to the vulnerability of challenge in the courts.

Mr. Murphy: The vast majority of Ministers' powers derive from statute and not from clause 18. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will deal with the later clauses and may be able to elaborate on that. The points about vacancies are important, and I will deal with them in a moment.

On the more general aspects of the First and Deputy First Ministers, I must admit that it is not the most elegant of language, but that is what was decided in the talks and in the agreement and that is what people voted for. As for the concept of having a First Minister and a Deputy First Minister, to reflect the top parties' electoral mandate and success in the Assembly elections—effectively, the largest nationalist and the largest Unionist party as reflected in membership of the Assembly—that effectively means that co-operation and consensus between the two traditions in Northern Ireland are reflected in those offices. That was one of the great attractions of the whole agreement. Of course there were contentious issues, but I think that hon. Members who were involved in the referendum campaign will agree that that issue did not exercise people or cause controversy, because it is a good idea in itself.

Of course, the arrangement is nothing like a joint presidency. I know the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister well, and I do not have the slightest doubt that they will exercise their independence in many circumstances, but the idea of having those two Ministers was in the agreement, and I believe was supported by those who voted in the referendum.

Mr. Robert McCartney: The Minister has made constant reference to what people agreed to in the referendum, but he knows well that the focus groups ordered by his Department produced some important information about the number of people who had read the agreement, the number who had read it completely and the number who had only skimmed through it. To suggest that every word of it was endorsed in the referendum is a flight from reality.

Mr. Murphy: The hon. and learned Gentleman would not disagree that, when people elected him to represent North Down in the House of Commons, they did not read his manifesto carefully. When they voted for him, they voted for what was in that manifesto, just as the referendum was based on what was in the agreement. The Government cannot construct a Bill based on an agreement on the assumption that people did not read it.

The concept of having a First and a Deputy First Minister representing the two largest parties—effectively, the largest Unionist and the largest nationalist party—was an attractive concept that people liked, and it was written into both the agreement and the Bill.

Mr. Peter Robinson: It was neither in the agreement nor in the Bill. Anyone can be nominated. Candidates do not have to be from the largest party of either designated tradition. Two Unionists could be nominated.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, of course, but that was not the reality, and everyone knew that it would not be. The agreement is based on co-operation between both traditions, and if that had not been the case, the referendum majority would not have been as big as it was.

There are areas in which the First and Deputy First Ministers must act jointly, according to the agreement, but other areas are not so significant. When we have further consultations here and in another place, we will be able to examine those areas carefully.

Some valid points have been made about vacancies, by my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) and others. We need to have another look at that part of the clause, and in the summer I will consult the parties in both Northern Ireland and Westminster, with a view to adding some clarification in another place. I hope, as a consequence, that the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Peter Robinson: My purpose was to seek a list of those occasions when the First and Deputy First Ministers could act independently. I did not get one suggestion from the Minister as to any such occasion. I suppose that the only circumstance in which they could act independently would be if they were to take another ministerial post in the Executive, which of course they would be entitled to do. It is perfectly clear that the two of them must at all times act together. The amendment raised the issue and will let people see that we have, effectively, joint First Ministers in Northern Ireland, and that each is a prisoner of the other. On that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Clause 14 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule 5 agreed to.

Clause 15

NORTHERN IRELAND MINISTERS

7.45 pm

Mr. Trimble: I beg to move amendment No. 144, in page 7, line 41, leave out from first 'the' to end of line 42 and insert 'Assembly'.

The First Deputy Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 145, in page 8, leave out lines 1 to 3.

No. 178, in clause 16, page 9, line 13, leave out 'of the Assembly'.

No. 147, in clause 18, page 9, line 30, leave out from first 'the' to the end of line 34 and insert 'Assembly'.

No. 77, in clause 18, page 9, line 30, leave out

'and the deputy First Minister acting jointly'

and insert

'with the approval of the Assembly voting on a cross–community basis in accordance with section 4(5).'.

No. 78, in clause 18, page 9, line 32, leave out 'those Ministers so determine' and insert—

'the First Minister so determines, with the approval of the Assembly voting on a cross–community basis in accordance with section 4(5),'.

No. 149, in clause 22, page 10, line 38, after 'policy', insert

', the initiation of legislation, the approval of secondary legislation and such other matters as may be provided by Standing Orders'.

No. 184, in clause 40, page 21, line 24, leave out

'First Minister and Deputy First Minister acting jointly'

and insert

'Assembly'.

Mr. Trimble: The amendments give us the opportunity to continue the debate that was conducted under the previous group, as largely the same issues are involved.

The agreement contains some novel features, which are there to reflect the particular circumstances that exist in Northern Ireland. That is why we have the concept of both a First and a Deputy First Minister; there is symbolic importance in having two persons who are, by virtue of the arrangements in the agreement and in the Bill, closely related to each other.

There is no need for the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) to make such heavy weather of that. The same arrangements apply when coalitions exist: if there are two parties whose votes are necessary to provide an effective majority in an institution, the two party leaders are not necessarily in a very close relationship. In its essence, there is no great dissimilarity between such a situation and the situation provided for in the Bill.

My concern is that the Bill's draftsman has departed significantly from the agreement and given some precise functions to the First and Deputy First Ministers that are not given, or even hinted at, in the agreement. The agreement provides for them to be elected jointly, and that is clearly a joint function. It also provides that they are to preside over the meetings of the Executive Committee.

Paragraph 18 of strand 1 says:

"The duties of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister will include . . . dealing with and co-ordinating the work of the Executive Committee and the response of the Northern Ireland administration to external relationships."

Co-ordinating is a general function, rather than a precise executive function.

The only precise executive functions given in the agreement to the gentlemen in question is with regard to the civic forum in paragraph 34 and, under paragraph 2 of strand 2, with regard to making alternative arrangements for representation, although, by virtue of paragraphs 13 and 18, they have to co-ordinate general arrangements for representation with external institutions. Their role is symbolic and co-ordinating. I think that the draftsman has made a mistake in giving them so many precise executive functions.

The disadvantage is clearly shown by the matters covered in amendments Nos. 144 and 145, which deal with determining the number and functions of Northern Ireland Ministers. That point was covered in the Assembly's very first sitting, at the end of which it charged the First and Deputy First Ministers with a role: to consider the shape and structure of future administration and the arrangements to be made for both the British-Irish council and the north-south ministerial council. There are certain matters that have to be dealt with in accordance with the agreement.

Rev. Ian Paisley rose—

Mr. Robert McCartney rose—

Mr. Trimble: I shall choose the hon. and learned Member for North Down (Mr. McCartney).

Mr. McCartney: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman. As I understand it, he objects to the fact that certain functions have been given to him that were not spelled out in the agreement, but is not the real charge that the function that the Assembly gave the two Ministers was not the Assembly's choice but the result of a fixed agenda presented to it by the Secretary of State? The Assembly did not choose what to do: it was told what to do.

Mr. Trimble: The Assembly chose to do it when the Assembly passed the necessary resolution. The agenda was drawn up by the Secretary of State, but she did it after consultation.

Rev. Ian Paisley: With whom?

Mr. McCartney indicated dissent.

Mr. Trimble: I cannot say. The Secretary of State consulted me, and I am sure that she consulted other people. The agenda did not appear out of the blue, but that is a peripheral issue.

At the end of its first sitting, the Assembly passed a resolution charging the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister with making studies, considering matters including the shape of the future Northern Ireland Administration, the British-Irish council and the north-south ministerial council, and bringing proposals to the Assembly, as we hope to do in the autumn. The Assembly will be able to debate those proposals, to amend them or to tell us to go back and think again. It may decide to ask for someone else's proposals. The decision rests with the Assembly, and the First Minister and Deputy First Minister will merely offer proposals.

The practical reality underlying that is that the Assembly requires an effective majority if it is to function. As matters stand, and as we see them in the future, that majority will be provided by a form of coalition between the Social Democratic and Labour party and the Ulster Unionist party. If proposals to the Assembly are approved by the leadership of those two parties, it is likely that the Assembly will endorse them. The Assembly can also endorse proposals on a cross-community basis, as cross-community voting can be invoked in particular circumstances. The right way to proceed is to focus on the Assembly, and to create an effective majority in the Assembly, which will make us work closely together.

Clause 15 is the wrong way round. It says that the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister are to act together but without the Assembly to make a determination that the Assembly will have to approve. That puts the cart before the horse, suggesting that power rests essentially with the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister. Their decision may be vetoed by the Assembly, but decisions will not be taken properly. The same point arises in a different context in relation to amendment No. 147.

The right way to proceed is to give the power to make a determination to the Assembly, with its ability to take decisions on a cross-community basis when that is necessary. To give too many precise functions to the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister will tend to lead to a joint presidency, and that was not the intention of the agreement. We need the draftsman to rethink the clause to bring it closer to the agreement.

Dr. Godman: Clause 15 allows the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister jointly to determine the number of Ministers and their functions. Presumably, their determination will then be presented to the Assembly, which is a coherent and realistic approach. That is in effect Cabinet government, under a Prime Minister, and I expect the Scottish Parliament to work that way. The First Minister in Scotland may head a coalition Government, and he will have to negotiate who his Ministers are to be and what their functions will be before he presents his decision to the Scottish Parliament. Surely the same holds true for the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Trimble: There is a clear difference between arrangements for Northern Ireland and Scotland. The Scottish arrangements are based on normal British parliamentary practice, so Scotland can have normal Cabinet government. If no one wins an overall majority, there may have to be a coalition, but there will basically be a normal British parliamentary system. That is not the case in Northern Ireland. The d'Hondt formula and the principle of proportionality will mean that there will not be a Cabinet. There will be an Executive, but it will not operate as a Cabinet.

I thought that the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) was going to refer to the conflict between clauses 15 and 17. I have not tabled any amendments on that, not because I approve of it, but because my time is limited. Clause 15, even with my amendment, provides that the functions to be exercised by Ministers are to be determined by the First and Deputy First Ministers. That offers them the temptation to rig the d'Hondt formula's operation by moving functions between Departments so that all the politically sexy functions are in the Departments that they obtain. Perhaps they might even be tempted to manipulate the total number of Departments. Far be it from me to suggest that such ideas will be at the forefront of their minds, but they are exposed to that temptation.

That runs counter to clause 17, however, as it states:

"the Northern Ireland departments existing on the appointed day shall be the Northern Ireland departments for the purposes of this Act.

(2) Provision may be made by Act of the Assembly for establishing new Northern Ireland departments".

There is an existing power under subordinate legislation for the transfer of functions from one Department to another. That is not being abolished, and there is a consequent conflict between clauses 15 and the existing body of law.

My main point is that functions should be determined by the Assembly. I am not moving away from the concept of partnership arrangements in saying that it would be a mistake to give those functions to the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister.

I am puzzled about why amendment No. 149 is grouped with amendment No. 144, because it raises quite different issues. It deals with the functions of committees as provided for in clause 22. The draftsman has not taken account of all the functions given to committees in the agreement, which are listed in paragraph 9. The draftsman could reconsider the clause to bring it into conformity with the agreement.

8 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Tony Worthington): It is interesting to hear the views of the First Minister designate, the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), in respect of the exercise of these powers. He is right to say that the agreement, in the remarkable time in which it did what it did, could not possibly have solved all the problems that relate to any Bill.

What we have been trying to do is to interpret the spirit of the agreement. In respect of the setting up of the Departments, we referred the matter to the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister, which is in fact what the Assembly did. That seemed to us to be a sensible way of proceeding.

The right hon. Gentleman says that the Assembly should do it, but the Assembly cannot do it en masse; it would then have to refer the matter to someone or to some organisation to accomplish that end. That is what has occurred. We are quite willing to look again at the issue, but that seems to be the sensible way to deal with the bringing into existence of the Assembly, its Ministers and its Committees. However, we shall reconsider the matter and see whether there is an alternative way to proceed.

I should clarify a point raised several times during this debate and the previous one, which is the question of prerogative powers. I assure hon. Members that the prerogative powers referred to are extremely limited, covering matters such as the organisation of the civil service, public holidays, action in civil emergencies, the honours list and so on. They sound like an enormous matter, but the powers are in fact marginal to the affairs of the Assembly. The bulk of the power that people will have is statutory power, which will go with Ministers in the carrying out of their duties.

To clarify another point that has been raised, so that it does not dominate our discussions later, I should explain the reference to "other executive functions". Again, that sounds like a major part of the work of the Assembly and of Ministers. It refers to the powers that the Government or a Department can exercise in the same way as a normal citizen; the best example of that would be the power to make contracts. However, the great bulk of the Assembly's powers will be statutory.

With the assurance that we shall look again at how we go about the business of setting up the Committees and the functions of the Assembly, I ask the right hon. Member for Upper Bann to ask leave to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Trimble: I am glad to hear that the Minister will look again at the matter. I trust that, in doing so, he will consult me and others who are directly involved. I realise that the Bill had to be drafted very quickly and that that limited the opportunity for consultation beforehand, but, had we been given the opportunity, we should have been very happy to elucidate for the Minister the real meaning of the agreement. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. Peter Robinson: I beg to move amendment No. 163, in page 8, line 31, at end insert—

'(9A) If the number of seats in the Assembly which are held by members of one or more political party, reduce or increase, for any reason to such an extent that it alters the number of Ministerial offices entitled to be held by a party, then the procedure set out in subsections (4) to (9) shall be reapplied.'.

The First Deputy Chairman With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 164 in page 9, line 12, at end add—

'(16) In this section the number of seats in the Assembly which are held by the political party is determined by calculating the number of members designated as being in membership of that party when signing the Assembly register and a member of the Assembly may alter his party designation in the Assembly register.'.

Mr. Robinson: Again, the amendment is designed to give the Government an opportunity to clarify their thinking and the intention of the legislation in respect of possible changes in the numerical strength of political parties in the Assembly. Clearly, it can take only a few Members to require a change in the number of ministerial posts to which a political party is entitled. For example, a significant transformation could be achieved by a couple of extra DUP Members and the fall-off of a couple of SDLP Members—perhaps some SDLP Members will join the DUP.

Mr. McGrady: Me?

Mr. Robinson: Who knows? The invitation is there for the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady).

There is a clear possibility that a small shift in numbers would entitle a political party to an additional ministerial post, or require a political party to lose a ministerial post. The legislation, on the face of it, does not appear to deal with that eventuality. It is possible that the Minister will tell me that Standing Orders could deal with the issue, but I think that it is so important that it is necessary for it to be in the Bill, so that, expressly, if the number of seats in the Assembly held by a political party increased or decreased to the extent that it should cause a change in ministerial numbers, the formula outlined in the Bill in subsections (4) to (9) would be reapplied.

The second amendment, No. 164, deals with the determination of who is a member of a political party. Currently, that is self-evident: when Members went into the Assembly, they were asked to sign a register, one of the columns of which indicated the political party to which they belong. However, nowhere in the legislation does it say that that is the determining factor in deciding whether somebody is or is not a member of a political party; nor does the Bill say what happens if a person resigns from a political party. If a person resigns from a political party, does the party still hold to the number that it had when that person was elected as a member of that party? The Bill is silent on all those matters.

I have no doubt that, within four or five years, such problems will arise. It is proper that we face up to them now and amend the Bill to allow them to be dealt with in an efficient and effective manner.

Rev. Ian Paisley: I am sure that the Minister knows that, when we were registering, there was some controversy in respect of the Women's Coalition, whose members wanted to be one thing one day, something else the next day, and something else the day after that. There was a ruling against that by the pro tem Presiding Officer, the person appointed by the Secretary of State. They thought that they could be nationalists when they wanted to be nationalists to get the consensus vote; Unionists when they wanted to be Unionists to get the Unionist vote; and nothing when they wanted to be what they really were. That was what took place.

Mrs. Fyfe: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Rev. Ian Paisley: No. I am simply saying that that is what the members of the Women's Coalition told us they were during the talks. They said that they were nothing—not Unionist, not nationalist, just themselves. That is what they wanted to be sometimes, but when it suited their voting purposes, they wanted to be Unionists or nationalists. That was not permitted after the ruling from the chair, but what is going to happen in future when people want to change party?

What happens then, and when voting takes place? What happens if, as my hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) says, Members resign from one party and join another? It could change even the Executive if two Members who had resigned from one party joined another party that needed only two more Members to get a third or a fourth seat on the Executive. What would happen then? I think that the Minister needs to be clear when he replies, and to tell us his thinking on those issues. Will he deal with those matters in the Bill?

I am glad that the House is now learning that the Bill cannot be a replica of the agreement. We have heard Members argue strongly today that the Bill can include nothing except what is in the agreement, but the Minister admitted that it would have to contain points that were not in the agreement.

Mr. Worthington: The hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley) must not take my appearance at the Dispatch Box as evidence of a new reasonableness.

We ask hon. Members to resist the amendments but to acknowledge that there is an issue to be considered. It is important, as we work through the implications of the d'Hondt procedure, that we think of all possible consequences. In the case that has just been mentioned, it would be wrong to deny Members the opportunity to cross the Floor. In any democracy, there are circumstances in which people wish to reclassify themselves, and it would be wrong for us to state in legislation that a person who was elected with a particular designation had to keep it for ever. We therefore resist the thinking behind the amendment.

I pay tribute to the people who have drafted the Bill. What has happened over the past few months is simply remarkable. I think of my background as a Member of Parliament for a Scottish constituency and how we have been talking about devolution all my adult political life. Devolution will happen in Scotland—there will be an election next May and the Parliament will sit a year later. We seek, in this Bill, to set up an Assembly in Northern Ireland by early next year. What we are achieving is remarkable.

I return to d'Hondt and the difficulties that we shall have to tackle later in the proceedings on the Bill which are linked to the points made by the hon. Members for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) and for North Antrim. What should happen if parties are excluded from the Parliament? Should we then return to the d'Hondt principles? What will happen when parties amalgamate? Again, there may be a need for recalculations.

Dr. Godman: I can understand the object of the amendment, but surely, if the legislation to set up a finely balanced Assembly cannot comfortably accommodate people who wish to transfer from one party to another, an alternative democratic view is that such Members should have the honour to resign and cause a by-election.

Mr. McNamara: My point follows that of my hon. Friend, with whom I disagree. The nature of the elections, which are based on a proportional system for the constituencies, means that communities within constituencies are represented. Therefore, if Members cross the Floor or change their position, they deny that community element the representation that it had within the complicated community and constituency-based system. That brings us to the question whether there should be a by-election at all or whether a person should, in those circumstances, resign and be replaced by another party member. There is a world of difference between an Assembly elected for a fixed period and proportional representation, and what happens in this House, where Governments can change if a vote of confidence is lost. That will never happen under the present Administration, I am happy to say.

Mr. Worthington: In his elegant way, my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) has demonstrated the complexities that lie behind the amendment. Over the summer months, we need to work out the circumstances in which there would need to be a rerun of the d'Hondt principles. I am not committing myself to what those circumstances might be, but as we consider the Bill, it becomes clear that we need further to explore this matter. I ask the hon. Member for Belfast, East not to press his amendment, and I assure him that we recognise that the Bill needs further work in that respect.

8.15 pm

Mr. Robinson: I welcome the Minister's remarks. There was confusion in the debate between party affiliation and community designation. We are dealing with party affiliation in the formula for allocating ministerial posts. The hon. Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) referred to the possibility of a community being robbed of one of its Members if he or she were to cross the Floor. It is unlikely that a Member would cross from the nationalist community to the Unionist or vice versa in the middle of an Assembly term, but it is theoretically possible.

The difficulty in sustaining the hon. Gentleman's argument is that we were not required, or indeed entitled, to state our community designation at the time of the election. I argued that every person who stood should then state their community designation so that people knew what that would be when Members entered the Assembly and could vote accordingly.

Mr. McNamara: How Jesuitical the hon. Gentleman is regarding the Alliance party. A Member may not necessarily cross the Floor from nationalist to Unionist or vice versa. There is the question of the separate non-aligned groups—if I may use that United Nations term—some of whose Members might join other organisations.

Mr. Robinson: I take the hon. Gentleman's point, but under the Bill, a move does not have the same effect if Members remain within the same community designation. Most of the voting in the Assembly will be based on community designation, so if Members remain in the same community designation, it does not matter which group they sit with. The impact of changing from one political party to another principally has an effect on the number of ministerial posts that that party will have.

The position is not unlike that in this House. The hon. Member for Hull, North has colleagues who were elected as something other than Labour Members. It is not uncommon for Members of the House to change their affiliation without going to the electorate for a ballot.

Mr. McNamara: I take the hon. Gentleman's point about community designation, but there would be a problem if a Member moved from the Alliance party and declared himself nationalist or Unionist, depending on the particular brand of Unionism to which he became affiliated and how that affected the party balance under the d'Hondt system. The problem would still arise in that case.

Mr. Robinson: The hon. Gentleman would have a point if there was something to stop Members changing their community designation tomorrow if they so wished. As it is, they can go into the Assembly today and change their community designation. There is nothing to stop them.

It is entirely wrong that people can change their community designation overnight just for the sake of the voting impact that it may have in the Assembly. It makes a farce of the way in which the Assembly operates. However, until such time as community designation is tied down, the hon. Member for Hull, North does not really have a point, because the Alliance party members could change that anyway.

Mr. McNamara: We are not disagreeing.

Mr. Robinson: In that case, let us end the debate very quickly on that, by way of concord.

I am pleased that the Minister has undertaken to look at the matter again. In terms of the practical operation of the Assembly, it is essential that we look at it again. I shall examine the Government's response closely when we have it. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 15 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 16

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Peter Robinson: I beg to move amendment No. 76, in clause 16, page 9, line 16, leave out 'chairmen' and insert 'chairman and deputy chairman'.

The First Deputy Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 9, in clause 16, page 9, line 19, at end add—

'(4) Ministers of the Crown shall not serve on the Executive Committee'.

Mr. Robinson: I am slightly surprised that amendment No. 76 was chosen for debate, because it very much followed on from our earlier debate about the Siamese twins in the First Minister and Deputy First Minister. Strangely, instead of being Chairman and Deputy Chairman, they become joint Chairmen. I wonder why we have that change in terminology. Earlier the Government were trying to bluff people into believing that we had a First Minister and a deputy, but the reality seems to emerge when they are chairing meetings of the Executive Committee as joint Chairmen. Will the Minister help us to understand how two Chairmen will preside over a meeting? Surely, if they are First Minister and Deputy First Minister, they should be Chairman and Deputy Chairman.

Mr. Dominic Grieve (Beaconsfield): I should like to turn the Committee's attention to amendment No. 9, standing in the names of my right hon. and hon. Friends, which says that "Ministers of the Crown shall not serve on the Executive Committee".

The issue is something of a hardy perennial. It was under discussion in the House only yesterday, in the context of the Government of Wales Bill and the ambition, in that case, of the Secretary of State to fulfil, for a limited time, the roles of Minister of the Crown and Assembly First Secretary.

In the view of the Official Opposition, there is a clear constitutional issue, which applies as much to the position in Northern Ireland as it does to that in Wales and that in Scotland. The starting point is simple—the ministerial guidelines, of which the code for 1997 was published in July. The first guideline reads:

"Ministers must uphold the principle of collective responsibility."

To that is joined the second guideline:

"Ministers have a duty to Parliament to account and be held to account for the policies, decisions and actions of their departments and next step agencies."

Rev. Ian Paisley: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman has heard the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) say that the Executive Committee is not a Cabinet. Surely the hon. Gentleman is quoting guidelines for Cabinet responsibility—that Ministers must agree, and that they must move in unison. Surely that is a Cabinet structure.

Mr. Grieve: I am quoting from the rules relating to United Kingdom Ministers. As the hon. Gentleman says, there are also guidelines which are set out in the Bill, and in the Belfast agreement, relating to Ministers in the Northern Ireland Assembly. In particular, schedule 5 of the Bill provides that it is the duty of a Minister "to support, and act in accordance with, all decisions of the Executive Committee and Assembly".

Of course, in the Northern Ireland connection, the matter goes further, because in Committee today we have heard something about the curious relationship between the First Minister and his deputy. I do not use the word "curious" in a pejorative sense. I accept that we are putting in place a constitutional creation, but it imposes on the two people mutual responsibilities—and, indeed, loyalties—which are explicit, or at least implicit, in the context of the Bill.

The question arises—I accept that it is a hypothetical question at the moment—how could those two sets of guidelines, one for Northern Ireland and one for Ministers in the United Kingdom, be reconcilable with the possibility of a United Kingdom Minister holding a place on the Northern Ireland Executive, or vice versa? The view of the official Opposition is that the two are completely incompatible.

We could end up with extraordinary anomalies. How could a Minister observe collective responsibility to both bodies? We could also have the extraordinary situation of a Minister ending up supervising his own actions because, under clause 21(3)(a) of the Bill, it is possible for a Member of the Northern Ireland Executive Committee to act as the agent for a Minister of the Crown of the United Kingdom. We could therefore have the very bizarre situation of a Minister of the United Kingdom giving a delegated agency task to himself in another guise.

This may appear to be somewhat esoteric, but it is not. I shall explain to the Minister and the Committee why I do not believe that it is. There is already ample evidence that, where one has devolved administrative structures—let alone devolved structures relating to assemblies and government—conflicts can arise.

I have to tell the Minister that, only a very few years ago, I was sent up by a Government Department to a port on the north-east coast of England to pick up the debris of a prosecution that had been brought by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, England, against a Scottish trawlerman. In the course of the proceedings, it had become apparent that the directives under which he was acting, which had been placed upon him by the Scottish branch of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, differed markedly from those that were being operated in the port in Lincolnshire where he had landed his catch.

The result was a disaster for the Government Department that had brought the prosecution—perhaps rightly so, because it was castigated for the inconsistencies that existed. The fact remained that, because there was, at least, a doctrine of collective responsibility, the fall-out—to which I was not privy because I was there only in the role of advocate—could at least be contained within the Ministry, in the relations between the Scottish Minister, holding his collective responsibility and his responsibility to the House, and the English Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, with his responsibilities in relation to his own Department.

Even with the limited—but important—powers that will be devolved under the Bill, a fisherman coming out of Ardglass, fishing in the Irish sea and landing his catch at Fleetwood might easily encounter an identical problem if the rules were interpreted differently in Northern Ireland and in England. In those circumstances, it would be the clear duty of those holding Executive office in Northern Ireland and those who were Ministers of the Crown of the United Kingdom to resolve that difficulty; and its resolution, in terms of collective responsibility, is incompatible with one person operating in both bodies at once.

When the issue was discussed in the House of Lords, in the Welsh context, it was suggested that there was no reason why the Bill should not go ahead, because, if the Prime Minister wanted to appoint as a Minister of the Crown a person who happened to be a Member of the Welsh Assembly, he should not be fettered from doing so, and vice versa. However, it is an anomaly which creates its own problems from the moment that it comes into being. The Committee should—and I hope that the Minister will—have the courage to accept that, in this context, and especially in the Northern Ireland context in view of the unusual relationships that will exist within the structure of the Northern Ireland Assembly, that anomaly should be prevented from the outset.

Mr. Worthington: Amendment No. 76, which is in the name of the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley), follows a familiar theme of the Ulster Democratic Unionist party. Basically, we are simply following the agreement. Strand 1 of the agreement states:

"The Ministers will constitute an Executive Committee, which will be convened, and presided over, by the First Minister and Deputy First Minister."

We feel that this clause and the way in which it is drafted is consistent with the agreement's intentions. All we are doing is honouring the agreement. I do not want to go any further, because I would simply repeat what has been said many times tonight.

8.30 pm

Similarly, as the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) has recognised, this other issue is a hardy perennial that has come up over and again during the devolutionary year. I do not want to repeat points that were made in debates on the Scotland and Government of Wales Bills, but we take the same position on this as on those other Bills.

If the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) were to take up a ministerial post, we would not want to exclude him from the Executive Committee, but the argument of the hon. Member for Beaconsfield is even more exotic than anything else that has come out tonight. In fact, it is not a hardy perennial, but the most tropical and fragile of plants. We take the same position on this as on the devolutionary Bills on Scotland and Wales. We do not think that we should deal with what are fanciful situations that will not occur.

Northern Ireland Ministers must be Members of the Assembly. It is unlikely—I put it no more strongly—that Members of the Assembly will be Ministers of the Crown, but we do not feel that it is necessary to block that possibility.

Mr. Peter Robinson: I am at a loss to understand the reasoning of the Minister, who refers to paragraph 17 of the agreement to support his contention that there should be joint chairmen. Paragraph 17 says:

"The Ministers will constitute an Executive Committee, which will be convened, and presided over, by the First Minister and Deputy First Minister."

Clearly, it does not say that they should act jointly, act together or act at the one time. There is no reason to believe that they have to be either joint chairmen or that they have to act together at the same moment in chairing a meeting. The Minister is reading too much into the agreement. Nothing in the agreement is inconsistent with the amendment that has been tabled in my name.

I ask the Minister to look at the matter again. I think that he has gone beyond the agreement unnecessarily and I hope that he will report back at a later stage. In the meantime, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 16 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 17 to 19 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 20

INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Trimble: I beg to move amendment No. 148, in clause 20, page 10, leave out lines 12 to 15.

This is, I hope, quite a small point. The aim of the amendment is to elucidate the meaning and situations that the Government have in mind with regard to this clause.

The clause gives the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a power unilaterally to revoke legislation that is made by a Northern Ireland Department of the Northern Ireland Assembly. It gives that power to the Secretary of State in two situations. I find one acceptable—the one in which the legislative enactment in Northern Ireland contains a provision that is incompatible with the United Kingdom's international obligations.

However, I have difficulty in understanding the second provision. It gives the Secretary of State power to revoke legislation that is enacted by the Northern Ireland Assembly and that the Secretary of State considers on other legislation as it applies to excepted matters.

"would have an adverse effect"

I should like the Minister to explain precisely what is meant by "an adverse effect". In what circumstances is there likely to be a situation that would justify the Secretary of State, in a remarkable action, unilaterally revoking the legislation of another body? That should be done only where there is clearly good reason for so doing. I am concerned about the apparent breadth of that phrase "adverse effect".

Mr. Worthington: As the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) will know, we have three categories of legislation: excepted legislation, transferred legislation and referred legislation. In some circumstances, the Secretary of State may also give permission for the Assembly to legislate on areas that have been reserved. Again, we will have to look at this issue, but the thought here is that there may be circumstances in which legislation passed by the Assembly under its transferred powers has an impact on the Secretary of State's reserved powers or under the excepted powers.

Here is an example that has been given to me. The Assembly might introduce legislation on road transport, which might have an impact on the activities of the security forces. We are not talking here of conflict. We are talking just about the interface between different sorts of legislation and different sorts of powers.

This issue is still being visited under clause 54 of the Scotland Bill; it is clear that we need to be clearer about what is the relationship between different sorts of powers. I ask the right hon. Gentleman to withdraw his amendment, because we will need to revisit the issue at a later stage to clarify the relationships between those three sorts of powers, and to ensure that there is compatibility between those powers and clarity between the different Assemblies and Parliaments.

Mr. Trimble: I am glad that the Minister is thinking of looking again at the matter to achieve some clarity. That is precisely what I was seeking. I hope that we will have uniformity with the equivalent arrangements in Scotland, which, I regret to say, I have not had the opportunity to study, but I will endeavour to do so. On that basis, I am happy to withdraw the amendment, and I beg to ask leave to do so.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 20 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 21

AGENCY ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN UK AND NI DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Grieve: I beg to move amendment No. 13, in clause 21, page 10, line 31, at end add—

'(5) Arrangements under this section between the Government of the United Kingdom and a Northern Ireland department shall be known as concordats.

(6) The Government of the United Kingdom shall not enter into a concordat unless a draft of the concordat has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, each House of Parliament.

(7) Northern Ireland departments shall not enter into a concordat unless a draft of the concordat has been approved by the Assembly, by such procedure as standing orders may determine.'.

This is a probing amendment, but it seeks some answers to another hardy perennial topic that arose in relation to the devolution debates on Scotland and Wales. It is concerned with concordats. It is no criticism of the Government—I am trying to be fair—to say that, because of the way in which the Bill has been introduced, we have not had a White Paper in the accepted sense. Therefore, we have not had any detail about the arrangements that will be arrived at for dealing with devolved matters between the United Kingdom civil service and the Northern Ireland civil service.

In the two White Papers on Wales and Scotland, we were appraised of the existence of the delightful new concept called the concordat. The concordat is extremely nebulous, because it is not a legally binding agreement. It is usually signed by officials, and it deals with administrative co-operation and the exchange of information. Some concordats may not even be published if they touch on confidential matters which it is not thought to be in the public interest to disclose.

There is nothing in the Belfast agreement about concordats. Indeed, the agreement is, inevitably, short on the detail of how the devolved Assembly and the relationships in devolved Government will be made to work. Unfortunately, it is perhaps an inevitable feature of the discussion of this Bill—the Under-Secretary and the Minister of State have accepted this—that, because we have been so concerned with certain key issues relating to deeply held political convictions, we are in danger of not providing proper scrutiny of the detail on which, ultimately, the legislation is just as likely to trip up and founder as on the grand perspective.

I should like to ask the Under-Secretary what is being considered in clause 21 as it stands. I have the explanatory memorandum which deals with agency arrangements—I accept that agency arrangements and concordats may not be one and the same thing. Certainly, agency arrangements would seem to imply that there will be arrangements for the discharge of functions in Northern Ireland by the Northern Ireland civil service and Ministers on behalf of United Kingdom Ministers or the United Kingdom civil service.

If that is all there is on this topic in the Northern Ireland Bill, where are concordats to be raised and dealt with? I shall be surprised if the Under-Secretary, when replying to this amendment, says that there will not be concordats. It seems inherent in the way in which devolved government works that concordats there will be.

I have in front of me the document placed in the House on Thursday 26 February 1998 relating to the operation of concordats in Scotland—a similar document was placed in the Library in relation to Wales. Is it the Government's intention to do likewise in relation to concordats for Northern Ireland? If there are to be concordats, that raises an important issue that will need to be debated at some point during the passage of the Bill, because the principle of concordats raises enormously difficult problems about accountability.

There is a suspicion—the suspicion grew as I considered this matter during the passage of the Scotland Bill—that concordats were a mechanism for the exercise of control from the centre over the peripheral parts of the United Kingdom to which devolution was to be granted. The concordats were to be the facilitators for exchanges between civil services which might otherwise have divided loyalties as to who were their masters. It appeared to be a way of circumventing that which had no statutory basis whatsoever.

I am mindful that this is a probing amendment, and that the question of agency arrangements in clause 21 may not be the same as concordats. However, I hope that, during the debate, the Under-Secretary can at least enlighten us a little further on how the system will operate and what concordats will be brought into being to govern the relationship between the United Kingdom civil service and that part of it which will be operating solely on behalf of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

8.45 pm

Dr. Godman: I will be brief. I am pleased that the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) had the grace to say that this was a probing amendment. It seeks to give a legal basis to the term "concordat", which is a concept that the hon. Gentleman described as nebulous.

Of course, in all sorts of areas, arrangements will have to be made, not just between Belfast and London, but between Cardiff and London and Edinburgh and London, and, indeed, between all four locations. Fisheries are an example of an area where joint decisions have had to be made.

Mr. McNamara: I am sure that my hon. Friend would not want to underplay his case. With the Council of the Isles, we will have Guernsey, Jersey and the Isle of Man to consider.

Dr. Godman: I know my hon. Friend of old. He has a vice—that is what it is—of anticipating what I am about to say. I was about to come on to the Council of the Isles.

I believe, as does my honourable and equally old Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne), that the Council of the Isles may well have to examine the arrangements for what the hon. Member for Beaconsfield called concordats. My hon. Friends will not be surprised to hear me using the fisheries issue as an example. I promise not to dwell on that for long, but you will not allow me to anyway, Sir Alan.

The issue of agreements is extremely important. It may be that the agreements entered into by the various assemblies and parliaments may one day require legal underpinning, but not by the nebulous idea raised by the hon. Member for Beaconsfield.

Mr. Grieve rose—

Dr. Godman: If I may just continue.

Under the clause as it now stands, perhaps arrangements established between the United Kingdom and a Northern Ireland department as described in the clause will be examined at meetings of the Council of the Isles or at meetings of officials, as the hon. Member for Beaconsfield suggested en passant.

Mr. Grieve: The hon. Gentleman will be aware from his detailed participation in the Scotland Bill that this matter caused considerable concern. The Opposition took the view that, if there were to be concordats, they should be subject to affirmative resolution, or at least approval by the House and by the Scottish Parliament. We believed that to be necessary if they were to be the underpinning arrangements for administrative contact to smooth the wheels and machinery of the operations of state. That was in a Scottish context.

In the Northern Ireland context, we do not know whether there are to be any concordats, because no one has told us. However, I would be surprised if there were not to be concordats. If there are to be concordats, we would repeat our view that they should be subject to affirmative resolution by the Northern Ireland Assembly and this Parliament. That is how we approach the matter, because we are constitutionalists on this—

The Chairman of Ways and Means (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. We are in Committee, and that is a very long intervention.

Mr. Grieve: I leave it to the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) to reply.

Dr. Godman: Thank you for rescuing me, Sir Alan.

The very helpful notes on clauses points out that clause 21 provides for "agency arrangements to be between UK Ministers of the Crown and Government Departments, on the one hand, and Northern Ireland Ministers and Departments, on the other, so that either can discharge the functions of the other."

Such provision is precisely what we debated in our proceedings on the Scotland Bill—which the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Grieve) participated in and attended assiduously.

There will have to be agency arrangements between Departments in Belfast and those in London. However, the matter is more complicated than that, as some arrangements will include also the Cardiff Assembly and the Scottish Parliament. That is why I gave the example of fisheries. As we live in island communities, various arrangements may be required, and I should have thought that no self-respecting Member of this Parliament, the Welsh Assembly or the Scottish Parliament would allow arrangements to go unchecked.

Clearly, democratic checks and balances of the arrangements will be developed over the years, in Belfast, Cardiff and Scotland, and in this place. There is therefore no need for amendment No. 13. Fortunately, the hon. Member for Beaconsfield described it as a probing amendment.

Rev. Martin Smyth: Is it not true that, even in this place, we are concerned occasionally when Ministers inform us of an action after it is has been taken? Would it not be better if Ministers had the approval of the Assembly or of this place before taking some actions? We can do very little about something once it is done.

Dr. Godman: For many years, the hon. Gentleman and I sat almost side by side on the Opposition Benches, and suffered from the previous Government the type of conduct that he describes. I should hope that matters will be done much differently by the new Administration, although he may be a little more cynical about that than I am.

Clause 21 allows four types of arrangements, and the Assembly partner may be dominant in some of them. I should think that Scotland would have a bigger role to play than Northern Ireland, or—dare I say it—London, in arrangements on fisheries, for example.

As amendment No. 13 is a probing amendment, and as the concordat—as the hon. Member for Beaconsfield said in his graceful way—is a nebulous concept, we should stick with clause 21 as it is.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): It seems that clause 21 is really just repeating arrangements that existed between the old Stormont Parliament and United Kingdom Parliament on matters such as various national standards, social security, health and agriculture. The question is, how will the chain of command operate? Given that Parliament is supreme and retains its right to make laws, I begin to wonder what need there is for agency status.

Surely the United Kingdom civil service will still operate, at least to some extent, in Northern Ireland, and therefore will fall directly under the control of the responsible Minister in the national Parliament. Therefore, what will the relationship be between those civil servants and the Minister with responsibility for that particular element of Government service in Northern Ireland—or in Scotland or in Wales? To whom will those civil servants be responsible—to the immediately responsible Minister or to the United Kingdom Minister? If it is to the responsible Minister, will he be responsible to the United Kingdom Minister?

The arrangements will operate not only in one or two little corners but, presumably, in all social security matters and in many health matters, in health standards and in the training of medical staff. They will operate also in agriculture—at which point we run into the problem of United Kingdom agricultural policies that are, under the common agricultural policy, run in conjunction with European Community agricultural policies. If we are not clear about how the arrangements will operate in the months and years ahead, I think that we will get into an awful lot of very complicated difficulties. We will have to deal also with the whole matter of European money, which goes far beyond the CAP issues that I mentioned.

The Minister owes us a fairly full explanation of how the arrangements will operate. It is not good enough to say, "We're going to sort the matter out over the next few months." They have not only to sort the matter out now, but be able to tell us about it.

I am somewhat puzzled about the provision on the Post Office, which I thought was a national institution. I suppose that we will be able to continue using the Post Office for distribution of pensions and social security benefits. Perhaps that was the intention. However, if so, surely the Post Office in Northern Ireland would be acting as an agency of the United Kingdom Government, rather than as an agent of the Northern Ireland Administration?

Those are a few thoughts on the tip of a very large iceberg. The Committee and the people of Northern Ireland deserve a very full explanation of the matter.

Perhaps we do not really need such an agency system. Perhaps it would be far better if many of those matters were dealt with directly by this place.

Mr. Worthington: I have reached my advanced age without bothering with concordats, and I do not think that, because of this amendment, I should change my life style now. The Opposition are trying to complicate the relatively simple but—I agree with the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross)—important issue of relationships, which will have to be worked out, between this Parliament and the Assembly. In all fairness, I cannot give the hon. Gentleman all the answers now, but hope that I will be able to deal with the points that he raised.

There are relationships between the Northern Ireland Office, the Northern Ireland civil service and bodies in Great Britain. I can give some examples of how relationships will in future have to be worked out. The lottery, for example, will remain a United Kingdom function. However, some aspects of the lottery are currently dealt with by Northern Ireland institutions—so that, in sports and arts matters, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and the Sports Council for Northern Ireland administer the lottery on behalf of the United Kingdom lottery.

I see no reason to change that relationship. It seems perfectly sensible to maintain it, although there will have to be an agreement on that. Although the Northern Ireland Assembly will have responsibility for administering aspects of the lottery in relation to the Sports Council and the Arts Council in Northern Ireland, the responsibility for the administration of the lottery will remain with the UK Parliament.

Another example of an existing relationship that will have to be worked out involves the Child Support Agency. The CSA is run as part of the structure of the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland and deals with Northern Ireland cases, but it also administers cases for a large part of eastern England. We shall have to work out how that will be administered in future, but there would seem to be a need for an agency arrangement.

Mr. Grieve: Will the Minister assure the House that a paper similar to that produced for Scotland and Wales will be produced before the conclusion of consideration of the Bill?

9 pm

Mr. Worthington: I cannot give that assurance, because I am sure that dozens of papers have been produced for the Bills dealing with Scotland and Wales. The hon. Gentleman has to be much more specific. If he will write to me with details of his request, I shall deal with it.

Concordats may well be developed in future between the Northern Ireland Assembly and the UK Parliament, but they will not, as has been suggested, be a means of central control. A concordat involves concord or agreement between two equal parties which decide of their own free will to do something that benefits both of them.

There will be no problem about divided loyalties in the civil service. The devolved administration will be served very professionally by the Northern Ireland civil service. There may well be concordats but, as the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross) recognised, clause 21 re-enacts section 11 of the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973, under which a number of agency arrangements have been agreed.

The clause 21 arrangements do not affect the ultimate responsibility of the principal Department or Minister for the discharge of the functions in question, and so do not involve any fundamental transfer of those functions to an alternative responsibility. They work at an operational level, not at a policy level. With a concordat, we would be dealing with policy and the development of different policies. We are simply saying that it makes sense in this context to have an operational agreement between the Northern Ireland Assembly and the UK Parliament. That is the sensible way to carry on.

Mr. William Ross: If a Northern Ireland Department is simply administering a UK function, to whom are the civil servants who are doing the work responsible? Are they responsible to their own Minister and, through the chain of command, to the Minister in this House, or to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland? What is the chain of command and responsibility?

Mr. Worthington: I cannot answer hypothetical questions. The agreement would be different in each case. In each case, the chain of command and responsibility would need to be worked out between the Northern Ireland Assembly and the UK Parliament. When we ask a body that is part of the Northern Ireland Assembly to undertake what is essentially a UK responsibility, it seems sensible to promote good relationships between the two bodies. I therefore have to resist the move towards concordats, and I ask the hon. Member for Beaconsfield to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. William Ross rose—

The Chairman: Order. The Minister has sat down.

Mr. Grieve: I am grateful to the Minister for his comments, but it does not sound as if the matter has been considered as fully as it might have been. That might be a reflection of the way in which Northern Ireland has been governed over the years. It is a happy development that we are discussing a Bill that will bring about a great change in that respect. Will the Minister examine the issue carefully and, if necessary, discuss it with the Secretary of State for Scotland who has great knowledge of it?

Mr. William Ross: Before the hon. Gentleman sits down, perhaps he will inquire of the Minister whether the arrangements will be informal, or made by order so that the House has a chance to look at them?

Mr. Grieve: I can assure the hon. Gentleman that I will ask the Minister precisely that question.

Mr. Worthington: I am sorry that I did not spot earlier that the hon. Member for East Londonderry wanted to intervene. Obviously, when one is dealing with millions of pounds, as in each of those cases, formal administrative agreements would be drawn up. Clearly, it would not be on an informal basis.

Mr. Grieve: I am grateful for a little more clarity being cast. On the basis that, when I write to the Minister I shall have a more detailed reply, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 21 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 22

STATUTORY COMMITTEES

Mr. Malcolm Moss (North-East Cambridgeshire): I beg to move amendment No. 14, in page 11, line 2, at end insert

', except that the chairman shall not be a member of the same party as the Northern Ireland Minister being advised and assisted by the statutory committee.'.

The Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 152, in clause 22, page 11, leave out lines 17 to 20 and insert—

'(5) Standing Orders shall provide that, where the figures given by the formula for two or more political parties are equal, each of those figures shall be recalculated using the formula:

$$\frac{S}{1+C+M}$$

Where the figures given by this formula for two or more political parties are also equal, each of those figures shall be recalculated with S being the number of first preference votes cast for the party at the last general election of members of the Assembly.'.

Mr. Moss: Clause 22 seeks to establish a number of statutory Committees to advise and assist each Northern Ireland Minister with the formulation of policy and to monitor the work of each Department. It seeks to put into legislation paragraphs 8 and 9 of strand 1 of the Belfast agreement.

Paragraph 8 of the agreement provides a definition of how the "Chairs and Deputy Chairs" of the Committees will be determined. The strange use of language in the agreement has been translated in the Bill to Chairman and Deputy Chairman. The Chairman and Deputy Chairman are to be "allocated proportionally by the d'Hondt system"

which is outlined in subsection (4).

Paragraph 9 of the Belfast agreement details specific powers to those Committees. It states:

"They will have the power to:

consider and advise on Departmental budgets and Annual Plans in the context of overall budget allocation; approve relevant secondary legislation and take the Committee stage of relevant primary legislation;

call for persons and papers;

initiate enquiries and make reports;

consider and advise on matters brought to the Committee by its Minister."

However, the Bill does not detail those powers. It states simply in clause 22(2)(a) that Standing Orders shall make provision "for establishing committees of Members of the Assembly to advise and assist each Northern Ireland Minister in the formulation of policy with respect to matters within his responsibilities as a Minister".

The emphasis is on the formulation of policy and there is no mention of the role in paragraph 9 of the agreement to monitor the work of the Executive and scrutinise primary and secondary legislation. I hope that the Minister will clarify that point, because, on the face of it, those detailed functions of the Committees seem to have been overlooked.

The agreement goes to great lengths to achieve political and community balance in the Assembly. Clause 4 sets out clear rules with regard to weighted majorities under the definition of cross-community support. Why, then, does the Bill not seek to extend such checks and balances to the operation of statutory Committees? As I interpret clause 22(3), it is more than likely that, by operating the same d'Hondt system for choosing the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Committees, the nominated officers of the respective political parties could and may choose to select statutory Committees that parallel the ministerial Departments that they have already chosen. That could lead to exclusive control by one party of one or more of the Northern Ireland Departments.

Ministers and Chairmen of Committees could work hand in hand to dominate the work of that Department and the Committee, to the detriment of the best interests of fairness and balance in the working of the Assembly and of good government in Northern Ireland.

The amendment would prevent such exclusive control by ruling out the possibility of a Chairman of a statutory Committee being of the same party as the Minister heading the relevant Department. However, a Deputy Chairman of the same party as the Minister could still be selected under the d'Hondt system.

We believe that the amendment is compatible with the Belfast agreement and would reinforce the sentiments of fairness, balance and accountability. It would block off an obvious and potentially damaging loophole in the Bill.

Mr. Öpik: When I was just a schoolboy, way back in the 1980s, at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution, algebra was one of my favourite subjects. I remember the adage that was occasionally shared in my class that two plus two equals nought—if we rounded it down to the nearest 10. To some extent, that is the basis for my amendment. An injustice is built into what happens if there is a tie break in the nomination for Chairmen and Deputy Chairmen of the statutory Committees.

Clause 22 says:

"Standing orders shall provide that, where the figures given by the formula for two or more political parties are equal, each of those figures shall be recalculated with S being equal to the number of first preference votes cast for the party at the last general election of members of the Assembly."

Without going too far into the mathematics, that means that the formula that applies to the allocation of Ministers in the event of a tie break also applies to the allocation of Committee chairmanships.

The problem is that using the same tie break rule could result in an unbalanced outcome. For example, a party with 14 seats could get two Ministries and two chairmanships, while a party with seven seats got none of either. That does not conform to the spirit of the agreement, which is clear about proportionality. Paragraph 5(a) of strand 1 refers to the "allocation of Committee Chairs, Ministers and Committee membership in proportion to party strengths".

The system will not be completely proportional if the situation that I have described results.

My amendment would modify the formula, to right that wrong and give the small parties a chance of getting a chairmanship in the event of a tie break. The amendment would remove subsection (5) and insert:

"Standing Orders shall provide that, where the figures given by the formula for two or more political parties are equal, each of those figures shall be recalculated using the formula:

S/(1+C+M)

Where the figures given by this formula for two or more political parties are also equal, each of those figures shall be recalculated with S being the number of first preference votes cast for the party at the last general election of members of the Assembly."

In essence, the amendment proposes that, in the event of a tie, the number of Ministries already allocated should be considered in decisions on allocating chairmanships. The proposed formula clearly follows the spirit of the Belfast agreement, which refers to proportionality for Ministries and chairmanships collectively, not just separately. The amendment is important because it creates a collective calculation.

Safeguards must be workable; I am glad to say that there would be nothing complex about applying the proposed formula following an election—even though it might be complex to explain in the Chamber. It ensures that all sections of the community can participate and work together, and that justice is seen to be done even for smaller parties that might otherwise be bereft of any meaningful positions of responsibility in the Assembly. There would be no downside for the larger partie because the proposed formula would kick in only when they already have the lion's share of ministerial positions—possibly all ministerial positions—and chairmanships.

One point that has not been mentioned in the debate is that the smaller parties actually received many votes. The other benefit of the amendment is that it acknowledges that minority parties have a right to play a significant role in the functioning of the Assembly. Once again, that is in the spirit of the agreement. Will the Minister give me an assurance that what I can only assume was an oversight will be seriously reconsidered over the summer recess, and that technical amendments to right a wrong facing smaller parties will be tabled at a later stage?

Finally, I suppose I must thank the mathematics department of the Royal Belfast Academical Institution for making the amendment possible by giving me a reasonable education.

9.15 pm

Mr. McNamara: I am not sure whether hon. Members, particularly those on the Government Front Bench, would congratulate the Royal Belfast Academical Institution, although I am sure that the subject of the amendment will be of great interest to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary and will occupy his mind throughout the summer recess. I am sure that, when we return, he will send many pages of squared notepaper covered with work to their Lordships, most of whom had the benefit only of a classical education rather than that of the RBAI.

I should like to take up one point made by the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss). On the face of it, his proposition that the Chairman and the Minister being advised by the Committee should be of different parties appears very sensible, sound and secure. Although, normally, I would go along with that, in this case, we would be providing one safeguard too many. The First Minister and the Deputy First Minister will have their parties and colleagues to consult on such matters. Perhaps the allocation of such posts is better left to them and their parties and to the other parties. We should be considering the ability of people in certain relationships.

I accept that there may be a danger of exclusivity and of certain areas being hived off as nationalist or Unionist, as the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire suggested. Although those difficulties might emerge, we should leave matters of chairmanship to the good sense, good will and what we hope will be the spirit of the new Assembly.

Mr. Worthington: Following the suggestion of my hon. Friend the Minister of State that I reply to the debate on this group of amendments, I realised belatedly that it includes the d'Hondt principle. I looked through the amendments and rejoiced that nothing tested my algebra—until I came to the amendment tabled by the honourable anorak on the Liberal Democrat Benches, the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik). [HON. MEMBERS: "That is unparliamentary language."] I do not think that it is, but that could be tested.

The Chairman: Order. It might be unparliamentary if there is a ruling by tomorrow morning.

Mr. Worthington: I had better withdraw it then, and apologise profusely.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) pointed out, there is a danger here. I understand why the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire has a desire to help small parties—it has been bred into him—but there can come a time when helping small parties overcomes the principle of proportionality. We must ensure that that principle, which is at the centre of the Bill, succeeds in the end.

The d'Hondt principle will certainly work for the Ministers, and perhaps 20 times again, for Chairs and Vice-Chairs. Therefore, many people will have positions of influence within the Assembly. I cannot promise the hon. Gentleman that we will embrace his amendment, but there is a link between it and amendment No. 14, which was moved by the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss). We are grateful to the hon. Gentleman for bringing the amendment to the Committee.

Mr. Öpik: May I emphasise, for the sake of the record, that our amendment exactly enshrines the principle of proportionality? That is why I tabled it.

Mr. Worthington: We wish to safeguard the principle of proportionality. That was the spirit behind amendment No. 14. It would be unfortunate if the Minister and the Chair of the Committee were from the same party. That situation is not specifically provided for in the agreement, but, in the spirit of the agreement, it would seem desirable that a Committee Chair should come from a different party, if the Committee is to carry out the scrutiny part of its role effectively.

However, there may be circumstances in which an overlap is unavoidable. We cannot accept the amendment as it stands, but we intend to introduce a similar amendment at a later stage, while repeating that, no matter what the system may be, we cannot guarantee that there will always be perfect balance across, say, 10 Committees with Ministers, Chairs and Vice-Chairs. We recognise the idea behind the amendment, and we will consider it over the summer. I can give the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire that promise, and, in considering that principle, we will also take into account the principle raised by the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire.

Rev. Martin Smyth: Coming from the Methodist college, I shall support the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik), who comes from the rival institute, in suggesting that the Minister's latter comments are most welcome. I refer to the 1975 constitutional convention, when we went further and the Committees had to be divided 50:50 between those who were on the executive and those who were not. The chairmanships, too, had to be 50:50. That contrasts with the lack of generosity in this place, where the Government must always have a majority on Standing or Select Committees. As the hon. Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) pointed out, the smallest two parties returned to the Assembly have very able Members who could perform a useful role in the Committees.

Mr. Worthington: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention, and I hope that, in the light of my assurances, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. Moss: We are grateful for the Minister's comments, and, on the basis of what he has said, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 22 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

To report progress and ask leave to sit again.—[Mr. Dowd.]

Committee report progress; to sit again tomorrow.

M62 (Junction 8)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

9.24 pm

Helen Jones (Warrington, North): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise two matters that are of great concern to my constituents: traffic congestion and the need to create more jobs. Those matters crop up week after week in my surgeries and in letters and telephone calls from the people whom I represent. The missing junction 8 on the M62 could be part of the solution to both problems.

Warrington's traffic is a nightmare because the town grew very rapidly without the necessary roads infrastructure. Problems are particularly acute, first, for those who live in the Westbrook and Callands areas of my constituency, where residents often cannot even get out of or into their homes because of congestion along Cromwell avenue and around the Gemini area, where Warrington's big retail developments are. Secondly, those who live at Winwick and along the A49 in Warrington also suffer congestion because of the knock-on effect on junction 9 of the M62.

The new junction 8 is intended to relieve both problems, but it should also open access to the Omega site, which is one of the most important sites for economic development in the north-west. Not only is that vital for my constituents; it has strategic importance for the entire region.

My constituents have been very badly served by the way in which the project has been handled. When the M62 was built in 1972, it had two junctions: junction 7 at Rainhill near St. Helens and junction 9 at Winwick near Warrington. Provision was made for a junction 8 to be added later as the Warrington new town expanded.

We are still waiting 26 years later. The project entered the Government's trunk roads programme in 1994, and my constituents are becoming very impatient waiting for progress. I should make it clear that the reason for the delay has nothing to do with money, as the project is a section 278 scheme, which will be funded by the Commission for the New Towns—no Government money is involved.

We might reasonably have expected that the project's path would be fairly smooth, subject to the usual statutory inquiry procedures. However, that has not been the case. Over the past year in particular, some of us have felt that we were living in a "Through the Looking-Glass" world—the twists and turns of the plot were becoming very complicated.

I must give some of the details of that plot to explain why my constituents feel angry and frustrated waiting for the new junction. When the Government announced their roads review on 19 June last year, the sponsors of the scheme were told that it would be put on hold pending the outcome of that review. That caused consternation in Warrington—we could not understand why a section 278 scheme would be affected by the review. Telephone calls went back and forth between my office and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and I must tell my hon. Friend the Minister that it was very difficult to get an answer from the Department about whether the scheme was included in the review.

Eventually, the Department confirmed that the scheme was not included. On 7 July last year, I received a letter from my noble Friend Baroness Hayman, in which, she said:

"I have decided that, in line with other section 278 funded schemes, it should be allowed to proceed through the approval process in the normal way."

At last we thought we were getting somewhere, and matters proceeded. There were discussions between the various interested parties, and the Highways Agency told my local authority that it expected the scheme to proceed to public inquiry in June or July this year. However, there were yet more delays.

In January this year, I wrote to the Highways Agency and to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, only to be told that the timetable had slipped again. In a letter to me on 6 February, Baroness Hayman said clearly and unequivocally that "the scheme will go to Public Inquiry this autumn".

Sighs of relief all round. We were disappointed that the timetable had slipped, but at least we thought that we had a firm date.

Perhaps we should have known better. When we did not get a date for public inquiry, I put down a further question. On 12 May, I was told:

"The scheme is being considered as part of the . . . Roads Review."—[Official Report, 12 May 1998; Vol. 312, c. 62.]

Letters went back and forth, and the Department corrected the answer on 14 July. The letter I received at that point, while confirming that the scheme was not in the roads review, did tell me that the public inquiry could not start now until early next year.

The reasons given for that were that the Government's new transport policy would include a new approach to the appraisal of such projects, and that the Highways Agency would need to show that the appraisal of the scheme had taken account of the new policy. I accept that that is the case—this scheme must be decided according to the new policy.

I do not accept that that is an argument for delay, because much of the work on the scheme has been done by the Highways Agency, and much of the information is there. In any case, if the scheme had proceeded according to plan, that inquiry would be up and running and would not have been affected at all. Instead, my constituents have been subjected to further delays, yet more traffic congestion and—most importantly—a denial of job opportunities.

As far as we in Warrington are concerned, this is an economic development issue and not just a roads issue. The Omega site, which the junction would open up, is a key strategic employment site for the whole region. It has 500 acres which, it is estimated, could supply 10,000 jobs—jobs which are badly needed, not simply in my constituency but in the area round about. Moreover, the aim of the site is to supply manufacturing jobs, which are needed badly in Warrington. The manufacturing sector has lost more than 8,000 jobs since 1981—that is 18 per cent. of the total. That is higher than the figure for Cheshire as a whole, and more than the figure for the north-west. It is more than the average for the whole country.

Without junction 8, Omega cannot be developed. The consequences of a failure to secure that development cannot be underestimated. Not only is the site one of the nine identified as major inward investment sites for the north-west, it is generally considered by the market to be the best opportunity in the north-west of England for major economic development.

To understand why, it is necessary to know about the location of the site. It lies at the axis of the north-south and east-west transport spines, and has been identified in regional planning guidance as the primary development corridor for the region. It is also halfway between Manchester and Merseyside, and is well placed to take advantage of international transport links, whether by sea or by air. It is only two miles from the west coast main line, so it can be served by rail freight traffic as well. In fact, if one had to design a development site from scratch, it would be difficult to come up with a better one, or one that would fit more neatly with the Government's integrated transport strategy. Also, it is close to areas with objective 1 and 2 status, so the development of Omega would help to provide jobs and spin-off benefits for some of the most depressed parts of the region.

If my hon. Friend the Minister looks at the early-day motion, she will see that it is signed, not only by hon. Members representing the immediate vicinity, but by those representing Liverpool and Manchester as well because they recognise the benefits of the development. That is why about £9 million has already been invested in the site, in acquisition, site clearance, services and marketing. I cannot see the logic of promoting the development of the region and trying to reverse the decline in manufacturing industry, while at the same time delaying the development of a road that is vital to both.

I represent a constituency that, despite many of its economic successes, still contains some of the most deprived areas in north Cheshire—areas that have suffered second, and even third, generation unemployment. My constituents look to the Government to develop the employment opportunities that they so desperately need in such sites. We are still waiting, and while we wait the traffic chaos increases.

I mentioned the problems of people living in the Callands and Westbrook areas of my constituency. I can testify to those at first hand. I have turned back in that area at peak periods because the traffic simply does not move along Cromwell avenue. That situation has arisen because the Commission for the New Towns and the previous Secretary of State granted planning permission for major retail development without the necessary road infrastructure and without building that road junction. For instance, a huge Marks and Spencer store is in the area, and an Ikea store that attracts 2.2 million visitors a year.

Regional car traffic comes on to the roads in Warrington, which are simply not equipped to deal with it. Often, the result is almost gridlock-level traffic around Cromwell avenue, up the A49 and back to junction 9 on the M62. Indeed, at peak times one sees traffic queuing to get off at junction 9 to go into Warrington—stationary traffic on the motorway. That situation is beginning to concern the Cheshire police because of the potential for accidents. Furthermore, traffic in Winwick and down the A49 to Warrington is a constant problem, because all the traffic has to come off at one junction.

The Highways Agency has confirmed that pollution is increasing because of that traffic. On the A49 south of the motorway, standards for carbon monoxide, benzene and oxides of nitrogen are already exceeded, and there is no chance of that improving while the current situation continues because traffic levels north and south of the motorway are expected to increase significantly if the new junction is not built. This is not a case of the often-quoted equation, "More roads equals more cars." In fact, the opposite is true. The lack of a planned highway infrastructure is a major contributor to the congestion that is plaguing local residents, hampering the development of local businesses and damaging the environment in the area.

It is also true to say that there have been objections to the proposed junction and the scheme around it, although they are few in number compared with the massive support that those have received in the constituency. I believe that most of the objections can be met. Indeed, a number of discussions have taken place among the various parties involved.

Noise fencing, mounding, tree and shrub planting and full cut-off flat glass lanterns can minimise the impact on the surrounding area. Detailed traffic calming measures are to be put in place in Burtonwood, to discourage traffic from going through residential areas. For both those who support the scheme and those who do not, there has to be an end to the uncertainty, and a decision has to be made.

I believe that the scheme is important and right for my constituency. It also fits the objectives of an integrated transport policy. It would allow us to create dedicated bus lanes, ease congestion and improve safety for people in residential areas, encouraging them to make more journeys on foot. I certainly would not walk in Callands and Westbrook with the current amount of traffic.

The scheme will be better for the environment, allowing us to improve air quality and reduce pollution along the A49. It would also allow priority improvements to be introduced for cyclists around junction 9, so we could perhaps encourage more people to cycle from Winwick, on one side of the junction, into the centre of Warrington. Those are the Government's objectives; they are right, and the scheme would help to meet them.

The scheme is one of those rare creatures, a green road, and people want it. It should be a flagship development, because it is a way of showing how the integrated transport policy can work. Instead, while we wait, the costs are escalating by possibly £1.5 million a year and my constituents are living with chaos.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will accept that the difficulties that we have experienced over the past year cannot go on. For the sake of the environment, of my constituents who need jobs and of a proper integrated transport policy, which we do not have in Warrington at the moment, the junction needs to go ahead. I hope that she will be able to tell me when the public inquiry will be. We need a firm date for it at last. I hope that, after 26 years, we will finally get some progress and the scheme will become a reality.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) not only on securing this debate, but on her wealth of detail and the no small passion with which she has raised a matter that is obviously of very real concern to her and her constituents.

That concern is shared and, indeed, expressed with a similar passion to Ministers, by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Ms Southworth). The issues are not only transport and traffic congestion, but job creation and regeneration in one of the areas of our country that so desperately need it.

The House will know that the Government are committed to developing a sustainable and integrated transport policy to tackle the serious problems of congestion and pollution that we face, and the publication on Monday of our White Paper "New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" has significantly advanced that process.

We changed policy and direction away from the previous Administration's fragmented provision of infrastructure and services towards an integrated approach that will serve the country's needs for a strong economy, a sustainable environment and an inclusive society. Good communications are essential to delivering those aims, so we must reduce our excessive dependency on the car and lorry if we are not to be choked by increasing pollution and gridlocked by increasing congestion. Those problems plague my hon. Friend's constituents and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South even now.

The scheme formally entered the roads programme in November 1995, although preliminary work had started earlier. It is being undertaken by the Highways Agency on behalf and at the expense, of the Commission for the New Towns, via an agreement under section 278 of the Highways Act 1980 between the agency and the commission, signed in March 1997.

The scheme provides for a new grade-separated junction on the M62 north of Warrington, between junction 7, which serves the A568 to Widnes, and junction 9, which serves A49 access into Warrington. The M62 would also be widened between the proposed junction 8 and existing junction 9, and there would be new access arrangements for the Burtonwood motorway service area. The scheme is designed to serve major retail and business sites, and to open up new areas for development in Warrington. It will relieve local roads, and junction 9, of traffic congestion related to existing major retail sites.

In February 1997, draft orders were published as required by the Highways Act 1980, and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport announced to the House on 19 June 1997 that work on such developer-funded schemes would continue because the schemes either had been or would be scrutinised through the appropriate planning processes. The inquiry did not take place immediately, however, because the Commission for the New Towns asked the Highways Agency to consider reducing the scope, and hence the cost, of the works by deleting or deferring some or all of the motorway-widening element of the proposals.

Following detailed investigations, the Highways Agency concluded that, for safety reasons, widening should remain an essential component of the scheme from the outset, a conclusion that the commission accepted. A public inquiry was programmed to convene in the autumn, but we had developed our approach to road schemes within the context both of our roads review and of our work on an integrated transport policy. Ministers agreed that the scheme lies outside the scope of the roads review because it is 100 per cent. developer-funded, but it is not exempt from our new appraisal approach. It remains a major road scheme, and we must be able to show that we have taken into account all aspects of its impact.

That impact will be assessed in line with the new approach to appraisal announced in the White Paper on integrated transport. The new approach operates within the framework of our five objectives for road schemes. My hon. Friend has referred to our objectives of integration, safety, accessibility, economy and environment because of their importance to the development and regeneration of her constituency and to the easing of the traffic situation. Although much of the approach uses established techniques and will build on work already done, a considerable amount of data gathered—for example, data on air quality, noise and landscape impacts—needs to be analysed again and re-presented.

The prospect of further delay to the programme has disappointed the Commission for the New Towns, as well as my hon. Friend's constituents and others in Warrington. The Omega site, situated in the south-west quadrant of the new junction on land that formerly housed the RAF Burtonwood airfield, represents one of the major regeneration opportunities in the north of England. Planning authorisation for employment use having already been secured, it has the potential to generate thousands of new jobs. The commission sees provision of ready access to the M62 as fundamental to its success, and the opening up of the Omega site remains the commission's primary objective in funding the works. A secondary objective is the release of remaining development land on the adjoining Gemini site, with improved motorway access via the proposed Gemini link.

The scheme will be the first large road scheme to go to public inquiry following publication of the integrated transport White Paper and the roads review report. We have taken the view that the Highways Agency should explain the scheme in terms of our new approach to appraisal, and that will require extra work. If the agency arrived at the public inquiry without applying the new approach, people would rightly criticise it for failing to do so, and that could lead to the inquiry being adjourned. We believe that the extra costs and delays involved in an adjournment would far outweigh those that will stem from the further preparation work that we are undertaking. We have concluded that the earliest possible start date for the public inquiry would be February next year.

Our new approach is designed to draw together the large amount of information collected as part of the appraisal of a transport problem and alternative solutions. It looks at the contribution of different forms of transport in developing alternative solutions and the potential effect of the new integrated transport approach, including the scope for and the effect of demand-management measures. It is our intention that that new approach, once finalised, will be applied to the appraisal of all transport projects, not only all road schemes.

As part of the appraisal, the economic impact of road investment is taken into account, largely through the estimated benefits of reduced journey times for commercial, business and other traffic. Techniques are being developed to assess the economic value of journey-time reliability and to identify those improvements which contribute most to reliability. In the interim, the current review has sought to identify such benefits in qualitative terms.

[Ms Glenda Jackson]

Each case must be assessed on its merits. In some cases, road access is essential to provide access to sites that could not otherwise be developed, and the contribution to regeneration is a complex issue. We agree with the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment that improvements are needed to the methods used in local and regional economic impact studies, so that the contribution of transport investment to regeneration can be better assessed.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for bringing these important issues to the attention of the House. She has been consistent in advocating, as has our hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South, that the proposed scheme should proceed as quickly as possible. However, given the reasons I have already outlined, I ask my hon. Friend to remain patient over the coming—and, given the time that it has taken for the scheme to begin, comparatively few—remaining months.

Question put and agreed to.

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

Department of Culture, Media and Sport

9.34 am

Mr. Peter Ainsworth (East Surrey): On a point of order, Madam Speaker. You will no doubt be aware that, in recent days, we have had a succession of Ministers coming to the House to outline the spending plans for their Departments. Is it not a disgrace that, when it comes to the Department of Culture, Media and Sport, what we get is an interview on the "Today" programme and a press conference in the National Gallery?

Given the wide-ranging structural changes that are proposed, including the dismantling of the Arts Council and the abolition of the English tourist board, and the fact that the statement has been awaited with great interest by many people across the country whose livelihoods will be affected by the changes, will you use your influence to recommend to the Secretary of State that he comes here forthwith to make an oral statement to the House and to answer some difficult questions on a contentious document?

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley (South-West Surrey): Further to that point of order, Madam Speaker. As vice-chairman of the all-party tourism group, I know that tourism and hospitality are responsible for creating more new jobs than any other industry. To sound the possible death knell of a strong, independent English tourist board to journalists rather than to the House leaves us in great difficulty when we want to represent the interests of our constituents.

Madam Speaker: As the House knows, Secretaries of State determine for themselves whether statements are made at the Dispatch Box or by means of a written question. If there is not to be a statement at the Dispatch Box, I should expect the Secretary of State to make a statement in the usual way, by means of a written answer, and to see that the supporting documentation is available to Members in the Vote Office. I know that those on the Treasury Bench this morning will have noted my remarks, and I am sure that they will ensure that the proper procedures are now carried out.

PETITION

Acid Gas Escape (Killamarsh)

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire) rose—

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnes: I wish to present a petition, which arises from two incidents in which highly dangerous clouds of acid gas escaped in Killamarsh in my constituency. Following the first incident, I made a speech in the House on the matter on 20 May, but I was prevented from seeking a speech on the second incident, as I was rushed into hospital with a stroke on 4 June. I am pleased to be able now to press my constituents' justified concerns with this petition. It reads:

To the House of Commons

The Petition of the residents of Killamarsh, N. E. Derbyshire

Declares that the siting of the Sarp UK plant (formerly Leigh Environmental) extremely close to centres of population—particularly two schools and a popular country park—is inherently dangerous. We call for its closure.

Until this can be achieved, the Petitioners therefore request that the House of Common

1. Introduce legislation requiring provision of an off-site safety plan to warn the community of dangerous incidents; an

2. urge the Minister for the Environment to:

a) refuse permission for any further developments or extensions of existing licences to Sarp UK or any other company operating on this site which may be requested of his Department;

b) instruct the Health and Safety Executive to conduct a complete safety review of the plant; and

c) instruct the Environment Agency to undertake constant monitoring of the operation of the plant, taking particular account of the gases and foul smells in the atmosphere regularly reported by residents, with a view to providing a complete cessation of these and the foul smells coming from the drains in the village

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

It is signed by Jane Holden of Nethermoor Lane, Killamarsh and 7,191 residents of the area. There are fewer people than that on the electoral register in Killamarsh, but we need to take into account the additional people living in the surrounding area.

To lie upon the Table.

Madam Speaker: It is good to see the hon. Member back.

Orders of the Day

Northern Ireland Bill

[3RD ALLOTTED DAY]

Considered in Committee, pursuant to Order [17 July] [Progress, 23 July].

[SIR ALAN HASELHURST in the Chair]

Clause 24

DATES OF ELECTIONS AND DISSOLUTIONS

9.39 am

Mr. David Trimble (Upper Bann): I beg to move amendment No. 150, in, page 13, line 4, leave out from 'If' to 'by' in line 12 and insert

'three months after either the First Minister or Deputy First Minister ceases to hold office the Assembly has not elected a First Minister or Deputy First Minister Her Majesty shall'.

The amendment is to some extent consequential to an amendment that we discussed yesterday. It concerns an issue that goes to the very heart of the concept of an Assembly that will sit for a fixed four-year term, unlike this House, which sits not for a fixed term but for a maximum period during which the Prime Minister may, at any time, seek a dissolution. The objection to clause 24(4) is that it undermines the basic concept of the fixed term that is proposed for the Assembly.

Subsection (4) says that the Assembly may be dissolved on three conditions. The third, which is particularly sweeping, is that "it is in the public interest that the Assembly should be dissolved".

Who is to consider that? The clause states that it will be Her Majesty, but, in practice, it will be the Secretary of State. A simple provision states that a body that is supposedly elected for a fixed four-year term may be dissolved if the Secretary of State believes that it is in the public interest.

That is contrary to the concept of the Assembly's existence and undermines the democratic process. It says to the electorate of Northern Ireland that although they may elect a body, the Secretary of State, who represents and is accountable to no one in Northern Ireland, may, if she considers it appropriate, turn out all its Members. That treats the electorate with contempt and disdain. I trust that it would never happen because no one would be foolish enough to do it. There is therefore no reason why the provision should be in the Bill.

Objection can also be made to the other grounds for dissolution set out in paragraphs (a) and (b). The first is that

"the persons who are the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Northern Ireland Ministers are not able to carry out their functions".

That does not refer to issues of individual incapacity such as the First Minister being ill or unable to discharge his functions, in which case action could be taken. There is no such provision in the clause. We need only read the history books to see that there have been times when persons have occupied positions on the Treasury Benches and been incapable of discharging their functions for various reasons, but we need not go into the details of that. One wonders what circumstances the draftsmen envisaged in which all Ministers, not only the First Minister, would be unable to carry out their functions and, as paragraph (b) states,

"if they were to resign, the persons who would be likely to succeed them would not be able to carry out their functions".

Although the provisions in paragraphs (a) and (b) are somewhat absurd, it is the provision in paragraph (c) which is fundamentally objectionable. It runs counter to the spirit of the Bill by demonstrating a degree of contempt for the electorate in Northern Ireland, and it undermines the concept of the Assembly as a body that operates for a fixed four-year term.

Hon. Members will remember that yesterday, when we were considering the provisions for the election of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister, and the consequences of one or other resigning, I proposed an amendment providing for a three-month period subsequent to that resignation in which there would be an opportunity for re-election. We may argue about whether the period should be three months or less—the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) suggested a seven-day period, which I thought too short—but we need to provide a period of between one week and three months in which the Assembly should try to re-elect First and Deputy First Ministers. If it were unable to do so during that period, that is the only case in which the Assembly should be dissolved before it had completed its four-year term.

9.45 am

The amendments that I have tabled would mean that either of the two largest parties would be able to bring about a dissolution of the Assembly if it were determined to do so, simply by arranging for its leader—the First or Deputy First Minister—to resign, not offering any candidate to be re-elected and using its votes to block the re-election of other persons. However, the procedure would be rather cumbersome and would take time, during which the party would have to justify its action, not only to the Assembly, but to the electorate. That is appropriate. It should not be easy for people to bring about the dissolution of a body that is elected for a fixed four-year term. Dissolution should certainly not be caused by the wave of a hand of someone who is not a Member of the Assembly, who is not elected in Northern Ireland and who is not answerable to its people. That is objectionable in principle.

I ask the Government to reconsider clause 24(4) and to consider the amendment, which would provide a procedure to bring about a dissolution while maintaining the integrity of the fixed-term concept by making it difficult to dissolve the Assembly. I point out that, in drafting the amendment, I omitted to provide for the deletion of subsection (5), which would not be appropriate if the amendment were made. We can consider that at a later stage.

My crucial point is that these provisions should be deleted because they are objectionable on democratic grounds and contrary to the concept of the scheme, but there may be circumstances in which a dissolution before the end of a four-year term would be appropriate. The amendment provides for that, but the procedure would not be easy to use because it should be biased in favour of the Assembly serving its full fixed four-year term and dissolving before that only when it would be difficult, or almost impossible, for it to continue. It should not be easy to seek an early dissolution and it should certainly not be done on the ridiculous grounds set out in clause 24(4).

Mr. Peter Temple-Morris (Leominster): I welcome the amendment in the name of the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) because it is interesting to debate the subject. I will not be supporting it, however, because—this is my central point—the clause provides a necessary reserved power. I follow the logic of the right hon. Gentleman's argument that using the provision would bring about a dissolution by the back door, but the sad fact is that if one wanted to dissolve the Assembly, there would be several ways of making it unworkable, as there are in any assembly. The history of Northern Ireland contains examples of assemblies which, through no one's fault, have proved difficult to work for various reasons. That is why the Bill contains the reserved power in clause 24(4).

The clause is not an attempt to undermine the democratic process. Everyone is trying to give Northern Ireland the maximum amount of representative democracy. This is a reserved power, exercisable through Her Majesty by the Secretary of State. As I have said in other discussions on the Bill, we must realise that we are dealing with the democratic process in Northern Ireland and at Westminster. In making the decision to dissolve, the Secretary of State would be answerable to this House.

Mr. Trimble: If it is necessary to have a reserved power in this matter, will the hon. Gentleman compare and contrast it with whatever reserved powers there might be in the Government of Wales Bill and the Scotland Bill? I do not believe that there is equivalent provision in either.

Mr. Temple-Morris: I think the right hon. Gentleman is right. However, I believe that he has more cause than almost anyone in the Committee at the moment to appreciate and acknowledge the fact that the situation in Northern Ireland is different. The history is different. The effort at devolution to Scotland and Wales is the first in modern times; the circumstances are totally different here, because this is not, by a long chalk, the first effort at devolution toward Northern Ireland. In view of the history and the circumstances, I have no hesitation in saying that the reserved power is necessary.

The reserved power deals with the plural—the whole cross-community concept. The power would be exercised if plural—and the same for those who might succeed them. Part of the concept is the idea that, if one Minister cannot carry out his functions, it is likely that the other cannot carry out his either. That is how such a situation might come about.

"the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Northern Ireland Ministers are not able to carry out their functions"—

In clause 24(4)(c) we have the saving grace—quite apart from the overall accountability to the House—that it is for the Secretary of State to gauge whether it is in the public interest for the Assembly to be dissolved. Then, far from doing a dreadful act to democracy, one goes to the people in order to elect a new Assembly; the democratic process takes over.

I am grateful to the right hon. Member for drawing attention to the matter, but I do not believe that amendment No. 150 helps the Bill. It would merely prolong a situation which the Secretary of State must have the power to deem a crisis, in which she would accordingly dissolve the Assembly. If the amendment were passed, we would have three months' agony in such a situation: we would lose a very valuable part of the Bill.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I appreciate the points that the hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) made. I do not have clear in my mind the force of the distinction between subsections (3) and (4) of the clause. Amendment No. 150 deals specifically with subsection (4). We have been repeatedly told that the Bill must be in keeping with the spirit of the agreement, so it is interesting that a four-year term is not mentioned in the agreement. We have already stipulated a specific passage of time during which the Assembly should be operative.

I am puzzled; I do not see why subsection (4) is necessary. We are considering the concept of Her Majesty acting on the advice of the Secretary of State—but the Secretary of State already has the power to act by virtue of subsection (3).

Some people may think that my right hon. Friend the Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) was in dreamland when he tabled amendment No. 150. Some years ago, I visited Holland shortly before a general election. For six months, the two parties that had formed the coalition Government had been unable to come to terms to form a new Government. As I understand it, in such circumstances we would not be in a similar position to Holland, where the existing Government continued to exercise their power until the new Government were in place. We are contemplating a situation where, for whatever reason, the First Minister, Deputy First Minister and other Northern Ireland Ministers were not prepared to work together. If that happened, Her Majesty should have a power by Order in Council to dissolve the Assembly to hold a fresh election after a specified period. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility—humans being what we are—that such a situation might arise. In fact, the Government were considering it. We are suggesting that their proposals are too cumbersome. Our amendment could help by making things easier and more straightforward.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): I understand and sympathise with some of the concerns voiced by the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble). I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) too quickly dismissed those concerns.

I also say to the right hon. Member for Upper Bann that, where possible, and always acknowledging the special circumstances of Northern Ireland, we should attempt to establish similarities in the legislation governing the new assemblies and parliaments that we are creating. He was right to question the difference between clause 24(4) and the provisions relating to a dissolution of the Scottish Parliament. In Scotland, extraordinary general elections are to be held where the Parliament so resolves and, on a Division, a majority of not less than two thirds of its Members votes that it should be dissolved. They are also to be held if the Parliament does not nominate a First Minister during the period specified. The right hon. Gentleman's anxieties are therefore entirely legitimate.

[Dr. Norman A. Godman]

I should like to know the definition of "public interest" in clause 24(4)(c). Clause 24(4)(a) speaks of circumstances where

"the persons who are the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Northern Ireland Ministers are not able to carry out their functions".

Could such a situation be brought about by a vote of no confidence by two thirds of the Members of the Northern Ireland Assembly?

I hope that the Minister will treat amendment No. 150 sympathetically. I did not hear the right hon. Member for Upper Bann say that it was a probing amendment, but I believe that it is the type of amendment that should be treated with sympathy, especially when considered in relation to the Scottish legislation.

Rev. Ian Paisley (North Antrim): What pressures would be placed on the Secretary of State to decide that it was in the public interest to dissolve the Assembly? We well know that, since the process that brought in the Irish Republic, the latter has had, and continues to have, a strong influence on what happens in Northern Ireland. If the Irish Republic said that it was not in the public interest for the Assembly to continue, I am sure that—judging by the past record—that view would be immediately accepted and the Assembly would be axed, because the pressures that have been exerted on Northern Ireland have been largely directed from the south of Ireland.

The same thing happened when the Stormont Parliament was first prorogued and then disbanded. We had the same agitation when other assemblies were put in its place, especially the most recent. It is a very serious thing, given that the Anglo-Irish Conference—which continues under the agreement, under another name—would continue to have a very big say in pressurising the Secretary of State to say that it was not in the public interest for the Assembly to continue. The public interest, to the Irish Republic, is its own parochial interest.

The Secretary of State is being given a very wide power indeed. The result of all that we have done in the House, and all the talks, can be taken away by a stroke of a pen, without any Member of the Assembly or Minister of the Assembly—even the First Minister or Deputy First Minister—having any say in the matter.

The Chairman of Ways and Means (Sir Alan Haselhurst): The Question is—

Mr. John D. Taylor (Strangford) rose—

The Chairman: It would be helpful if Members seeking to participate in the debate in the Committee could give a clear indication to the Chair. Otherwise, the Chair may assume that the debate has been completed.

Mr. Taylor: I would definitely have done so, Sir Alan, had it not occurred to me only two seconds ago that I wanted to speak.

I shall make two brief points. First, it seems amazing that, although the Government are not prepared to remove people from the Assembly Executive even though they belong to a political party that is inextricably linked to a paramilitary organisation that is killing people on the ground, they are prepared to take upon themselves the power to remove all Members of the Assembly. I do not follow that inconsistency.

Secondly, I share the fears expressed by the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley) that the Government will be influenced by the Dublin Government in deciding whether the Assembly should proceed. As a result of that influence, the Assembly could be closed—and there are precedents for that in the history of Northern Ireland. On numerous occasions in Committee, the Government have rejected amendments from the Ulster Unionist party or from Her Majesty's Opposition on the basis that they are inconsistent with the Stormont agreement. I hope that the Secretary of State is listening to this point. I hope that the Minister will tell us how the amendment is inconsistent with the Belfast agreement—because I believe that he certainly cannot do so in this case.

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. Paul Murphy): This has been an interesting short debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) referred to the histories of past assemblies and similar bodies, and reflected on how it was important for Parliament to have the power to dissolve those bodies in the event of various crises. However, I believe that times have changed and that this agreement and this Northern Ireland Assembly will be more permanent.

We have consulted widely on this clause in recent days, and we have sympathy with the points raised by the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) and other hon. Members. My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) referred to the Scottish comparison, which is a valid point. It is worth examining it so that we may determine whether there is a read-across from the Scottish to the Northern Ireland situation.

I think that we should re-examine the clause and the consequential amendments that would have to be made to other parts of the Bill.

Mr. Eddie McGrady (South Down): Does the Minister agree that proponents of the amendment claim that the clause gives total, absolute and almost dictatorial powers to the Secretary of State? However, clause 24(5) states:

"No recommendation shall be made to Her Majesty to make an Order under subsection (4) unless a draft of it has been laid before and approved by resolution of each House of Parliament."

That is surely a very strong and adequate democratic safeguard relating to the cause, reason and execution of such a proposal.

Mr. Murphy: In no sense is my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State a dictator and she, and anyone who succeeds her, will have to be accountable to the House of Commons and the other place.

Mr. Lembit Öpik (Montgomeryshire): The issue is surely the balance between the autonomy of the Northern Ireland Assembly versus the insurance policy of referring the decision to this Chamber and the other place. The real concern is that the clause goes some way towards undermining the responsibility and trust invested in the Assembly to be able to manage its own affairs.

Mr. Murphy: This is the sovereign Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and, as such, authority ultimately rests here.

In terms of the Assembly's workability, we believe that we should plan not for failure but for success. We propose to re-examine the clause, consult in detail with the parties during August and September and refer the matter to the other place.

Rev. Ian Paisley: Parliament is sovereign anyway, and thus would be able to do what the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) suggests. However, Northern Ireland representation in this place is very small, and Northern Ireland parties are not represented in the upper House. According to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume), the leader of the SDLP, it would not have any representatives in the other place. My party has never been represented there. Therefore, the House of Lords would not have a full complement of spokesmen to represent the people and put the views. The Assembly should at least—

Dr. Godman: Lord Paisley.

Rev. Ian Paisley: I do not think that that will ever happen—and I would not want it to. I would rather be in a place that has real power. Apparently the other place will be dehorned anyway—and does the hon. Gentleman think that I would offer my head for the chop? I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman would make such a suggestion. I will allow him to take my seat.

It is important that the Assembly be allowed at least to express its feelings about the matter.

Mr. Murphy: That is why it is important to talk to the parties in Northern Ireland.

The hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) referred to the four-year term. He is correct in saying that that is not in the agreement, although it was discussed during the negotiations and all parties agreed that a four-year term should be the norm. The poll may be shifted up to two months before or after it would otherwise be held in order to ensure that it could be held on the same day as other elections, where appropriate. For example, the Assembly election would coincide with local elections in Northern Ireland, which makes sense financially and would increase the voter turnout. Subsection (4)(c) enables a dissolution of the Assembly at any time during the four-year term.

My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde raised several issues. There is no specific provision for votes of no confidence in the Administration rather than in Ministers or parties. We could consider a dissolution on a two-thirds majority—which would be comparable with the Scottish model, as my hon. Friend is aware. As elsewhere, the definition of public interest is in statute and it is not easy to define in abstract. They are just a few reasons why it is important to re-examine the issue, and I ask the right hon. Member for Upper Bann to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Trimble: I thank the Minister for his response and for his willingness to re-examine the matter. I am glad that the Government have had second thoughts, and I particularly thank the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) for his comments about the desirability of having a read-across into the Northern Ireland institutions from the newly devolved institutions. I thank the Minister for taking that point on board.

It was also pleasant to hear the Minister make the simple but fundamental point—which has been sometimes lost sight of in the past few months through misinterpretation of the position—that Parliament remains sovereign and that, at the end of the day, power over all parts of the United Kingdom returns to the House. That point is made clear in clause 5(6). Therefore, those who are concerned about the repeal of the Government of Ireland Act 1920 can be reassured about the absolute sovereignty of the House.

That is also the answer for the hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris). If there is a need for a reserved power in order to act in an emergency, the Parliament has the capacity to do so and has no need of such a clause in this Bill. The one time that it was felt necessary to intervene in the terms that the hon. Gentleman described—I did not agree, but it was done—when the House decided in 1972 to prorogue and abolish the Northern Ireland Parliament, legislation was passed in the course of one day to give effect to that action. The point about the undiminished sovereignty of Parliament remains.

Mr. Robert McCartney (North Down): Under the terms of the agreement, Parliament and the British Government have agreed that, in the event of a simple majority of people wishing to leave the United Kingdom, there will be no claim of sovereignty—which is exactly what section 75 of the Government of Ireland Act 1920 declared.

Mr. Trimble: The hon. and learned Gentleman is entirely wrong. While the United Kingdom continues, the sovereignty of this House is undiminished. If part of the United Kingdom seceded, the situation would be different. The possibility of secession has been explicit in British constitutional legislation since 1921, so the hon. and learned Member for North Down (Mr. McCartney) does himself no credit by advancing arguments that are simply wrong in law. I shall not pursue the issue further at this stage.

I thank the Minister for his willingness to look again at the matter. On that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 27

VACANCIES

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock): I beg to move amendment No. 100, in page 14, leave out lines 9 to 11 and insert—

'(2) Subject to subsection (2A) below an order under subsection (1) shall provide that where a seat was last filled by a member of a registered party, any vacancy shall be filled by another member nominated by that party (without a by-election).

[Mr. Andrew Mackinlay]

(2A) Provided that where the condition mentioned in subsection (2) is not met, a vacancy shall be filled by—

(a) a by-election, or

(b) such other method as the Secretary of State may prescribe in the order.'.

The Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 151, in page 14, line 9, leave out 'or substitutes'.

No. 92, in page 14, line 10, leave out from 'substitutes' to end of line 11 and insert—

'(2A) The Secretary of State shall also provide a scheme for updating and replacing substitutes.'.

Mr. Mackinlay: Amendment No. 100 would write into the Bill the requirement that, if a vacancy occurs in the Assembly's membership, the vacancy shall be filled by a member of the party that had ownership—if I may use that term—of the seat at the time of the Assembly election. The Bill leaves the method of filling the vacancy vague. It gives the Secretary of State the discretion to fill the vacancy in the way that I have just outlined, or to hold a by-election, or to use some other method.

Now that we have had considerable discussion of this Bill and the earlier Northern Ireland (Elections) Bill, it is time that we clarified how vacancies are to be filled. Vacancies will inevitably occur, and there must be clarity and precision on the matter now. In our discussions on the earlier Bill, the Minister implied that the Government would have resolved the matter by the time this Bill reached the House. I do not complain about the fact that they have not moved forward since then, but it is appropriate now that we resolve that vacancies shall automatically be filled by members of the same party as previously held the seat.

My amendment also provides for circumstances in which that condition cannot be fulfilled—for example, because the member was an independent. Only then would a by-election be the correct method of filling the vacancy. That is a common-sense approach.

In our earlier debates, we drew attention to the fact that, under the proposed electoral system, a perverse situation could arise where a member of the nationalist minority lost the seat in a constituency where there was a numerical majority for the Unionist persuasion. If a by-election were held, the Unionist persuasion would inevitably win, which would be a source of considerable irritation, and demonstrably unfair. The opposite could happen in a constituency with a nationalist majority, where someone of the Unionist persuasion might feel unfairly treated.

We used as an analogy the European Parliament seat of Northern Ireland. If, for example, my hon. Friend the Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) had sought the presidency of the Irish Republic and got it, there would have been a vacancy. If there had subsequently been a by-election for the European Parliament, the seat would have been won by someone of the Unionist persuasion. That is a matter of fact. The absence of a provision such as I am outlining would create enormous difficulties.

With respect to the Secretary of State, I believe that we must resolve the matter now, rather than some weeks or months down the road. Such a vacancy could occur at any time. Numbers are critical to all parties in the Assembly, as we see from the complicated criteria for votes. I hope that the Minister will be persuaded that my amendment improves the Bill.

Rev. Ian Paisley: When the elections were held, each candidate had to list in order a number of persons whom he would want to fill the seat if anything happened to him. What is the use of such a list, if there is no intention of using it? When I was fighting the election and I was asked who would get the seat if anything happened to me, I could refer to the list that I had drawn up.

10.15 am

Mr. Mackinlay: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman, who is correct. One of the up-sides of the electoral system is that, if the amendment is adopted, it will be clear who the substitute, the suppliant or the alternative member will be. It is good for the electorate to understand that.

That is the principle envisaged for future European elections in England, Wales and Scotland. The same also applies, I think, to Northern Ireland, but I need to check that. At the next European parliamentary elections on a multi-member constituency basis, the intention is that there will not be by-elections. If a vacancy occurs, a replacement will be supplied from the existing ranking order of the party list. That seems sensible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: There was nothing in the legislation to deal with the Northern Ireland single transferable vote system. There would be by-elections. I agree with the hon. Gentleman in this sense: if anything happened to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume), for example and a vacancy arose, there is no way, on an ordinary vote, that a member of the Unionist family would not take that seat. That is unfair. Under those circumstances, the seat should be retained by a member of the same party as held it previously. However, that was not touched on by the legislation that deals with the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mackinlay: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I hesitated because I thought that, perversely, Northern Ireland was the exception in European Union legislation. I trespass on that merely to buttress my argument that England, Wales and Scotland will have the arrangements that I propose in my amendment. It is profoundly sensible and I hope that it commends itself to the Committee.

Mr. Peter Robinson (Belfast, East): I concur with the call for clarification of the matter. The appropriate time for that was before the election to the Assembly, when the situation was extremely vague. The Secretary of State by an order brought into play the substitute system. Many of us would prefer by-elections, if a by-election could produce a fair result.

If the Assembly is to be frozen for four years, that ensures that no matter what changes take place in the community, the Assembly is cut off from them. If by-elections do not occur because of the substitute system, no account is taken of changes that occur democratically in society. That is one of the dangers of the proposed system.

If a party that was in the minority in a constituency lost the seat through resignation or by some other means, it would have little or no chance of winning it in a by-election, and would therefore be disadvantaged for the remainder of that term.

Alongside the amendment, we must consider our earlier discussion of the designation of political parties. I think that the Government should reconsider the provision.

Under the substitute system, the party did not have control of the substitutes: it was the candidate who had that control. Some put in more than others, but they were in complete control of who their substitutes were. Suppose that a candidate was elected as a Member representing one political party but transferred his allegiance to another. I am sure that he would wish to change his substitutes, who would be members of the party with which he had previously been aligned. There must be some provision for that, and such provision does not at present exist within the Secretary of State's New Northern Ireland Assembly (Elections) Order. Amendment No. 92 is, to a large extent, a probing amendment to give those on the Government Front Bench the opportunity to say that the Secretary of State will modify the order to allow for the natural change that may take place over time.

Mr. Roy Beggs (East Antrim): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the electorate should have some rights in these matters and that, if there is to be substitute provision, the names of those persons who are likely to be appointed should also be made known to the electorate at the time of the election?

Mr. Robinson: It is my recollection that the chief electoral officer indicated that the names of those persons would be available at the polling stations. However, when I went to vote I never saw any of the names of substitutes at the polling station. I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman that the electorate have a right to know. It could be a circuitous route to get an unelectable individual into the Assembly. A popular person might stand with an unelectable individual as his substitute. He may be elected and then hand the seat over to that substitute. I suppose that that is possible. I agree that the electorate have the right to know.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): Does the hon. Gentleman not think that the Bill is turning back the tide of electoral reform to a pocket borough situation?

Mr. Robinson: Many arguments can be advanced against the substitute system, but I do not see a better option if we are to have a system that provides for multi-Member constituencies. In those circumstances, it is the best that can be made of the system. That is what makes me rather concerned about the option that the Secretary of State seems to leave open within the clause, which refers to

"such other method of filling vacancies as the Secretary of State thinks fit."

It is my recollection that those words, or words similar to them, are in earlier legislation. Yet since then the Secretary of State has come down in favour of a substitute system, which is in play. However, the right hon. Lady still wants to maintain the option of changing the rules of the game somewhere down the line.

We either have by-elections or we have substitutes: an unknown alternative which the Secretary of State wants to keep close to her chest is unacceptable. That provision should be deleted so that we run with the two options available to us, with the Secretary of State redefining the order to ensure that there can be updating. That updating does not take place simply because a Member has changed his party. A substitute may have died or may have made known their intention not to take up a seat. That would force us into by-elections unless those substitutes were replaced. For the good working of the Assembly, it is appropriate that the order should be updated to take into account the possibilities to which I have referred.

Dr. Godman: With your permission, Sir Alan, I shall speak to amendment No. 151. I shall not detain the Committee for long because there is little support for my views in this instance. My hon. Friends the Members for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara), for South Down (Mr. McGrady) and for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) disagree utterly and completely with my view that vacancies should be filled only by way of by-elections. My hon. Friend the Member for South Down pointed out to me that substitutes are the case for local elections in Northern Ireland. My hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North reminded me that Norway and Sweden have provisions for substitutes. My hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock reminded me, in a not very gentle way, that I had voted for a similar system for the European Parliament elections. Nevertheless, despite this inconsistency, my view is that, in an ideal world, vacancies in any sort of Assembly, whether local authority Assembly or Parliament, should be filled by way of a by-election.

The hon. Member for East Antrim (Mr. Beggs) asked in an intervention, "What about the concerns of the electorate?" We have experienced in recent years in Scotland the disaffection of the electorate with the Labour party in by-elections. All parties suffer that fate; it is not peculiar to the Scottish Labour party. I acknowledge the special circumstances of Northern Ireland, but it is my view that we should aim for vacancies being filled eventually by by-elections. That is the position in the Irish Republic, which has a similar electoral system for its long-established Parliament. I would perhaps go along with the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson), who said that there should just be the alternatives of substitutes or by-elections rather than the clause giving powers to the Secretary of State.

The helpful guidance notes state:

"The thinking behind a system of substitutes is based on the impact of vacancies in a system combining election by a multi-member STV system and an Assembly based on the principles of proportionality."

I can understand that, but it still seems to me that we must take into consideration the views of the electorate. I correct slightly what my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock said about the Scottish system in comparison with what is proposed for Northern Ireland. I refer to the Scottish system in terms of comparative evidence. There is a different electoral system for our Scottish Parliament. Clause 8 of the Scotland Bill provides for constituency by-elections and clause 9 refers to

"where the seat of a regional member is vacant."

My hon. Friend is correct to some extent because clause 9 provides that a vacancy in a regional Member seat that had been allocated to a registered political party will be filled by the nomination of another person from the same party list. However, that party list is known. That answers the concern that has been voiced in this context.

[Dr. Godman]

My only support comes from my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), who is not in her place at the moment.

Mr. Kevin McNamara (Hull, North): My hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) sends her apologies to my hon. Friend. She has a meeting at the Scottish Office.

Dr. Godman: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. The name of my hon. Friend the Member for Maryhill is appended to amendment No. 151.

It seems that I am perhaps being over-idealistic in advocating that vacancies should be filled only by by-elections. I am keenly aware of the social, political and economic circumstances of Northern Ireland. However, as an old-fashioned democrat, I believe that we should aim for a system whereby vacancies are filled only by by-elections. At the end of the day, we have to win the consent of the people whom we seek to govern.

From time to time, the local electorate may become disaffected with a party, its policies and practices. In between elections, the electorate should be given the right to demonstrate how they feel about a party. If, God forbid, there were to be a by-election shortly in Greenock and Inverclyde, it would be a by-election with a number of candidates representing different parties. That is the ideal for which we should aim in all assemblies—not just within the multinational state that we call the United Kingdom, but everywhere.

I make no apologies for detaining the Committee briefly, even though I know that I have no support from my hon. Friends. I have difficulties with the single transferable vote system. Even the Scottish system has difficulties, but it is a hell of a lot better than the system in Northern Ireland. The regional list of registered members of political parties will be known to the Scottish electorate. If there is a vacancy in a constituency where someone won under the first-past-the-post rules, there will, rightly and properly, be a by-election to fill that vacancy.

I stick to my guns, although I acknowledge the serious concerns of my hon. Friends at my advocacy of the system. However, one day, I hope that, in Northern Ireland as elsewhere, vacancies will be filled by the tried and trusted procedure of a by-election. That way, we meet four-square the concerns, expectations, needs and desires of the electorate. At the end of the day, the electorate must reign supreme over elections.

10.30 am

Mr. Öpik: This is something of a triumph for the Liberal Democrats. Just over a year ago, we had no proportional representation at all. Now it looks as if Britain will have every kind of PR we can think of. I thank the Government on behalf of my party.

It is necessary to have clarification now, rather than leaving the matter to a point when we are faced with a by-election. The more specific and objective that we can be about the rules, the less likely it will be that we shall have problems later. I was impressed by the amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), which tries to clarify the process, rather than leaving it to a decision as and when we need one.

Having said that, there are problems with any system that we propose. If we depend on substitutes, we are under an obligation to make sure that those substitutes are known. As with Scotland and Wales, it is clear that, in a regional list system, the substitutes should be clearly defined and advertised by the parties. My understanding is the same as that of the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson)—very few people, if anybody, knew who the substitutes were when the elections took place in Northern Ireland. Whatever else we do, we must make sure that that situation is amended for future elections.

The substitute system is not so much of a problem in Wales or Scotland because the system is rather different. In Wales and Scotland, the first-past-the-post system will be used for individual constituencies and the list system for regional constituencies. STV presents a rather different problem.

I do not agree with the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman)—not so much because of social or political concerns in Northern Ireland, but because of practical concerns about the spirit of proportional representation. That spirit would not be achieved if we simply had a by-election in the simplest form in a multi-seat constituency. I completely agree with the hon. Gentleman's intention, which is a form of democratic purism, but it would not be achieved by a by-election. An individual by-election—depending on how it is organised—is unlikely to uphold the principle of proportionality in a multi-seat constituency. I am sure that some colleagues could think of a formula that would correct that, but I shall leave that to the anoraks.

Dr. Godman: What I suggest is not in any way a panacea. May I remind the hon. Gentleman that, in the Irish Republic not so long ago, the Irish Labour party won seats in by-elections in two constituencies, causing some difficulties for the Administration? There are difficulties with every kind of system. It might be democratic purism, but the concept of vacancies being filled by by-elections is long established.

Mr. Öpik: I agree with the hon. Gentleman, and in fact Liberal Democrats tend to poll better in first-past-the-post by-elections to this Chamber. It is a workable system, and I have no objections to it in principle. I am looking at it from a practical consideration of proportionality. We have a difference in judgment. We could formulate a system of by-elections in Northern Ireland that would achieve everything that the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde and the rest of us want—a fair system of filling vacancies that maintains the principle of proportionality. However, in my judgment, it is hard to see how that can happen, given the multi-seat STV process that we have in place. We must then add the secondary point of the political sensitivities in Northern Ireland, which are not quite so prevalent in, for example, the Republic of Ireland.

A system of by-elections could create problems, and we would have to be explicit about the terms. For example, the Winchester by-election was called because the original result was regarded as nullified or unsafe. The majority was two, and it was decided that more than two votes could not be reliably considered to have fallen one way or the other. If we followed the process recommended by the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde, we would have to be explicit about the context of the by-elections, and when they would be acceptable or unacceptable. Needless to say, there could be a lot of acrimony in any such situation, and we would need to fall back on objective facts. The Winchester by-election involved a great deal of time in the courts. That could create even more frictions if it were to occur in Northern Ireland.

Ministers should consider seriously the clarifications that are being proposed. If we do not have a more objective system in the Bill, it will be a recipe for trouble. It is inevitable that, if a by-election is called and we do not have objective criteria, vested interests will cause acrimony and conflict. That may obscure the true intent of the by-election, which is to fill a vacancy in the Assembly. There is an urgency now, and I hope that we can receive objective clarification of how we proceed. We must not wait for the first by-election to become a hostage to fortune and descend into potential conflict of exactly the type that we are seeking to avoid.

Mr. McGrady: Thank you, Mr. Martin, for allowing me to participate in the debate.

The question before the Committee is how properly, adequately and continually to represent to the views of the electorate. For Northern Ireland, another overriding consideration is added to that: we desire an Administration who represent a deep cross-section of our community and a system which enables minority groupings to have political expression and representation. That is the basis on which we should be approaching the structures and the way in which people are elected to them.

We have not only proportional representation, which is the foundation of such a model, but six-member constituencies, which is a high number per constituency. The purpose is to ensure the maximum possible representation of a broad political spectrum. We should keep those two principles in mind, because they should be the yardstick by which we measure the filling of vacancies. Under PR, minority grouping representation could go out of the window in by-elections because, by the mathematics of the situation, the largest party in any constituency will inevitably win every by-election. In England, there may be a swing from one side to the other, but there have not been dramatic swings in Northern Ireland since it came into existence in 1920, so representation by minority groupings would be withdrawn from the electorate.

A Member may change party allegiance during his term of office. Notwithstanding that, the electorate would still have elected a person on a party ticket. If allegiance were transferred, that would be the fault of the representative, who would deny those who voted for him and for his party or philosophy.

On substitution, it is intriguing that participants in the Assembly elections were required in their nomination papers to nominate a maximum of six substitutes. As I recall, that was not a legal requirement, but it was a legal opportunity. The electorate could and should have made themselves aware of whether substitutes were of the same temperament or of the same political party or philosophy as the primary candidate. They made their decisions on the basis of candidates' nomination papers and their nominated substitutes, so what is the legal situation and what would it be if we made a change?

My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) said that I have already reminded him of this practical point, but I must do so again: in the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland, which are also elected by PR, it is the norm to fill a vacancy by substitution, through the nomination of the party whose representative previously occupied that elected position. Indeed, I can recall no recent by-elections. The community already accepts and operates—

Dr. Godman rose—

Rev. Ian Paisley rose—

Mr. McGrady: I give way to my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde.

Dr. Godman: I think that I was first to ask.

I readily acknowledge that my hon. Friend presents a powerful case for substitutes, but does he agree with clause 27(2)? It states:

"Such provision may be made by reference to by-elections or substitutes or such other method of filling vacancies as the Secretary of State thinks fit."

Does he think that we should we have by-elections or substitutes, not a three-options system?

Mr. McGrady: I now give way to the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley).

Rev. Ian Paisley: Although such a system may be the norm, does the hon. Gentleman agree that there has to be unanimity in the council chamber, and that, if anyone objects to not holding a by-election, he overrules the council? The hon. Gentleman will agree, because he has wide experience of local government, that holding an election, perhaps six months before the whole council went to the electorate, would throw the electorate into spending a lot of money.

10.45 am

Mr. McGrady: The hon. Gentleman has made a helpful contribution, which is unusual in my experience. To take the point further, in multi-party council chambers, there is usually agreement across the parties that vacancies should be filled through substitution by the party that has a vacancy. That has been the norm in local government for about a decade; there is nothing unusual or unacceptable about it, and it has cross-party support.

My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde referred to clause 27(2). I probed this matter earlier; substitutes have already been nominated in the electoral process, and his question is difficult to answer because we need clarification of the legal situation. If the current legal position is to continue, how can we make changes midstream when the electorate have already cast their votes?

There is much validity in all the arguments about filling vacancies, but I draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that we are basing our decision on the special circumstances of Northern Ireland. We are endeavouring to achieve the greatest participation by the greatest number of parties and philosophies. The tenor of the Bill is based on cross-community, cross-party support for the way forward. In that context, substitution, as predicated by the electoral process, is probably best, although I hope that there will be evolution as time goes on.

Mr. McNamara: I thank you, Mr. Martin, for calling me to speak after my hon. Friend the Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady), not after the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik). I woke up this morning saying, "X is equal to minus B, plus or minus the square root of B squared, minus 4AC, all over 2A—or is it?" I did not want to go back to using squared paper.

Mr. Öpik: The hon. Gentleman's membership card is in the post.

Mr. McNamara: I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman means a Mensa membership. I can remember mensa, mensam, mensae, mensa, but that is thanks to the Irish Christian Brothers, not the academicals attended by the hon. Gentleman.

My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) demolished his own case. He considered all the examples and everything that had been said, and was left hanging on to the straw of what happens in the Irish Republic. There is considerable difference between what happens in the Irish Republic and what is happening in Northern Ireland. First, people in the Republic vote for a sovereign Government, not for a devolved Assembly. The second and more important difference is that, by and large, candidates in the Republic of Ireland accept the political institutions and the allegiances to, and sovereignty of, the state. That does not apply in Northern Ireland, and the agreement recognises that in its references to citizenship.

In our electoral system, parties divide on a class or ideological basis—if one is able to talk in those terms nowadays—and, especially in Northern Ireland, according to allegiances. The proportional system was introduced in Northern Ireland specifically to allow allegiances, and differences of opinion within those allegiances, to be adequately represented. As my hon. Friend the Member for South Down has said, if we change to a system of by-elections, the majority in a particular constituency could take the day. I shall refer only obliquely and briefly to last night's debate, Mr. Martin. If that were to happen, it would mean challenging the acceptance of the whole basis of the d'Hondt system.

That brings us back to the question whether a person in the new Northern Ireland Assembly should be able to cross the Floor, to change party or to change designation if that would upset the arrangements under which the elections took place. The electorate vote for candidates for a particular purpose. People vote for the Democratic Unionist party, the Social Democratic and Labour party, the Ulster Unionist party or the Alliance party knowing where that party stands on constitutional, social, political and economic matters, and believing that, if the successful candidate died, someone from the list of substitutes would take that person's place on the basis of his allegiances and his known stance.

If we do not have substitutes and if we give the Secretary of State the discretion provided in the Bill—although she will have to bring the orders before the House for resolution—we shall be leaving matters up in the air. The most sensible thing to do is for the Secretary of State to adopt the proposition of my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock either in a new clause or a new schedule outlining the specific means of substitution. We should also specify what should happen if a person crosses the Floor or changes his political allegiance.

The position in Northern Ireland is different. People are elected not only for their innate qualities—I am sure that that applies to every Member of this august Assembly—but for their political allegiances and their understanding of how that can affect matters in the overall body of the Assembly. That is of the utmost importance.

Dr. Godman: I have never denied the strength of the case put by my hon. Friends the Members for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) and for South Down (Mr. McGrady). I am sorry that my hon. Friend for Hull, North thinks that my view that the electorate should reign supreme hangs by a straw. I think that he was referring to the example, which I used to strengthen my case, of what happens in the Republic. Does my hon. Friend think that the reference to by-elections in clause 27(2) or the phrase should be deleted?

Mr. McNamara: I think that both should be deleted. I suggest that the Secretary of State, either in a new clause or in a new schedule—the latter is probably the best place—should outline the precise system and should say how substitution should be treated when a person crosses the floor. It is important that the electorate should not be misled. My hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde said that I do not believe that the people are sovereign. I hope that he will support my ten-minute Bill on Wednesday, which will show that the people are sovereign on membership of the House. However, we are talking about a devolved Assembly that will be elected, we hope, for a fixed period. People will know what is happening and will seek to ensure that their views are represented in a particular way. That is best achieved by a system of substitutes, and I hope that my right hon. Friend will table an amendment in the other place to meet the points raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock and others.

Mr. Paul Murphy: The debate, which was initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), has been interesting and useful. Schedule 14 to the Bill provides that the New Northern Ireland Assembly (Elections) Order 1998 remains in force after the appointed day. If a vacancy occurred, it would be filled by a substitute from the list submitted by a candidate at the 25 June elections.

Much of the debate has centred on the principle of substitutes versus by-elections. During the consideration of the previous Bill dealing with this matter, there was no doubt that a system of substitutes must inevitably be the one we use. I agree with the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson), who said that, for the system of elections to the Assembly, there is no real alternative to the use of substitutes in order to maintain proportionality and the important cross-community aspects of the Assembly. The Government propose to ensure that the substitute system remains.

My hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock wanted more detail included in the Bill. His amendment refers to registered political parties. We shall see what impact the Registration of Political Parties Bill has on Northern Ireland. We shall have to consult political parties in Northern Ireland on that matter.

We can make any necessary changes to the system of substitution in future through an amendment to the New Northern Ireland Assembly (Elections) Order 1998, to which the hon. Member for Belfast, East referred. Under the provisions of schedule 14, that will continue to apply to elections to the Assembly. I propose to discuss this matter further with the parties, because I know that they regard it as an important issue. There is the matter of by-elections being held if substitutes die or do not wish to take up their place. We shall have further consultation on that. It may require changes, although not necessarily to the Bill.

Mr. Peter Robinson: The Minister referred to by-elections and to the substitute system. What was in the Government's mind when they added the rider "or such other method of filling vacancies as the Secretary of State thinks fit"?

Mr. Murphy: That is exactly why we need to consult further. It is unclear. We should consider how we deal with by-elections if a substitute does not want to take up his seat, dies or moves away. Because of the lack of clarity, we need to talk with parties in Northern Ireland. Changes could be made by order and not necessarily by amendments to the Bill. I ask my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Mackinlay: I hope to hear further news from the Minister over the summer. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 27 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 28

DISQUALIFICATION

Rev. Ian Paisley: I beg to move amendment No. 93, in clause 28, page 14, leave out lines 32 to 34.

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 21, in page 14, leave out lines 38 to 41.

Rev. Ian Paisley: The amendment deals with an interest that Northern Ireland and its people expressly have, in that Ministers of the Crown, as they may well be called under the new system, may also be nominated by the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic and take their seats in the Senate of the Irish Republic. It is not consistent that a Minister of the Crown in one part of the United Kingdom should take a seat in the Senate.

It being Eleven o'clock, THE FIRST DEPUTY CHAIRMAN interrupted the proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

First World War (Executions)

11 am

The Minister for the Armed Forces (Dr. John Reid): With permission, I will make a statement about executions of soldiers and others in the first world war.

I doubt whether anyone who has not gone through the awesome experience of war can ever truly imagine its effects on the emotions of human beings. Some 9 million troops from all sides died during the great war. Almost 1 million British and Empire soldiers fell, heroes to their nations and a testimony to the awfulness of war.

We rightly remember them still, not only on the 11th of November, but in ceremonies throughout the year and throughout the globe. Today, I am sure that I am joined by the whole House in once again paying tribute to the courage and fortitude of all who served from throughout Britain and the Empire.

For some of our soldiers and their families, however, there has been neither glory nor remembrance. Just over 300 of them died at the hands not of the enemy, but of firing squads from their own side. They were shot at dawn, stigmatised and condemned—a few as cowards, most as deserters. The nature of those deaths and the circumstances surrounding them have long been a matter of contention. Therefore, last May, I said that we would look again at their cases.

The review has been a long and complicated process, and I have today placed a summary in the Library of the House. I will outline some salient features.

Between 4 August 1914 and 31 March 1920, approximately 20,000 personnel were convicted of military offences under the British Army Act for which the death penalty could have been awarded. That does not include civilian capital offences such as murder. Of those 20,000, something over 3,000 were actually sentenced to death. Approximately 90 per cent. of them escaped execution. They had their sentences commuted by their commanders in chief.

The remainder, those executed for a military offence, number some 306 cases in all. That is just 1 per cent. of those tried for a capital offence, and 10 per cent. of those actually sentenced to death. Those 300 or so cases can be examined, because the records were preserved. In virtually all other cases, the records were destroyed. It is the cases of those 300 that many hon. Members, notably my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), and others outside the House, including the Royal British Legion, have asked us to reconsider with a view to some form of blanket pardon.

Let me make it plain that we cannot and do not condone cowardice, desertion, mutiny or assisting the enemy—then or now. They are all absolutely inimical to the very foundation of our armed forces. Without military discipline, the country could not be defended, and that is never more important than in times of war.

However, the circumstances of the first world war, and the long-standing controversy about the executions, justify particular consideration. We have therefore reviewed every aspect of the cases. We have considered the legal basis for the trials—field general courts martial. The review has confirmed that procedures for the courts martial were correct, given the law as it stood at the time.

[Dr. John Reid]

The review also considered medical evidence. Clearly, if those who were executed could be medically examined now, it might be judged that the effects of their trauma meant that some should not have been considered culpable; but we cannot examine them now. We are left with only the records, and in most cases there is no implicit or explicit reference in the records to nervous, or other psychological or medical, disorders. Moreover, while it seems reasonable to assume that medical considerations may have been taken into account in the 90 per cent. of cases where sentences were commuted, there is no direct evidence of that, either, as almost all the records of those commuted cases have long since been destroyed.

However frustrating, the passage of time means that the grounds for a blanket legal pardon on the basis of unsafe conviction just do not exist. We have therefore considered the cases individually.

A legal pardon, as envisaged by some, could take one of three forms: a free pardon, a conditional pardon, or a statutory pardon. We have given very serious consideration to this matter. However, the three types of pardon have one thing in common—for each individual case, there must be some concrete evidence for overturning the decision of a legally constituted court, which was charged with examining the evidence in those serious offences.

I have personally examined one third of the records—approximately 100 personal case files. It was a deeply moving experience. Regrettably, many of the records contain little more than the minimum prescribed for this type of court martial—a form recording administrative details and a summary—not a transcript—of the evidence. Sometimes it amounts only to one or two handwritten pages.

I have accepted legal advice that, in the vast majority of cases, there is little to be gleaned from the fragments of the stories that would provide serious grounds for a legal pardon. Eighty years ago, when witnesses were available and the events were fresh in their memories, that might have been a possibility, but the passage of time has rendered it well-nigh impossible in most cases.

So, if we were to pursue the option of formal, legal pardons, the vast majority, if not all, of the cases would be left condemned either by an accident of history which has left us with insufficient evidence to make a judgment, or, even where the evidence is more extensive, by a lack of sufficient evidence to overturn the original verdicts. In short, most would be left condemned, or in some cases re-condemned, 80 years after the event.

I repeat here what I said last May when I announced the review—that we did not wish, by addressing one perceived injustice, to create another. I wish to be fair to all, and, for that reason I do not believe that pursuing possible individual formal legal pardons for a small number, on the basis of impressions from the surviving evidence, will best serve the purpose of justice or the sentiment of Parliament. The point is that now, 80 years after the events and on the basis of the evidence, we cannot distinguish between those who deliberately let down their country and their comrades in arms and those who were not guilty of desertion or cowardice.

Current knowledge of the psychological effects of war, for example, means that we now accept that some injustices may have occurred. Suspicions cannot be completely allayed by examination of the sparse records. We have therefore decided also to reject the option of those who have urged us to leave well alone and to say nothing. To do nothing, in the circumstances, would be neither compassionate nor humane.

Today, there are four things that we can do in this House, which sanctioned and passed the laws under which these men were executed. First, with the knowledge now available to us, we can express our deep sense of regret at the loss of life. There remain only a very few of our fellow countrymen who have any real understanding or memory of life and death in the trenches and on the battlefields of the first world war. This year marks the 80th anniversary of the end of the war, and we are recalling and remembering the conditions of that war, and all those who endured them, both those who died at the hands of the enemy, and those who were executed. We remember, too, those who did their awful duty in the firing squads.

Secondly, in our regret, and as we approach a new century, let us remember that pardon implies more than legality and legal formality. Pardon involves understanding, forgiveness, tolerance and wisdom. I trust that hon. Members will agree that, while the passage of time has distanced us from the evidence and the possibility of distinguishing guilt from innocence, and has rendered the formality of pardon impossible, it has also cast great doubt on the stigma of condemnation.

If some men were found wanting, it was not because they all lacked courage, backbone or moral fibre. Among those executed were men who had bravely volunteered to serve their country. Many had given good and loyal service. In a sense, those who were executed were as much victims of the war as the soldiers and airmen who were killed in action, or who died of wounds or disease, like the civilians killed by aerial or naval bombardment, or like those who were lost at sea. As the 20th century draws to a close, they all deserve to have their sacrifice acknowledged afresh. I ask hon. Members to join me in recognising those who were executed for what they were—the victims, with millions of others, of a cataclysmic and ghastly war.

Thirdly, we hope that others outside the House will recognise all that, and that they will consider allowing the missing names to be added to books of remembrance and war memorials throughout the land.

Finally, there is one other thing that we can do as we look forward to a new millennium. The death penalty is still enshrined in our military law for five offences, including misconduct in action and mutiny. I can tell the House that Defence Ministers will invite Parliament to abolish the death penalty for military offences in the British armed forces in peace and in war. [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."]

There are deeply held feelings about the executions. Eighty years after those terrible events, we have tried to deal with a sensitive issue as fairly as possible for all those involved. In remembrance of those who died in the war, the poppy fields of Flanders became a symbol for the shattered innocence and the shattered lives of a lost generation. May those who were executed, with the many, many others who were victims of war, finally rest in peace. Let all of us who have inherited the world that followed remember with solemn gratitude, the sacrifices of those who served that we might live in peace.

Mr. Keith Simpson (Mid-Norfolk): I thank the Minister for generously allowing me a copy of his statement and the background information well in advance. He spoke with great understanding and sensitivity about a war that took place 80 years ago. There is probably no man or woman in the House whose father, grandfather or great-grandfather did not serve in the first world war. Many will have been wounded or killed. I was in the minority; both my grandfathers came back from the war. We should remember that a generation of Members of Parliament also served in that war, with great suffering. I think in particular of both the Labour Prime Minister Clement Attlee and the Conservative Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

The British soldiers who were executed during that war have been subject to great debate over the past 80 years. The Minister rightly pointed out that there have been numerous internal and external Government inquiries. Before 1994, all Governments refused to release the case files and other documentation for public access, thereby creating a suspicion in some people's minds of a cover-up. I hope that the Minister's statement will leave no suspicion of a conspiracy or cover-up on a highly sensitive issue.

The matter has recently been brought to a head by the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), who has pursued it since 1992 with early-day motions and a private Member's Bill. All hon. Members recognise the hon. Gentleman's great interest in the matter. In February 1993, when he was Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) rejected the hon. Gentleman's call for a pardon for those who were executed. Members who were here will recall that my right hon. Friend spoke with a great deal of sensitivity, advancing arguments similar to those of the Minister for the Armed Forces.

My right hon. Friend's Government's decision was based on a detailed, two-stage study of the files—first selective, then comprehensive—between 1992 and 1994 by the Army historical branch of the Ministry of Defence. I pay tribute to the men and women of that branch for their hard work in difficult circumstances. Their studies reached basically the same conclusions on legal and medical evidence that the Minister has outlined today.

On 16 September 1995, the office of the then Leader of the Opposition—now Prime Minister—announced that a future Labour Government would consider the matter sympathetically. The Minister, when in opposition, signed an early-day motion calling for a review. In May 1997, the Minister announced his review, and he has taken a personal interest in the matter, considering the cases himself and holding discussions with many legal and medical experts and historians.

The Minister's conclusions are virtually the same as those of the previous Government, but there are two differences. First, he has pushed for greater transparency. The previous Government began to move towards that, but he has continued it, and we should all welcome the move. Secondly, he has concluded, as he put to the House today, that, having reviewed the evidence, he faced three options. The first was a legal pardon, the second was the status quo and the third was an expression of regret.

Like previous Governments, the Minister has rejected the legal pardon. He finds the status quo unacceptable, and has opted for an expression of regret. I fear that the Minister may not satisfy two perhaps large groups of opinion. I may be assuming in advance the views of the hon. Member for Thurrock, who I hope, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will be lucky enough to catch your eye, but he has, of course, always argued for a pardon. Equally, there are those, including me and others, who believe that the status quo—leave history alone—is perhaps the option that we should still consider.

The status quo is not about indifference or callousness; I do not think that anyone who has looked at these questions can believe that. I have to declare a personal interest here: as a military historian 20 years ago, I interviewed dozens of surviving soldiers of the first world war on this issue and many others. There is a recognition of the impossibility of rewriting history. Among British soldiers at the time—I know that the Minister found this when he interviewed some of the very few surviving veterans—to say the least, there was an ambivalent attitude to the whole question of executing soldiers for desertion or mutiny.

Expressions of regret can become so generalised as to appear meaningless. I am not by any means implying that the Minister is trying to do that, but my fear is that we will end up setting a precedent. Last year, the Prime Minister expressed regret over the Irish potato famine, an action which many people agreed with. However, we have to consider: where does this begin and end?

I say in all seriousness: are we to consider giving expressions of regret for those people who were executed in the highlands after the battle of Culloden by forces of the Crown? Are we to express regret for those people who were executed by forces of the Crown after the Indian mutiny? Those are questions that involve our looking back into history and making value judgments. My fear is that the Minister's statement has not drawn a line under this issue.

Every hon. Member will stand in awe of those men and women who endured so much, so that we today can debate this issue. In particular, I stand in awe of all those hundreds of thousands of men and women who, in the face of the most appalling circumstances, controlled and conquered their fear and did their duty, so that we might live in a democracy, as we do today.

Dr. Reid: I thank the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) for what I think was a cautious, though at times cynical, welcome of the statement; perhaps I misinterpreted it. I join him in thanking the Army historical branch and the services for all their work. I want to put it on the record that, despite the rumours that accompany such reviews from time to time, there was no resistance whatever to a full and transparent, academic and compassionate review of these cases from the forces, which have been of immeasurable assistance to me in attempting, after all these years, to do justice to a complicated issue.

Of course I join the hon. Gentleman in recognising the sacrifices of all those who died, which I recognised at the top of my statement. We in the House owe an immeasurable debt of gratitude to those who went over the top, fought in the battlefields and made the ultimate sacrifice for their country. We promised at the end of that awful war that, through the generations, we would not forget them, and we have not done so. Today we pay tribute to them as well.

However, I did point out that there were certain people—306 people—whose families had suffered a stigma for eight decades. I feel that, in the light of what we know, it was the view of the House as a whole that I was expressing when I said that that stigma should be lifted, and that those people should be recognised as victims. [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."]

May I deal with the point that the hon. Gentleman raised about not rewriting history? I did not use that expression—it was used by the previous Government—because I do not believe it. History has two meanings. One is what actually happened. Of course we cannot help what actually happened, or change it, but history has another meaning, which, as an historian, I recognise and which I thought that he, as an historian, would recognise as well. It is the interpretation of what happened.

In all fields of life, we constantly revise our interpretation of what happened. I argue, as a human being as well as a politician, and partly as an historian, that not only is it open to us to reinterpret the events, but, in a decent civilised society, we have an obligation to reinterpret those events. That is what have I tried to do.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned various other executions throughout history. I think that there is a difference. These events occurred within living memory—this century. I think that I am right in saying that, in the period before 1914, as far back as the Napoleonic wars, there were no more than two executions under these same Acts. From 1918 until today, I do not think that there have been any more than three. In the whole of the second world war, I think that there were three executions for mutiny and one for a capital offence which was not a military offence. Therefore, these events are specific—I think that they are ring-fenced. The conditions and nature of the first world war distinguish it from all other wars.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman has read of the awful conditions, the extremes of cold and heat, the mud, the vermin, the lice, the cacophony of shellfire, the amazing barrage under which human beings were put, whose batteries of courage were constantly being tested to the limit. The conditions of that war do make it somewhat different.

On the question of the individuals versus the group, I was asked to review these cases as a whole, and I have done so. I said, not only last May but in the debate in the House, which I have here, that that would not necessarily mean a legal formal pardon, but, where there are apparent or possible injustices within living memory, it is the obligation of Government, particularly when people were involved in a life-and-death struggle, to do their best to express the sentiment of the House and the will of the nation.

If I have one wish, it is that, whatever the legal formality today, we do indeed create the conditions in which, as a nation, we can say to all those who died, including the executed soldiers and others, "May you rest in peace now." May this case also rest in peace: after all these decades, I believe that we have now finally done justice to the obligation to examine it and to dispense our view, and the public view, as fully as we possibly could.

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay (Thurrock) rose—

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackinlay: I sincerely thank the Minister for all his efforts in this regard, the attention that he has given to this matter, and his statement today. I couple that with thanks for the work of many people, but particularly His Honour Judge Anthony Babington, Julian Putkowski, who did research work in this regard, which has assisted all of us and promoted our interest in this issue, and, last but not least, Ernest Thurthle, who was a Labour Member of Parliament in the 1920s and 1930s and who alone raised this issue. We should remember him today, because he did a great deal in exposing the fact that the British establishment suppressed these documents for three quarters of a century.

I hope that the Minister will understand if I reserve my position in one regard. I think that there could have been a formal legal pardon, but there may be a legislative opportunity for me or others to raise the matter in future. However, it would be churlish and unrealistic not to acknowledge that what the Minister has said is a major statement by the Government, which I deeply appreciate and which I know will be appreciated by the families of the men involved, the people who have campaigned for them and the few remaining veterans of the great war. They, late in the evening of life, will know that not only do the people support the pardons—I think that they have done so all along—but that Parliament has now reflected the fact that they should be acknowledged as victims of the great war along with the many other millions.

In response to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson), there was not an option to leave the matter alone. That is precisely what the British establishment wanted to do for 75 years. History needs to be written with clarity and precision, and I hope that the Minister feels that, with his statement, he has written a chapter of history with clarity and precision this morning.

With your indulgence, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to point out that my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) nudged me to draw attention to the fact that, at the very moment when the Minister was expressing regret, it was 11 minutes past 11. I thought that that added to a profoundly moving statement.

This certainly closes a chapter on a very unhappy episode. As we come to the end of a troubled century, when we teach our schoolchildren about the miscalculations and selfishness of politicians in general, we can at least take some pride this morning in the fact that the ordinary British soldier and the other victims of the great war have been given the long overdue acknowledgement that they were victims of the decisions of selfish people. I hope that we can salute them this morning.

Dr. Reid: I thank my hon. Friend for his welcome and his kind words. I take this opportunity to thank Judge Anthony Babington, not only for his pioneering work in this generation but for the assistance that he gave me when I met him. I also thank others, including Julian Putkowski for assisting me to clarify my own thoughts on this matter. Of course, I did not meet Ernest Thurthle, but I became very familiar with his thoughts and works as I worked through the review. To that list I would add my hon. Friend himself, who has played a pioneering role in the last decade. He has taken an interest in all things military in the House, as well as in the soldiers and others who were executed.

There is not much that I can add, other than to say that, as I read the case files, I appreciated the nature of war. No one could remain unmoved who reads about the conditions endured by the soldiers who died in the first world war, who went over the top and made the sacrifice, and who had what Napoleon regarded as the main characteristic of a good soldier—not courage, but endurance. I certainly did not. Some of the words come back to haunt me. The last words of one young man who was executed were, "What will my mother say?" Such instances cannot leave us unmarked.

I do not believe that it is a sign of fortitude or strength to ignore compassion. Compassion, as exemplified by millions of soldiers throughout the centuries and throughout this nation, is an integral part of fortitude. We are all the stronger for having compassion—defiance in defeat, certainly, but, as Churchill once said, magnanimity in victory. Those of us who have been fortunate enough to have the victory of life, and those who were fortunate enough, despite all their sacrifices, to come back, will share with the House the magnanimity and understanding of those who were executed during that terrible war.

Mr. Mike Hancock (Portsmouth, South): I echo the sentiments of the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson), and thank the Minister for his courtesy in making this statement. I doubt whether a single hon. Member who heard the Minister's words could fail to be moved by what he had to say and the sincerity with which he said it. From the tone he used, I suspect that he was greatly disappointed in the words that he had to utter.

The statement contained the phrase that "formality of pardon" was impossible. I am sure that the Minister will agree that, when he replied to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay), he used the words of compassion. I am sure that most men, women and children will think that compassion could have been shown to the 300 men and their families, and that the formality of pardon was not an impossibility. They will think that a society which, with the ability to look back and say that things would have been so different today, could have shown the compassion necessary to ensure that the pardon was not an impossibility. I am sure the Minister will agree that countless millions of people will not understand why it is impossible for the House to grant the pardon.

I am sure that every voice in the land will echo the sentiments that the Minister expressed in going over what these men went through. He recognised that the majority of them were volunteers and had been in action for a long time. He eloquently exposed the fear experienced by anyone placed in real danger, but these men were in danger day in and day out, week in and week out, for years in some instances.

The nation owes it to those men to show the compassion that is needed. Perhaps, just perhaps, some were guilty of the offences in question, but pardoning them in order to pardon them all is a price that the nation would willingly pay in order, once and for all, to lift this stain from our nation's military history. I hope that, even now, the words of the hon. Member for Thurrock will be taken up by other hon. Members, and that we shall introduce legislation that will finally remove this stain from our history.

It gives me great pleasure on behalf of my party to thank the Minister for his honest endeavours and determination in bringing us to this stage today, but please do not let this be the end of the story.

Dr. Reid: The hon. Gentleman raised three points to which I shall respond. To pardon a few, or one or two—I have not said that, in my view, the evidence would have been sufficient for such a pardon; it might have been sufficient to consider it—thus in effect condemning 300, or 290, would not have been the compassionate response.

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): All or none.

Dr. Reid: As the hon. Gentleman's hon. and learned Friend says, it is all or none.

Secondly, the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) believes that some people will not understand. I think that they will understand perfectly, and I shall explain it in simple terms to the hon. Gentleman.

The people who died throughout this century in the British armed forces died fighting to preserve democracy. The basis of democracy is the rule of law. If any politician were to overturn not only several hundred years of precedent but the basis of that democracy by setting aside the belief that there has to be evidence for a conviction; or if he did so on a political whim or prejudice or on a suspicion, no matter how sincere, it would undermine the very basis of law and democracy for which so many millions have fought and died.

Therefore, I do not believe that it would have been open to me, without transgressing the very values for which so many service men have fought and died, to throw aside all legal precedent and make a judgment on the basis of what I believed rather than on the evidence. I think that that will be understood—it is understood in the House, and I think that it is understood across the country. But, short of that, I believe that I have done what the House would think is right.

The Government have not taken action and said what we said only because we thought that the House would think that it right to do so or because of this or that pressure group, but because we think it is the right thing to do. We have expressed regret and the view that—like all those who died—those people were victims of that terrible, terrible war. We have asked that the stigma of the executions be lifted and that those names be added to books of remembrance and memorials. We have also on this day announced that we will be inviting the House to abolish the death penalty. I think that those measures will be warmly welcomed by hon. Members and by the public.

I hope—for the benefit of the families and those who were executed—that we can now genuinely say, "Let them rest in peace". If individuals wish to petition on individual cases, I have not debarred anyone from doing so. My own belief is that they would not do a service for the whole or, I suspect, for the individual case—which, because of a lack of evidence, could end up with a re-condemnation. Such an outcome is what I tried to avoid, and I think—and hope—that the generality of the statement of regret will be warmly welcomed by the public.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. We are considering a deeply moving matter, but the House will appreciate that I must protect the main business of the House. I shall call other hon. Members, but remind them that they must put a question to the Minister. That question should be brief. I shall try to call as many hon. Members as I can before we return to the main business of the House.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): May I join in thanking the Secretary of State—and particularly my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay)—for the very sensitive and imaginative way in which he has dealt with the matter? However, are we not speaking about a little bit more than the victims of war? Are we not speaking about the victims of the law, passed by Parliament, that conscripted young men and women who did not wish to fight and told them—under the then military code—"If you do not kill under orders, we will execute you"? They were victims of Parliament and of war, although the two were interconnected in that case. May I ask him also to recognise that the real victims today—for those who were shot have gone—are the families who have the anguish of knowing that their fathers, grandfathers, uncles and great-uncles died as convicted of cowardice?

In the light of Archbishop Tutu's institution of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission to bring out the truth and allow the past to rest in peace, could not the word "pardon" be used to recognise that—for the benefit of the families—those people really were not guilty of the military offence for which they were sentenced to death? I ask the Secretary of State to consider that proposal in the light of the families who suffer, still to this day, for what happened to those who went before.

Dr. Reid: I thank my right hon. Friend, especially for referring to me as the Secretary of State—but the reshuffle is not until next week.

My right hon. Friend raised some very serious points. I did use the word "pardon"—I used it several times, both in my statement and subsequently—and explained that it is more than a legal formality: it also means compassion and forgiveness. I hope that that has been noted by the families themselves.

Many of those who were executed were not conscripts but volunteers. I specifically drew attention to that fact. I specifically drew attention also to the House's role, by saying that it was appropriate that the Government are making the statement in the House that sanctioned the legislation—the Army Act 1914—under which the people were executed. I made that point because, ultimately, responsibility rests in this place. It is therefore appropriate that we should have made our expression of regret here.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I join, on behalf of my colleagues, in thanking the Minister for his clear statement and for underlining in his last reply the fact that many of those people were volunteers—among whom were the men of Ulster. I suggest that, in compassion, the House should reflect on the difference between calm debates in this place—where we sometimes use passion—and the battlefield. When we think of the victims of those days, perhaps we should remember that their officers also were victims, having to uphold military discipline in extreme circumstances. Does the Minister share my belief—it is also my plea—that those who have been so treated in the past will now be restored, even in books of remembrance and war memorials, so that, across the nation, no one may withhold recognition of the pardon that we are seeking to make?

Dr. Reid: Yes, indeed. The hon. Gentleman speaks for a part of the United Kingdom that suffered and sacrificed on a par with any in our history. Ulstermen stood in the vanguard of the efforts of the British armed forces in the first world war—not only at the Somme but at other horrific events in that war. It is not in my power to direct or to dictate, but I do hope that their names will be added to war memorials and books of remembrance, as that will be a symbol of the lifting of the stigma of execution.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned the officers—some of whom, too, were executed. The sentences of 89 per cent. of those who were sentenced to death were commuted by the higher chain of command—which should give pause for thought to those who claim that executions were merely a rubber-stamp process performed by a bloodthirsty officer corps. That is not borne out by reality. Although evidence from the files is missing, there are sufficient grounds for us to believe that great consideration was given to executions, and that—despite the need for discipline and to ensure that, for the benefit of the many, there were executions when such offences occurred—a great deal of compassion was shown throughout the chain of command.

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): With one other hon. Member, I represent the House on the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. As I walk up and down those rows of graves—many of 16, 17, 18, 19-year-olds—I try to imagine the horror that must have gone through their minds at what they saw. It is not surprising that many of them deserted. Perhaps many more did not do so only because they died so quickly that they did not have a chance to appreciate the situation from which they would never escape.

I thank the Minister for his statement. On behalf of all those who now rest in Commonwealth war graves, I ask him whether he will now write to other Commonwealth countries and ask them to include the names of the comrades of those who died in that dreadful war on war memorials and war graves.

Dr. Reid: I thank my hon. Friend, and pay tribute to the work done by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. Upkeep of those graves—particularly in France and Belgium, but elsewhere on the globe—is a tribute to the depth of feeling that we still have for all those who died in that war. She will know that no one who has walked through France and Belgium and seen the acres of white crosses around Arras, the Somme and the Ypres salient can come away without being profoundly affected by the experience.

As for the wider implications for the Commonwealth, I assure my hon. Friend that we have kept in touch with our Commonwealth colleagues as this issue has progressed. It is not within my power to direct other sovereign nations, but the remarks I have made today and the sentiments I have expressed were for all those who served in the British and Empire forces, and I have no doubt that they will be noted by our Commonwealth colleagues. I am sure that the whole House would welcome it if they decided that a similar course of action was appropriate in their case.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): I, too, welcome today's statement by the Minister. I note the dignified manner in which he presented it, and the sombre mood in which the whole House has responded.

In thanking the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) for his tireless work on this case, may I say, also as an historian, that I do not believe that we can leave history alone? As an historian specialising in the history of the first world war, when teaching that history to youngsters who are far more accustomed to the virtual reality of Hollywood, I have discovered that the reality of man's inhumanity to man was something that they found extremely emotional. Perhaps in the process they recognised that we have to consider all our actions in society, and what they mean to all of us.

On the question of names being added to books of remembrance and war memorials, is it anticipated that that will happen by Remembrance Sunday this year? As a Scottish Member of Parliament, I am sure that the Minister will be keen to ensure that action is taken in respect of the Scottish national war memorial at Edinburgh castle.

Dr. Reid: I thank the hon. Lady. I cannot add anything to her comments about the first world war. The matter of war memorials and books of remembrance is not within my power to dictate, but I hope that the sentiments expressed in the House today are shared by those who do have power in such matters. I was pleased to read recently, as no doubt did the hon. Lady, that those responsible for the book of remembrance in Edinburgh castle have already decided to take action. I hope that their action is adopted as a more widespread practice.

I should add that, although we are concentrating on one aspect today, as I said in my statement and as I know the House feels, we remember and will never, ever forget the sacrifices made by those who died from the bullets or the bayonets of the enemy—those who found within themselves, in those awful conditions, the fortitude and courage to overcome fear, which afflicts all of us, and to go forward, sometimes into a hail of fire. We remember them today, as we shall on 11 November.

Mr. Kevin McNamara (Hull, North): In welcoming my hon. Friend's statement, and acknowledging the work of my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock, I should like also to recall the work of our former right hon. Friend and Member for Mansfield, Don Concannon. When he was first elected, he tried, desperately banging his head against the wall of the Ministry of Defence, to resurrect even the idea of re-examining these cases.

The most important and significant thing that my hon. Friend the Minister said today came in those few sentences at the end of his statement, when he ensured that this would never happen again. May I say how much I welcome his statement that no longer will capital punishment be seen as a punishment within the British military code? By that decision, we shall never again make any of the sort of mistakes that may well have been made in the past.

Dr. Reid: I join my hon. Friend in paying tribute to the endurance over a long period of Don Concannon, who, if I remember correctly, was a former guardsman and who took a great personal as well as academic interest in these matters.

I thank my hon. Friend for his comments about the abolition of the death penalty. Lest there be any doubt, let me make it plain that that has not been imposed on the armed forces; they have been working on this matter and have given it their full consideration, and they are at one with Ministers on that point—indeed, the recommendation came from the armed forces themselves. I am pleased to have been able to make that announcement today. It is appropriate in the context of the subject that we are discussing and hon. Members' interest in it.

Rev. Ian Paisley (North Antrim): I thank the Minister for his words today. This has been a moving time in the House. I thank him also for the tribute he paid to Ulstermen, especially those who fought at the battle of the Somme, after which there was hardly a home in the locality in which I work in which there were not victims. I thank him also for the way he put his remarks today; I want to assure him of that.

There is one note I want to strike—that it will appear strange to many people in Northern Ireland that the House can find a way to let terrorists out of prison by law, through a political act, whereas we cannot have a political pardon for the cases being discussed today. Why can there not be complete coverage, so that all can say that those men will rest in peace? I was touched when the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) spoke of the awesomeness of visiting the cemeteries, and by the Minister's words, echoing those of a victim: "What will my mother say?" I think that we will do good to everyone if we find a political way completely to lift the stigma through a pardon.

Dr. Reid: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his words. He has, for many years now, been a staunch supporter of the idea of the rule of law, and I believe that, when he thinks the matter through, he will not want me to dispense with the rule of law in coming to a political judgment. There is a clear distinction between the expression of regret and the sentiments that we have expressed today, and anything that has ever been expressed in respect of those convicted of terrorist offences. In addition, those men have not been pardoned in any way. The comparison is not a fair one; nor do I believe that it is one which the House would want to pursue, because it is not in accord with the sentiments expressed today.

I have no difficulty in reiterating, and joining the hon. Gentleman in acknowledging, the vast sacrifices made by the men of Ulster—it was men—during the first world war. The loyalty they showed to the United Kingdom throughout that period should not and will not be forgotten. I am sure that it is at the back of our minds as we deal with contemporary developments, and that it occasionally comes to the forefront of our minds when we consider the role of Ulster and the north of Ireland within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bill Michie (Sheffield, Heeley): I thank my hon. Friend for his statement. I share the view that none of us can understand the trauma that those soldiers experienced. I learned of that at second hand from my father when I was a child. He was in uniform throughout the war, and lost many of his comrades and two of his brothers. I am sure that, if he were alive today, he would be overjoyed by the statement. Will the Minister explain what communication will take place between his Department and the families concerned?

Dr. Reid: I thank my hon. Friend for his words. The number of families that have been in correspondence with me is relatively small—only 12—and I am writing to them today enclosing a copy of the review and my statement to the House. I shall express the hope that, by extending our feelings of regret, by asking that the names be added to war memorials and books of remembrance, by recognising that those men were, like many others, the victims of a terrible war, and by announcing the abolition of the death penalty, we have left to rest in peace the relatives about whom they feel so deeply, and lifted the stigma of execution.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): With considerable diffidence, I join other hon. Members in congratulating the Minister on his statement and the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on raising the subject so forcefully over the past year or so. I use the word "diffidence", because, among hon. Members here this morning, only the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) has served in the second world war. He may be the only person who understands to some extent what the soldiers we are discussing went through in the first world war.

I thank the Minister for recognising the context in which the executions took place: 20,000 people were convicted of offences for which they could have been sentenced to death, but only a tiny proportion of them received the death penalty. I congratulate the Minister on recognising that the command structure were not the brutish, thoughtless, careless creature that so many people think it was.

I ask the Minister to bear in mind what others at the time may have thought, rather than what we now think at this distance. I think of my grandfathers, both of whom were decorated in the first world war and returned wounded, and one of whom was a founder of the Royal British Legion. I think also of my parents, one of whom has just, thanks to the Under-Secretary, received her war medals, and their contemporaries in the last war.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. and learned Gentleman must be brief.

Mr. Garnier: I shall be. Does not granting a pardon imply guilt of the offence for which someone is pardoned? Pardoning may therefore not be the answer that many people want. Will the legislation to remove the death penalty for military offences, to which the Minister referred, be a Government Bill and a discrete Bill dealing only with that measure, or a private Member's Bill for which the Government will give time?

Dr. Reid: I do not want to test your patience, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. and learned Gentleman asked a list of questions, and I shall answer a couple of them.

I made known my views on the chain of command. Like the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson), I have spoken to several veterans. There are different views among those who served in the first world war, and I have tried to place them in context today. Without punishment of some nature for desertion, many more people might have died because of the collapse of military discipline. That certainly happened in the forces of some of our allies which did not use the death penalty.

It would be normal to use the Armed Forces Bill to abolish the death penalty. As the hon. and learned Gentleman knows, that comes before the House every five years. That is when that provision will be incorporated into military law. It has not been used in peace for many years. We have said today that Defence Ministers will be inviting the House to decide that. As it is an issue of life and death, there will presumably be a free vote, although I cannot prejudge that. All Defence Ministers will certainly vote to abolish the death penalty, and will invite our colleagues to do so.

If legislation is required to sign protocol 6, which relates to the death penalty in peace or other than in war or the imminent threat of war, that will be introduced as an amendment to legislation that will introduced long before the Armed Forces Bill is introduced. That will allow us to ratify protocol 6.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified Her Royal Assent to the following Acts:

School Standards and Framework Act 1998

Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998

Northern Ireland Bill

Again considered in Committee.

Amendment proposed: No. 93, in clause 28, page 14, leave out lines 32 to 34.—[Rev. Ian Paisley.]

Question again proposed, That the amendment be made.

12.3 pm

Rev. Ian Paisley (North Antrim): When we were interrupted by the important announcement that has just been made, I was dealing with this matter as it relates to the views of many people in Northern Ireland.

Hon. Members who do not know the constitution of the Irish Republic might like to know that there is a two-chamber system, made up of the Dail Eireann and the Senate. The Senate is a strange body, in that it is not purely elected. Many of its Members are nominated, and it is the prerogative of the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic to fill many of its seats.

It has always been the custom and political strategy of the various Governments—especially when Fianna Fail has been in power—to put prominent people from Northern Ireland into the Senate. Some Members of Parliament, including nationalist Members of Parliament and various other prominent republicans, have been put into the Senate. The Deputy First Minister designate of Northern Ireland, the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon), was nominated to the Irish Senate, but he was then elected to an Assembly in Northern Ireland and was removed from the Assembly because he had disqualified himself by accepting the nomination to the Irish Senate.

We had a very short debate on that subject when we debated the first Assembly Bill that came before the House. In fact, shortage of time prevented the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh from explaining the position in which he found himself and the resultant expense that he was put to. He has said that he is grateful that, if a similar thing happened again, he would not have that problem. Perhaps, therefore, the Deputy First Minister designate has his eye on sitting in the Senate as well. That would not help the situation in Northern Ireland. Ministers and others must choose whether they want to sit in the Assembly or in the House of Commons as part of the United Kingdom, or whether they want to be a Member of a Parliament of another state.

That leads me to the question, who will be eligible to stand for election to the Assembly? I notice that the Bill deals with that matter in such a way that those from the Irish Republic can stand for election to the Northern Ireland Assembly. I believe that those matters should not be in the Bill. It should be made plain to those who wish to take part in the Assembly that they should not be permitted to be Members of a Parliament of another state.

It would also be wrong for a Minister of the Assembly to sit in the Senate of another state. The two roles are incompatible; such a thing should not happen. The House should realise that. I do not believe that the House would tolerate it if a Minister of the House were a Member of another Parliament, even of another European Union country.

I wonder why the Bill allows such a thing to happen. I am sure that the Prime Minister—whoever it may be—in Dublin is just waiting for the opportunity to make use of the freedom that the Bill allows, because a Senate seat would be in the prerogative of the Prime Minister of the Irish Republic. The House should make it clear that people should give their loyalty to one place, not to two states.

Mr. McNamara: This might be called the Seamus Mallon clause—and perhaps it should be in honour of my hon. Friend the Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon). The important thing about the agreement and the feature that helps it to gel is the recognition of the legitimacy of both traditions within Northern Ireland. On constitutional issues, the agreement says that the parties will

"recognise the birthright of all people of Northern Ireland to identify themselves and be accepted as Irish or British, or both, as they may so choose, and accordingly confirm that their right to hold both British and Irish citizenship is accepted by both Governments and would not be affected by any future change in the status of Northern Ireland."

One wonders why the limitation applies only to the Senate of Northern Ireland and not also to its lower House. Any Irish citizen should be free to be elected to represent any area.

Rev. Ian Paisley: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McNamara: May I finish my little story, and then I shall give way?

I am reminded of a similar situation when an Irish peer with a second subsidiary title came to Britain during the recent troubles and was stopped at the point of entry because he was holding an Irish passport. When asked what he was coming to this country to do, he replied, "To legislate for the likes of you". That may not have been the most polite reply, but it illustrates the free flow that has occurred between the various institutions and the elasticity of rules that apply everywhere in these islands except in the north of Ireland.

An Irish citizen may be elected to this place and to the Dail Eireann—there is no problem with that. Therefore, why should we not recognise and welcome the lifting of the partial ban because it embodies the spirit of the agreement? It also recognises the fact that, in the past, Irish and British men and women from both communities have been members of the Senate of the Irish Republic. For example, I refer hon. Members to the late Senator Gordon Wilson and Senator John Robb—people do not have to come from the nationalist community to serve in the Senate. We should welcome the fact that that generosity has existed and resent the tardiness that resulted in the problems faced by my hon. Friend the Member for Newry and Armagh. We should welcome the clause overwhelmingly.

Mr. Temple-Morris: I welcome very much the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara), and I agree with every word he said. Although the entire Committee may not agree with him, I think that the vast majority of hon. Members do.

Clause 28(5) is a good provision and I hope that the Government will not give way on this point. As my hon. Friend said, it is a very useful clause. It also suits the philosophy of what we are endeavouring to achieve: a cross-community, co-operative view that recognises that there is another side to the argument. It is in line also with the aims of the cross-border bodies to which I wish all health and strength.

Any loss of sovereignty is surely a matter for the Republic of Ireland. In response to the claim that its acceptance of people who are not technically its own is some sort of political strategy, all I can say is that people in the Republic of Ireland have been greatly reassured by that policy. My hon. Friend mentioned the late Senator Gordon Wilson, who was a great encouragement to the people of the Republic of Ireland in terms of their attitudes to Protestants in the north of Ireland. The policy was a triumph in encouraging everyone—including many hon. Members—who had anything to do with Ireland, north and south, to continue their efforts for peace when they were discouraged for various reasons. The measure is good for the Senate and for the Assembly.

We have an interesting example of the policy in action within this building. Ever since Irish independence, the House of Lords has contained a healthy number of Irish peers. There are a number of peers of Irish extraction, although of course they sit as United Kingdom peers. That is an excellent thing, and I am sure that members of the other place would agree. The old ones who remained after 1921 have all gone, but there are members of the House of Lords and those who aspire to membership of it who are resident in the Republic of Ireland now. The Earl of Mount Charles, whom some of us know, nearly ended up as Member of the Dail, when he could easily have been in the House of Lords were it not for his father's deserved longevity.

We are dealing with the understanding between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, and between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

12.15 pm

Mr. Malcolm Moss (North-East Cambridgeshire): I shall speak to amendment No. 21, which is a probing amendment. It would delete subsection (7), which deals with the grounds for disqualifying a person from becoming a Member of the Assembly. The purpose of the amendment is to restrict membership of the Assembly to citizens of the United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland and the Commonwealth.

Given the importance of the concept of devolution to Northern Ireland, as well as to Scotland and Wales, and the need to transfer the democratic deficit to local political input, it seems strange that, under those devolution powers, we should not restrict membership of such an Assembly to people who belong to that community, thereby giving it maximum input.

Subsection (7) qualifies the disqualification rules set out in section 3 of the Act of Settlement by inserting a condition that that would be negated if a person were a citizen of the European Union. Can the Minister tell us whether the proposed measure is unique to Northern Ireland? It does not seem to be contained in the original House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975 or the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975. It may have been added at a later date, subsequent to the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1993, following the Maastricht treaty.

It would be helpful if the Minister gave the Committee some clarification of the matter, and also justified the notion of citizenship of the European Union in relation to the laws of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Öpik: I am concerned that amendment No. 93 would tie Northern Irish politics too closely to the Irish Parliament. It raises the status of a political position in the Republic of Ireland to rather more than just a job.

When we look at Northern Ireland politics under the current circumstances and in the foreseeable future, we should not ascribe more than the status of a job such as engineer to the simple act of being a Member of the Senate. Although it can be assumed that a Senator has important responsibilities in the Republic of Ireland, those responsibilities do not extend to Northern Ireland. We would give unnecessary status to the position of Irish Senator if we decided that that was grounds for exclusion from membership of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

The hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) made some good points. It is up to Dublin to decide whether to have as Senators people who actively participate in Northern Ireland politics. It is up to us to decide whether we are happy with the individual's qualifications, but we should not go as far as deciding whether he is entitled to be a Member of the Assembly on the basis of what he does, if that is not directly related to the work of the United Kingdom Parliament or Northern Ireland politics. In that context, I think that the simplest approach is to regard eligibility to be a Member of the Dublin Parliament as unrelated to eligibility to be in the Northern Ireland Parliament. On that simple basis, I would be inclined not to agree to amendment No. 93. As for amendment No. 21, I, too, will be interested to hear the Minister's clarification of the issues that have been laid out.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Tony Worthington): The amendments seek to remove the exemption from disqualification, first, of Members of the Irish Senate and, secondly, of citizens of other European Union states. I associate myself closely with the sentiments expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris). He referred to the late Senator Gordon Wilson, and I remember going to the late Senator's funeral. I found it a moving experience to be there with representatives from both north and south. Those present were, I suppose, expressing their appreciation of what Senator Wilson's life had meant. They were saying that what happened at Eniskillen was totally unacceptable both north and south of the border. The invitation to him to be a Member of the Irish Senate was a powerful expression of such sentiments.

The House of Commons has considered these matters recently. It had the opportunity to discuss the issues during the passage of the Northern Ireland (Elections) Act 1998, which included identical provisions. It would be very much in conflict with that Act if we were to accept the amendment, which we shall not.

There have been many distinguished people from Northern Ireland who have sat in the Senate in the past. The hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley) referred on several occasions to what he saw as a conflict of interest between a Minister being in the Northern Ireland Assembly and in the Senate as well. However, the amendment is not about Ministers but about disqualification from membership of the Assembly.

Rev. Ian Paisley: Is the Minister saying that if someone got into the Assembly who was a Member of the Senate he would be blocked, if he became a Minister, from continuing in the Senate? Surely the way into the Government is by election to the Assembly. If that gets someone into the Assembly and he becomes a Minister, there is no blockage set out in the Bill to keep him from being a Member of the Senate.

Mr. Worthington: I am simply addressing the amendment. The part of the clause that the hon. Gentleman is seeking to remove is one which permits someone who is a Member of the Irish Senate being also a Member of the Assembly. I was addressing the hon. Gentleman's debating point. He was referring to Ministers, rather than people wishing to be candidates for the Assembly.

Amendment No. 21 stands in the name of the official Opposition. The part of the clause to which it relates is about its being all right for citizens of other European states to be candidates. Subsection (7) is identical to the provisions that were accepted by the House of Commons in agreeing to the passage of the Northern Ireland (Elections) Act 1998. As it happens, that is in line with the law in Scotland as well. I think that that is the answer to the point made by the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss).

It is for the citizens of Northern Ireland to decide whether a particular citizen of another European Union state should represent them. We see no reason to exclude them. Accordingly, we would resist amendment No. 21 as well. The hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire asked specifically about provisions elsewhere. The provisions in the Bill are the same in this respect as those of the Scotland Bill.

Rev. Ian Paisley: The way into office in the Northern Ireland Assembly is to get elected to the Assembly. A person can get elected to the Assembly and also be a Member of the Senate of the south of Ireland. There is nothing in the Bill to say that a Minister cannot be a Member of the Senate. Let us be clear. If he is a Member of the Assembly and is not disqualified, there is nothing in the Bill to say that he cannot continue to be a Member of the Senate, if that is his position. A Minister could, under the terms of the Bill, be a Member of the Senate.

On the subject of Dail Eireann, the person would have to be elected, and people in the south of Ireland do not look in too friendly a way on candidates from the north. The hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) is popular in his constituency, but if he went across the border to Carlingford and stood for election to the Dail Eireann, I do not think that he would do well—even with all his great powers of oratory and influence.

Mr. McNamara: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Rev. Ian Paisley: The hon. Gentleman did not give way to me, but I will be decent and give way to him in a minute, if he just holds on.

The hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) came out with the outrageous remark that Irish peers still sit in the other place. They do not sit there as Irish peers—they sit there because they possess an English peerage.

Mr. Temple-Morris: I said that.

Rev. Ian Paisley: The hon. Gentleman said that they were making a contribution to that House. That is the strangest thing—because someone originally had an Irish peerage, they can remain in that House. They are in that House because they are British peers. There are no Irish peers in the House of Lords. Talk about making bricks without straw—that is what the hon. Gentleman tried to do.

Mention was made of Gordon Wilson. He was not reached out to in the north to come down to the south. He was a southern man—he was brought up in the south. Let us get identities right. The Committee must get its facts right.

The Prime Minister of the south of Ireland can appoint various people to seats in the Senate. Under the Bill, he could now appoint the Deputy First Minister to a seat in the Senate. The hon. Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) told us that this is probably the Mallon clause. I do not think that it should be in the Bill.

The Minister said that we have had time to discuss the matter. I refer him to Hansard, where he will see how much time we had. The debate came to an abrupt end when a vote was called.

Mr. McNamara: I am grateful for the graciousness and charm of the hon. Gentleman, and I am sorry that I did not reflect those virtues when he tried to intervene during my speech. First, the Irish peers sitting in the Lords with English titles were bribed with those English titles to get rid of the Irish Parliament in 1800 at the time of the Act of Union. That cost £24 million—a fair sum of money at the time. Secondly, I wish to make a more relevant point about people from the north being elected in the south. The President of the Republic of Ireland came from the north.

Rev. Ian Paisley: That might well be, but the President of the Republic is not a Member of Dail Eireann. I challenge members of the SDLP to fight seats in the south and see how they get on.

Mr. McNamara rose—

Rev. Ian Paisley: I will not give way to the hon. Gentleman again. I never asked how those peers got into the House of Lords or what money they paid for their English titles. If that was the way in which they got into the other place, shame on them. The hon. Member for Leominster said that they made a great contribution. What contribution could they make if they got in by paying £300 for their title?

12.30 pm

The First Deputy Chairman of Ways and Means (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Does the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley) want to withdraw his amendment?

Rev. Ian Paisley: No; we wish to shout no. [Laughter.]

The First Deputy Chairman: The hon. Gentleman wishes to shout no; I shall put the Question, then.

Rev. Ian Paisley: We wish to shout yes to the amendment, Mr. Martin.

The First Deputy Chairman: The Question is, That the amendment be made. As many as are of that opinion say "Aye".

Rev. Ian Paisley: Aye.

The First Deputy Chairman: To the contrary, "No".

Hon. Members: No.

The First Deputy Chairman: I think the Noes have it.

Amendment negatived.

Clause 28 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 29

EFFECT OF DISQUALIFICATION AND PROVISION FOR RELIEF

Mr. Moss: I beg to move amendment No. 22, in page 15, leave out lines 6 to 15.

The First Deputy Chairman: With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 23, in clause 30, page 15, leave out lines 30 to 33.

Mr. Moss: Amendment No. 22 is a probing amendment. It would delete subsections (2) and (3) of clause 29, which provides relief for those who may be disqualified from the Assembly. Amendment No. 23 is consequential on amendment No. 22.

Section 1 of the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975 outlines the circumstances in which a person is disqualified from Assembly membership. Disqualification is based solely on an individual holding particular office in, for example, the judiciary, the armed forces, the police, the civil service, quangos of one kind or another and non-departmental public bodies. Clause 29(2) gives the Assembly power to lay an order to direct that the original grounds for disqualifying a person can be waived in certain circumstances.

Even assuming that that is an acceptable power to give to the Assembly, the Bill is not clear whether the order to offer relief would need a simple majority vote in the Assembly or whether such a decision would require cross-community support. As the Bill does not specifically mention the latter, it is not unreasonable to conclude that that does not apply. Assembly decisions on individual cases could therefore be determined by the majority group of designated nationalists or designated Unionists. Perhaps the Minister will clarify the position.

Much has been made of the fact that the Bill must faithfully interpret and reflect the Belfast agreement, but there does not appear to be a corresponding section offering guidance in this context. Paragraph 25 of the strand 1 section refers to the removal of an individual from office, but not to removal from membership of the Assembly, disqualification from standing for election or even disqualification from being able to sit as a Member of the Assembly. Perhaps the Minister will offer some illumination. Will he confirm that this issue is not covered by a corresponding part of the Belfast agreement? If so, why was it deemed either necessary or expedient, and by whom, to incorporate powers of waiver for the Assembly?

Clause 29(2) is taken almost verbatim from section 6(2) and (3) of the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975, which received Royal Assent on 8 May 1975—simultaneously with the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975. The Northern Ireland Act does not contain such a section, despite both Acts presumably passing through the House contemporaneously. Why was the difference deemed to be appropriate then, but not now? Do we really want to give the Assembly such a power, especially as it will be administered—if that is the right word—by order, through secondary legislation?

We need the Minister to explain a number of matters.

Mr. Worthington: These two amendments would remove the Assembly's power, in certain circumstances, to provide relief from disqualification. They would remove some flexibility. I note that the hon. Gentleman said that they were probing amendments. They apply to the fairly exotic circumstances in which people stand for election while disqualified and that is not made known before they get elected. That is unusual, and we believe that it is necessary to give the Assembly some flexibility. The election of such a candidate would be invalidated. People get annoyed—Winchester comes to mind—if they feel that their will has been thwarted through a technicality or for even more serious reasons.

This power allows the Assembly to set aside the disqualification. As the hon. Gentleman said, the disqualification is usually because the candidate holds a post or position that disqualifies him from being a representative in the Assembly. Candidates must put right the reason for which they were disqualified, so they would have to resign from their post. The cause of the disqualification would be removed, and the Assembly could set aside the disqualification if it so wished.

The hon. Gentleman said that a section of the community could vote, perhaps on a sectarian basis, for someone to be disqualified. Other Members of the Assembly would be free to challenge any such move, and the petition of concern is a further safeguard. If 30 Members of the Assembly feel that decisions should be made on a cross-party basis, they can cause that to occur. I think that that deals with the issue raised by the hon. Gentleman.

The provisions reflect those that applied to the previous Assembly in Northern Ireland; which apply to the House of Commons; and which are in the Scotland Bill. I hope that I have answered the hon. Gentleman's points.

Mr. Moss: I am grateful for the Minister's response. Can a candidate who is deemed to be disqualified, for whatever reason, from taking his place in the Assembly appeal against that disqualification under existing law? Why does it require the Assembly to lay an order? That allows the Assembly to decide whether the disqualification should be waived.

The Minister said that a similar measure applies to the House of Commons. As I said, it is contained in section 6 of the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975. Going through the House at the same time was the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975, but this measure was not in that legislation. Do I understand from his final remarks that he is now saying that the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975 has been amended to bring it into line with the measures applying to the House of Commons?

Mr. Worthington: I regret that I cannot answer the hon. Gentleman's last point immediately. He raised the issue of an appeal against disqualification. Again, it is difficult to give an instant answer without knowing the grounds on which an appeal was being made. A person is disqualified from standing for the Assembly if he holds a particular position. That is usually a cut and dried case—either one holds a position or one does not. Obviously, there would be an appeal—to use the word loosely—within the Assembly by the Assembly Member concerned or his or her representatives when the Assembly could hear the case.

We are talking here about the Assembly's ability to set aside the disqualification if the grounds for disqualification have already been resolved. It would be against the law for a person to continue to hold a specified post and become a Member of the Assembly. Although it would be grounds for disqualification for a person to stand for election to the Assembly while holding such a post, if he or she had given up the post, the Assembly would have the power to set aside the disqualification that had previously applied. The hon. Gentleman may wish to enlighten me later, but it is difficult to think of other grounds for an appeal. There could not be an appeal in respect of the merits of holding the post. That is simply the law of the United Kingdom Parliament.

I hope that I have reassured the hon. Gentleman. It seems fairly obvious that the Assembly requires some flexibility, as the consequences of setting aside the results of an election on what may be a technicality or a post-holding issue that has been resolved by resignation are too serious to leave the Assembly without the power to set aside that disqualification.

Mr. Moss: I am grateful to the Minister. When I spoke about an appeal, I was asking about an appeal by a person who has been disqualified in clause 29(2)(a) who feels "that the grounds of disqualification or alleged disqualification which subsisted or arose at the material time have been removed".

I wondered whether that would be possible without necessarily giving the Assembly the power to do that by order.

The Minister said that he would write to me or speak to me at a later date, but I am still puzzled why, if the provision is already incorporated in Northern Ireland statute, I could not find it in the Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975. It may have been added later, in which case it has simply been brought across and presumably will fall from the earlier legislation. I am quite happy to accept the Minister's statement that it already applies to Northern Ireland and, on that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Clause 32

COMMISSION

Mr. McGrady: I beg to move amendment No. 187, in clause 32, page 16, line 37, at end insert—

'Such directions shall not be given without cross-community support.'.

Clause 32 deals with the Commission, which is akin to the shadow business committee that currently exists to deal with the day-to-day requirements of the shadow Assembly. Subsections (1) to (4) have been substantively dealt with by the creation of the shadow committee, of which the Commission will be the successor. The committee was created under the requirement of cross-community support, and my amendment to subsection (5) would mean that special directions or requirements given by the Assembly to the Commission in connection with its functions would also require cross-community support. It may be argued that the amendment should apply to all of clause 32. If so, I should be happy to hear the Minister accept it in those terms.

Mr. Temple-Morris: I support the amendment. The Assembly will give directions to the Commission, which will be the body on high for the whole operation. Most of clause 32 has to do with membership of the Commission, which is covered by other parts of the Bill. Subsection (5) is distinct in providing that

"The Assembly may give special or general directions to the Commission for the purpose of or in connection with the exercise of the Commission's functions."

That goes very wide, and the Commission's role may be altered by it. There is a clear case for adding the safeguard suggested by the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady), which is provided in the rest of the Bill.

Mr. Öpik: Am I to understand that the hon. Gentleman judges the amendment to be a safety measure?

Mr. Temple-Morris: It is, and that is the spirit in which the hon. Member for South Down moved it.

Mr. Worthington: The amendment deals with the Commission that will provide the property, staff and services of the Assembly. Clause 32(5) empowers the Assembly to give special or general directions to the Commission in relation to its functions. I appreciate the spirit of the amendment supported by the hon.

[Mr. Worthington]

Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) and my hon. Friend the Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris). The Commission will be the servant of the Assembly, and should carry out its functions dispassionately.

However, the Bill already contains safeguards. A motion to give directions to the Commission could, for example, be subject to the petition of concern procedure, which would require a cross-community vote. Equally, the Assembly Standing Orders could ensure that there was cross-community support: we assume that the Standing Orders under clause 32(2) on the appointment of members of the Commission itself ensure that members are representative of the Assembly as a whole.

There could be ambiguity about the amendment. My hon. Friend the Member for Leominster referred to the mystical ways in which this place is run. I have never troubled myself with that, but one sees that it runs in a fair way. No doubt, directions are given all the time; one would not want to come to the House so that they could be given all-party support. It is necessary to delegate at times, but I believe that the safeguard is there in the petition of concern. The safeguard will be there in the terms of the membership of the commission.

Mr. McGrady: I hear what the Under-Secretary says regarding the various safeguards applying to many aspects of the running of the Assembly and the business committee, or, as it is called in the Bill, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, but clause 32(5) gives the Assembly statutory authority to give any without cross-community support. As a layman, that is my interpretation of what clause 32(5) does. I urge him to give this matter further consideration, if necessary. The normal mechanisms that he has described, which apply to other aspects of the clause and other aspects of the management of the Assembly per se, have the same criteria for support—that is, cross-community support—that we had anticipated.

"special or general directions to the Commission"

Mr. Worthington: If the Assembly looks like it is going to give, in a biased, partial way, special or general directions, that would, I assume from the Bill, have to come to the floor of the Assembly. It will then be open for people who object to the way in which the Commission is developing to have a petition of concern, and for 30 Members to say, "This should be on a cross-community basis." Therefore, what the hon. Gentleman seeks is there for the safeguarding of his Members or other Members.

I fear that if one said that everything that the Commission had to do in managing matters had to be on a cross-community basis, there would be an element of paralysis about it, but, if, at any time, Members were concerned about the way in which the Commission was developing, there are safeguards in the Standing Orders, in the membership of the Commission and through the petition of concern mechanism, to ensure that things are done through cross-community support.

We are listening to the whole debate. If there are any grounds for us to think that the safeguards in the Bill are inadequate—at the moment, I think that they are adequate—we shall contact the hon. Gentleman, or, if he wants to flesh out what he is saying about his concerns, we shall look at the matter again. However, at the moment, I feel that what he wants is within the framework of the Bill and I ask him to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. McGrady: In view of the Under-Secretary's last remarks and his very generous offer of reconsideration and, indeed, communication on the matter, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 35

MEMBERS' INTERESTS

Mr. Moss: I beg to move amendment No. 24, in page 17, leave out lines 32 to 36.

Clause 35 deals with Members' interests. The amendment would delete subsection (3), which deals with the power of the Assembly to establish Standing Orders that may prevent or restrict the participation of a Member with a registerable interest in a matter to which the Assembly's proceedings relate.

Will the Minister enlighten the Committee on to where the proposal in subsection (3) emanates from? It has certainly been incorporated in the Scotland Bill, which recently proceeded through the House, but I could not find an earlier reference in relation to Standing Orders for this Parliament.

The rules of this House have certainly been tightened in the year or so since the Nolan report, but, so I am led to understand by the Clerks of the House, we have nothing that goes so far as to prevent a Member from participating in our proceedings, save that a Member is not allowed to act as an advocate for a person or body for which he or she has a registerable interest.

Subsection (3) gives the Assembly wide-ranging powers to impose severe and possibly unacceptable conditions on its Members that could inhibit debate. Significant contributions can often be made by Members with expertise and a particular interest, registerable or otherwise, in a particular subject. So long as that interest is registered and declared at the appropriate time in the Assembly's proceedings, there is nothing to be lost, and much to be gained, by exercising tolerance and reasonableness.

Given the various other constraints placed on the operation of the Assembly, essentially through the separation of excepted and reserved matters from transferred matters, why should the Assembly be given powers that would work against the interests of openness and democracy in its proceedings? The amendment would remove the particular power from the Assembly to make such Standing Orders. In our submission, it would leave, in the remaining subsections of clause 35, considerable opportunities for the Assembly to make Standing Orders to regulate the participation of Members with a registerable interest. For example, subsection (4) deals adequately with advocacy and the payment for initiating a cause in the Assembly, which are quite rightly to be prohibited.

Subsection (3) is superfluous to requirements. It is not to be found in the agreement. The amendment would help the proper and effective working of the Assembly by not placing unreasonable restrictions on the free speech afforded to its Members. That is a sentiment which I hope the Minister and the Government will find persuasive.

Mr. Öpik: I support the amendment, as the provision not only seems over-cautious but runs the risk of being manipulated in rather dubious ways.

I might be oversimplifying matters a little, but if one considers the operation of this Chamber, the fact is that, so long as an hon. Member declares an interest, he can participate meaningfully in a debate. Surely someone who declares an interest is more likely to want to participate in relevant debates, not always—or not usually—with evil intent. Moreover, if someone has declared an interest, is not he or she more likely to give an informed opinion and to know something about that issue?

I should much prefer to have a debate with people who have openly declared an interest and said why they wish to participate in a debate than with those who—although they may perhaps be able to be entirely dispassionate about it—may not have the matter at heart. Therefore, I look forward to hearing the Minister's reassurances about why clause 34(3) has been included in the Bill.

1 pm

Mr. Worthington: We think that amendment No. 24 is a strange amendment, as it would remove the Assembly's power to provide in its Standing Orders for

"preventing or restricting the participation in proceedings of . . . a member with a registerable interest . . . in a matter to which the proceedings relate."

The subsection is not telling the Assembly; it is giving it the power to include such a provision in its standing orders if it wishes to do so.

Clause 35(3) has to be read in conjunction with 35(2), which requires people to make a declaration of interest. That requirement is clear cut. However, clause 35(3) provides that the Assembly may—not "shall", which is always a point of confusion in legislation—take the power to decide that it is not sufficient for a Member simply to declare an interest, but that, in some particular instances, there should be extra powers to restrict a Member's participation.

There is nothing unusual about such a provision. As someone who moved from UK local government to UK central Government, I thought that it was very strange that all that was necessary to carry on speaking in this place was to declare an interest, whereas in local government one would not be allowed to speak in a debate or to be part of a committee that was considering a matter in which one had a declared interest. One would not be allowed even to be in the room when a decision was made on the matter.

We think that, in the majority of cases, it will be sufficient simply to require Members to declare an interest. However, in other cases, it may be appropriate for a Member to be prevented from voting on a matter in which he or she has a close interest. Although I do not want to deal with too many speculative issues, one might wish, for example, to give to the Assembly the power to introduce Standing Orders that, in some circumstances, would prevent a Member voting on an issue in which he or she has a significant financial interest—just as happens in local government.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): As my hon. Friend said, is not "may" the operative word and the essential point? In most cases, a financial interest will be registered if there is one, and there will be no prohibition on a person speaking. However, if an interest, for example a contract, is so blatant or commercial, such a safeguard is reasonable and wise—especially in the post-Nolan world, and bearing in mind my hon. Friend's comments on local government—but is likely to be used only very rarely.

Mr. Worthington: I am grateful for that intervention, which very much made the point that I wanted to make. We are saying not that such a provision has to be made, but that it will be for the judgment of the Assembly to decide the matter in formulating its Standing Orders. It can include the provision in its Standing Orders if it so wishes. We believe that it must be right to enable the Assembly to restrict or prevent in certain circumstances the participation of Members from proceedings in which they may have an interest. We think that that will add very considerably to the Assembly's credibility and openness.

Mr. William Ross (East Londonderry): May I draw the Minister's attention to the largest industry in Northern Ireland, agriculture? A number of Members of the Assembly have agricultural interests, which are naturally financial interests. If they—the representatives of that section of the Northern Ireland community—were prevented from participating, the result might be extremely skewed decisions, because those decisions would have been taken by people who did not have a financial interest. It is for that reason that I tend to agree with the amendment rather than with the Minister.

Mr. Worthington: My point is that we should give the Assembly the power to exercise its own good sense in respect of its Standing Orders relating to what is an interest, the level of interest that should be declared and what action is to be taken. I have no problem whatsoever with the proposition that those involved in agriculture should defend the interests of agriculture; their expertise is perfectly acceptable and should be used by the Assembly. However, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman recognises that it would be quite inappropriate for someone who would personally benefit financially from a decision of the Assembly—someone whose farm would benefit specifically—to be required only to declare an interest. The Assembly might regard that as an inadequate disqualification of a person from participation in making decisions on that matter.

The matter is for the Assembly to decide in its Standing Orders relating to the declaration of interests and the role to be played by special interests within the Assembly. We should give the Assembly the power to draw up Standing Orders that enhance the standing of the Assembly in the eyes of the people of Northern Ireland. That is why we are giving the Assembly that power, which is a sensible power.

Mr. Moss: The Minister still has not answered the question that I put to him. Where does the clause come from? He has not told the Committee whether it appears in legislation pertaining to the proceedings of the House. He referred to local authority standing orders, so the provision might well have been lifted from local government legislation.

Notwithstanding the support that we would give to proper constraints relating to Members' interests in the operation of the Assembly, as I have said, we believe that there are adequate safeguards in clause 35. I agree with the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) that there should be proper safeguards. The clause uses the word "may", but we would conclude that there are sufficient safeguards already in clause 35. For example, subsection (4) states:

"Standing orders shall"

—not may—

"include provision prohibiting a member of the Assembly from . . . advocating or initiating any cause or matter on behalf of any person", or, indeed, on behalf of his or herself, no doubt,

"by any means specified in standing orders, in consideration of any payment or benefit in kind".

I should have thought that that was a catch-all provision and that subsection (3) was therefore pretty irrelevant.

Mr. Worthington: On the question of where the provision comes from, the situation has been evolving since Nolan, so I cannot say that it is a straight copy from any specific legislation relating to the House. We are making proposals that seem appropriate to the new post-Nolan position. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that the matter is not covered in the agreement, but we could not, in those miraculous few days, expect the agreement to cover all such issues.

However, I am sure that it is obvious to everyone that there should be a provision in the Northern Ireland Bill that sets up the Assembly covering the matter of Members' interests. We have simply put forward the proposition that, in the special circumstances of Northern Ireland, there should be a discretionary power for the Standing Orders of the Assembly to allow a ruling to be made as to whether, in some circumstances, the body needs to go beyond what exists in other respects. I am told that the provisions in the Scotland Bill are the same, almost word for word, and give flexibility to the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Winnick: I do not want to be controversial at this time of the afternoon. I am not suggesting that my hon. Friend agrees with me, but it would not be a bad idea if we introduced the same Standing Orders in the House of Commons.

Mr. Worthington: It is interesting to hear what is in my hon. Friend's mind at this time on a Friday afternoon.

The provision is sensible and it will be up to the good sense of the Assembly to decide how to use it, if it wishes to do so.

Mr. Moss: Obviously, there must be adequate safeguards in the Assembly to deal with Members' interests. No one is suggesting that that should not be the case, but this may be a safeguard too far. We are in danger of over-legislating, and there are plenty of other adequate provisions in clause 35 to deal with Members with registrable interests.

It is interesting to hear the Minister admit that it is all right to add to the agreement, but not to detract from it. The Bill makes many additions to the agreement, which was presumably cast in tablets of stone on Mount Sinai.

As this point may be revisited in another place, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

PAYMENTS INTO THE FUND: TAXES

Question proposed, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have received representations about clause 45, including representations from the right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble), that there needs to be consistency between Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland on these matters. Although I recommend that the Committee supports the clause, we may return to this matter on Report.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 45 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 46

PAYMENTS INTO THE FUND: SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Moss: I beg to move amendment No. 26, in clause 46, page 23, line 20, at end add—

'( ) Subject to subsection ( ) below, the Secretary of State shall make such a payment at least once every financial year.

( ) No such payment shall be made unless the Secretary of State has laid before the House of Commons a statement certifying that the payment recognises the needs of Northern Ireland in relation to the needs of the United Kingdom as a whole.'.

I welcome the Minister of State's remarks about clause 45. Clauses 45 and 46 are as important as many others in the Bill. Northern Ireland is the only part of the United Kingdom to have its own Consolidated Fund, although clause 61 of the Scotland Bill will set up such a fund for Scotland. The Province has always been subject to the same taxes as the rest of the country, which are collected by UK Departments. Its share of those taxes and any other revenue collected in Northern Ireland is paid into its Consolidated Fund. Parliament then adds a further amount—the so-called subvention—to that fund each year. That consists, first, of an automatic increase, calculated under the Barnett formula and, secondly, of an additional payment negotiated in each year's spending round.

Under the Barnett formula, any change in spending in Great Britain is also applied to Northern Ireland, but scaled down to reflect the Province's smaller population. That means that if spending on relevant Great Britain programmes is raised or cut by £100 million, funding for Northern Ireland increases or decreases by about £2.91 million.

That figure is now adjusted annually to take account of population changes. I believe that the figure for last year was £2.87 million. The Minister, who is responsible for finance, will no doubt confirm that. The Barnett formula determines only the annual change in funding for Northern Ireland, not the baseline figure. Moreover, as the change is based on levels of expenditure in Great Britain, it does not even work to maintain higher per capita spending in the Province. Indeed, if an increasing amount of the Province's funding is based on the lower level of spending in Great Britain, the gap narrows.

1.15 pm

That has not happened in practice because, for some time, every Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has always secured an additional payment for the Province. However, it may be more difficult for Secretaries of State to do so after devolution, because the Bill says only that

"The Secretary of State may from time to time make payments into the Consolidated Fund of Northern Ireland out of money provided by Parliament."

Amendment No. 26 would add the following:

"Subject to subsection ( ) below, the Secretary of State shall make such a payment at least once every financial year."

The Scotland Bill and the Government of Wales Bill say "shall"—not "may", the word used in the Bill before us. The second part of our amendment reads:

"No such payment shall be made unless the Secretary of State has laid before the House of Commons a statement certifying that the payment recognises the needs of Northern Ireland in relation to the needs of the United Kingdom as a whole."

In short, we believe that the amendment guarantees that the Province will continue to get the funding that it needs, based on an accurate assessment of those needs in relation to spending in the United Kingdom as a whole.

No Minister in Northern Ireland, and I expect no Ministers of the Assembly, as and when it starts to do its work, would want a situation to arise where the Assembly and the people of Northern Ireland are left waiting for the crumbs from the Treasury table, unable to question whether the money paid into that Consolidated Fund, plus any extra moneys, is related specifically to the unique needs of Northern Ireland, which have been recognised by every Government and Secretary of State since direct rule.

Mr. Paul Murphy: The amendment suggests that money to supplement the Consolidated Fund in Northern Ireland may be given without proper consideration to the balance of public expenditure throughout the United Kingdom. That is not the case; it is given on the same basis as money in any other part of the country. It is unusual only in being identified in statute. In Scotland, by comparison, there is no division into attributable and non-attributable payments. The Northern Ireland subvention is properly authorised annually by Parliament in the United Kingdom, in a process which, of course, takes account of the financial requirements of all parts of the United Kingdom.

The changes proposed are unnecessary. The existing funding mechanism enables the comparison to be made—which the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss) mentioned—between the needs of Northern Ireland and those of the United Kingdom as a whole. I believe that it reflects population and needs, as in the case of the other regions and countries of the UK, and I do not believe that we should single out Northern Ireland in the way that the amendment proposes.

As I said earlier, there is force in the argument that the arrangements in clause 45 for attributing a share of taxation to Northern Ireland are wrong. That is why I spoke briefly a moment ago. It is only right that we should be concerned about the way in which Northern Ireland is funded—the hon. Gentleman is absolutely right about that—and that the needs of the entire United Kingdom are taken into account. I think that the allocation is fair; it has been with us a long time and the arrangements will be similar under devolution. The measure has operated for many years, including when the hon. Gentleman was a Northern Ireland Minister. I do not think that it would be right to go further than that, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Moss: I thank the Minister for that response. However, two questions remain unanswered. First, why does the clause say that the Secretary of State "may" when the word "shall" is used in the Scotland Bill and the Government of Wales Bill? Can the Minister explain why Northern Ireland is different? We should certainly firm up the wording to incorporate the word "shall" instead of the word "may". That would give a little more comfort to future Members of the Assembly and to Ministers who will take over in Northern Ireland.

I am reassured by the Minister's comments that he believes that the future distribution of moneys to Northern Ireland will be fair and will take account of Northern Ireland's unique needs. Nowhere else in the United Kingdom has the pressure of law and order and terrorism on its budget. I hope that that is a thing of the past, but nothing on the horizon suggests that expenditure in that area will diminish in the short term.

Perhaps the issue will be revisited in another place, but I think that we should give Assembly Members and the ministerial team further assurances that Northern Ireland's unique needs will not be left to the whim of a Secretary of State but be set down in statute. That would give them the firm reassurance that I am sure that they seek. On the basis of the Minister's response, I shall seek leave to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Murphy: I realise that the hon. Gentleman intends to withdraw the amendment, but he may be interested in my response to his two questions. First, he referred to the use of the word "may" in the clause. That matter will be considered as a consequence of our re-examination of clause 45. As he knows, the issues to which he referred are transferred matters and do not include the law and order budget. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for agreeing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Moss: I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Clause 50

FINANCIAL ACTS OF THE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Moss: I beg to move amendment No. 28, page 24, line 38, at end insert 'or'.

The Chairman of Ways and Means (Sir Alan Haselhurst): With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 29, in page 24, line 39, leave out from 'Crown' to end of line 40 and insert—

'(2A) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act and any Order in Council made under the provisions of this Act, the Assembly shall neither impose nor vary taxes.'.

No. 30, in page 24, line 43, leave out from 'appropriated' to end of line 1 on page 25.

Mr. Moss: Clause 50 deals with the Assembly's financial powers. Tax-raising powers in general are defined as excepted matters and are to be found in paragraph 9 of schedule 2 to the Bill. They include taxes levied across the entire United Kingdom and any existing taxes in Northern Ireland. The list includes inheritance tax, stamp duty, general betting duty, pool betting duty, duty on gaming machine licences and duty on vehicle licences. From a reading of clause 50(1), which states:

"in pursuance of a recommendation which . . . is made by the Minister of Finance and Personnel; and . . . is signified to the Assembly by him or on his behalf",

it would seem that the Assembly could pass a vote

"which imposes or increases a tax".

That is in subsection (2)(d). In addition, under subsection (3), powers are given to the Assembly to impose or increase a tax, as long as there is cross-community support. It is not clear from the Bill, however, which tax or taxes that applies to—presumably, any taxes outside the list that I enumerated.

Those tax-raising powers seem to be new powers given to the Assembly, but the Minister may correct me. I found identical provisions in the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973, in terms of the definition of taxes under excepted matters. Where do tax-raising powers appear in the Belfast agreement? I could not find them. No doubt, this is one of the necessary additions to that agreement about which we spoke earlier.

Our amendments would remove the powers of the Assembly to raise taxes. Even if the power remains on the statute, it is vital that the taxes referred to in the Bill are clearly and unequivocally defined.

Mr. Öpik: The issue arose in regard to Wales. One of our biggest objections to the plans for the Welsh Assembly was it would not have tax-varying powers. I should be delighted if the Northern Ireland Assembly were given tax-varying powers, not least because, if there were cross-community support for varying a tax, that would imply that there was good reason to do so, but most of all because the most powerful indication of an autonomous decision-making Assembly is its ability to vary tax. That is one of the best aspects of the Scottish proposals, and one of the deficiencies in the Welsh ones.

I look forward to the Minister's comments. I cannot support the Conservative amendment on this occasion.

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have much sympathy with the point raised by the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss) about the misleading nature of the clause. I understand that, for various technical and legal reasons, it would be difficult to amend the clause. However, it must be read in conjunction with schedule 2, which makes it clear that the clause does not refer to general tax-raising powers, about which the hon. Gentleman was troubled.

The hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) spoke about tax-varying powers. Those were not part of the agreement and were not finalised. I have subsequently consulted parties in Northern Ireland, who are generally of the view that there should not be such powers.

The clause refers to the regional rate in Northern Ireland, which was set up by the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973 and which is used to discharge many functions in Northern Ireland that are normally discharged by local authorities in England and Wales. The Assembly will retain the right to raise the regional rate, but there are no plans in the Bill for a general tax-levying, tax-raising or tax-varying power. Consequently, I ask the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Moss: Perhaps the Minister and his civil service draftsmen will look again at the wording of the Bill. It might be helpful to define the tax as the general rate. That would overcome the problem quite easily. On that basis, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Night Flights (Windsor)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

1.29 pm

Mr. Michael Trend (Windsor): The House will know from earlier debates my concern that Heathrow, while being a great asset to the country as a whole and to the south-east in particular, should be a good and responsible neighbour to those communities that surround it. Both west London and east Berkshire suffer greatly from the airport's environmental pollution, especially in terms of noise. The Government are consulting on the matter, and that exercise will take a significant move forward while the House is in recess.

I am very grateful to be able to raise my concerns before the House rises, and before one proposal in particular develops momentum and we are told that we had left it too late to object. The particular proposal is that there might be a change in runway preferential use at night. I shall return to that later.

My speech may seem complex, but it is necessarily so. It is not an emotional public relations exercise, but an attempt to convince the Minister and the House that we in Windsor face increased hazards to our health and well-being. First, however, I need to make a series of general but connected points.

The Minister for Transport in London will know that I have long advocated a total ban on night flights at Heathrow, and that remains my position. My constituents—indeed, all those who live around the airport—are entitled to a good night's sleep untroubled by the planes thundering in overhead. Other countries and other airports simply do not allow their people to be subjected to such abuse. It is a matter of priorities, and mine is the people in my constituency. The Government's priority should be the people who live all round the area, and not the carriers and the minuscule number of passengers who land at night.

This afternoon, I want to address what can and should be done in the period, which I hope will be brief, before the Government become persuaded of a total ban on night flights. First, the Government need to be absolutely clear that the main problem nowadays with Heathrow, for the great majority of those troubled by aircraft noise, comes from landings, not from take-offs. This in some measure reflects past successes in curbing take-off noise, and that should be recognised. However, I still find people, even those who are closely associated with the airport, who do not realise that the debate has moved on. Nowadays, landings are the big problem, especially for Windsor and the surrounding area.

Secondly, there is much misunderstanding about the effects of the process of runway alternation at Heathrow. That is also important from Windsor's point of view. I know that the Minister understands how these things work very well, but, for the benefit of those who may not, I should explain that, at any given moment, planes take off and land in the same direction. The direction of plane movement is determined by the direction of the wind. Planes both take off and land into the wind.

Heathrow has two main runways, so when planes are taking off to the west on, say, the southern runway, they land to the west on the northern runway. At regular intervals, while the movement of planes remains to the west, landings switch from one runway to the other, so that planes take off on the northern runway and land on the southern. This affords the residents of west London relief from the noise of landing aircraft. I am pleased for them that they get this relief.

However, the same is not true when the movement of flights is towards the east. That is because of the so-called "Cranford agreement," which means that planes cannot take off on the northern runway towards the east—over Cranford.

When I last brought this matter to the attention of the House, I was able to demonstrate that there is in fact no such agreement. The Minister at the time was Steven Norris, and he had notice that I was going to raise the matter. His officials no doubt searched the former Department of Transport from the attic to the basement, and no agreement was found. The Minister told the House that there was no such agreement.

Before the debate, I alerted the hon. Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Keen)—who represents Cranford—that I would mention the matter again today. Now is not the time to go into it in great detail, but I hope to return to the arrangement—which I take to be a political fix from the past—at some later time.

The so-called Cranford agreement means that, as planes cannot take off on the northern runway towards the east, they have to use the southern runway all the time. That in turn means that all planes landing from the west have to land on the northern runway, the approach to which lines up precisely over Windsor. When aircraft movement is to the east, the planes come in low and noisy over Windsor, Datchett, Horton and other communities in my constituency and others.

Once we have understood that, we can dispel the misunderstanding that east Berkshire somehow has it easy because fewer planes land from the west than land from over London. Roughly 30 per cent. of daytime arrivals come in over Windsor, with 70 per cent. landing over west London. However, because there is no runway alternation, when the planes are landing to the east, the whole 30 per cent. of the landings take place over Windsor. When the wind changes direction and the plans land from over London, no one area is affected for the full 70 per cent. of the time.

Due to alternation, two communities in west London are affected roughly 35 per cent. of the time each. The difference between landing from the east and west is not really 70:30 per cent. If one thinks of the three communities involved—two on one side of the airport and on one the other—the difference is really 35:35:30 per cent. Far from being the lucky partner, Windsor's position is closely comparable to that of the two areas in west London also affected by landing noise.

I come to my third point. I have told the House before that Windsor has done badly from the modern electronic landing system at Heathrow, which now brings in planes with monotonous precision right over our heads—although I recognise that there is a safety gain. I also recognise that, in general, marginal improvements are made year on year in reducing aircraft noise. Those of us who follow these matters closely are grateful for that—even for minor incremental improvements. However, such benefits as may have come to Windsor in the past 10 years have been more than offset by the modern inflexible landing system which I have described.

[Mr. Michael Trend]

The fourth point is that we in east Berkshire know without looking out of the window or at a weather vane when we are in for it—by that, I mean when the plans will come crashing in over our heads. In summer and winter, the same weather system that, happily, drives us out of doors infuriatingly drives the planes right over our heads. The west winds bring clouds and rain, but when the wind is in the east, the weather is usually fine and clear. On hot summer evenings—when people like to sit in their gardens or sleep with their windows wide open—and on those marvellous, clear, crisp winter days when people wish to get out of their houses and enjoy a respite from the winter gloom, we in east Berkshire get the full landing treatment, thanks to Heathrow.

I hope that I have shown that the problems created by aircraft landing over east Berkshire are severe, and deserve to be better understood and recognised. That brings me to the pressing matter of runway preferential use at night. As part of their consultation exercise, the Government put forward the idea that current runway preferential use could be reconsidered. British Airways recently put out a press release, stating that there "should be a review of runway preferential use at night" and that that

"should test the benefits and feasibility of a switch to 'easterly preference'."

I find such a proposal completely unacceptable.

I hope that the Government will not be influenced by BA, or by others, to consider a change in preferences. Windsor is not the lucky partner in daytime landing—it experiences roughly the same misery from landing noise as any other community. That has become worse due to the modern technology used for landings, and it is always bad when the weather is at its best.

Windsor's position would become substantially worse if night preferences were changed. The percentages of flights landing from the east and west at night differ from the daytime figures, largely because of a natural difference in ambient wind levels. Recent figures from the Department show that, between 4 am and 6 am, there is a five-knot westerly preference, which means that the split is roughly 85 per cent. of flights landing over London and 15 per cent. over Windsor. Thankfully, that is better than the daytime figures.

The Government, however, are considering options on having no preference or a five-knot easterly preference for those hours. If the no-preference option came in, my constituents would be subjected to an increase from 15 to 40 per cent. of all night flights. With a five-knot easterly preference, the current 15 per cent. would increase to 80 per cent. or more.

We are told that only 16 flights are permitted to land between 4 am and 6 am, but I fear that the figure is often higher. The Minister will understand that I am using a rough and ready calculus, but, accepting the figure of 15 per cent. for the moment, under the present arrangement, two and a half planes-worth would land over Windsor in those two hours, when we should all be asleep. That would go up to six and a half planes-worth if there was no preference, or to 13 planes a night under the easterly preference. The Minister should think about what that would mean for my constituents.

I cannot vouch for the figures being absolutely precise, but hon. Members should imagine what it would be like if my constituents were woken roughly half a dozen or a dozen times a night instead of twice. It would be monstrous. The present position does not suit anyone around Heathrow, but there is a rough balance of misery between west London and east Berkshire.

Kate Hoey (Vauxhall): I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on securing this debate. Does he agree that night flights do not affect only the people in his area, but are a huge issue in other parts of London, especially south and south-west London, where large public meetings have been held about this problem? Unless there is real danger, flights should not be allowed to land during the night.

Mr. Trend: I agree entirely—I favour a total ban on night flights. There is a balance of misery between people on my side and the hon. Lady's side of the airport, and both constituencies experience noise problems because we are so close to it, but it would be dangerous and difficult for my constituents if the balance were upset. A switch in night flight preferences would throw the balance out most appallingly; even a rise to 40 per cent. of night flights would bring uproar from the people of Windsor, and I would happily lead them.

Many other communities on our side of the airport would also be affected. My hon. Friend the Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) has asked me to associate her with the views that I am expressing. I know how concerned she is for the interests of her constituents who are affected by aircraft noise. I have also been asked to register the great concern of the hon. Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart), and willingly do so. She has told me that any change in night landing preferences would be utterly unacceptable.

I spent some time in the Department, at a more modest level than the Minister, as a parliamentary private secretary at the old Department of Transport. One lesson I learned was that the Government get no credit for improving noise conditions, whether in the air or on the roads. But when noise gets worse, the Government get it in the neck. If the noise gets substantially worse in east Berkshire as a result of any change in preferences, the Minister will have a serious problem on her hands.

The balance of misery is a delicate one. There is nothing to be gained from destroying it, but much to lose. I accept that the airport works hard to improve conditions generally around Heathrow, and the Government can claim that there has been progressive improvement without creating such a dramatic disturbance as would follow a change in night preferences.

The MPs of east Berkshire do not want a change in preference. Our constituents would not tolerate it. Neither do we want to have the no-preference option and then be told that we were lucky not to have had easterly preferences imposed on us. The present position is bad enough, and I implore the Minister not to make it worse. To change night preferences would be unreasonable and unjust.

1.45 pm

The Minister for Transport in London (Ms Glenda Jackson): I congratulate the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend) on securing the debate, and on the persistence and dedication that he has brought to this topic over the many years that he has given such doughty service to the House and to his constituents. I thank him for his generosity in allowing an intervention from my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey), and for assuring the House that my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) and the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) share his concerns, not least on the issue of runway preferential use and its alteration.

The issue is noise disturbance suffered not only by the constituents of the hon. Member for Windsor, but by the many thousands, possibly millions, of people who live in and around London, as my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall said.

As the House will be aware, a preliminary consultation paper on night restrictions on aircraft movements at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted was issued on 27 February. That consultation invited views on all aspects of the present regime, and closed on 29 May. We are now considering all the responses, and will take them into account in drawing up proposals for the next night restrictions regime. We hope to publish those proposals by the end of September. There will be a further consultation before the decisions on the next night restrictions regime for the three airports are taken.

The present night restrictions regime for those airports was established with effect from 24 October 1993. It proved to be contentious, and was subject to lengthy judicial review proceedings. Litigation in the United Kingdom courts came to an end in 1996, but a case is now before the European Court of Human Rights. I am sure that the House will accept that it would be improper for me to comment on that.

The present night restrictions specify a night period of 11 pm to 7 am during which the noisiest types of aircraft may not be scheduled to land or take off. In addition, from 11.30 pm to 6 am—the night quota period—aircraft movements are restricted by a movements limit and a noise quota, which are both set for a season. The noise quota is a supplementary measure designed to encourage the use of quieter aircraft. Aircraft count against the noise quota according to their noise "quota count" classification.

The quota count system is based on aircraft noise certification data. Aircraft are classified separately for landing and taking off by reference to data that are collected according to internationally agreed conditions and standards. The movements limits and noise quotas are set for the season as a whole; they are not subdivided across the hours of the night or between types of services, and airlines may operate services as they wish within the limits and quota available.

There are two seasons: the summer season—which equates to the period of British summer time as fixed by the Summer Time Act 1972—and the winter season, which is the rest of the year. Each summer season is about seven months long, and each winter season approximately five months. At Heathrow, last winter there were 2,446 movements which counted against the night movements limit of 2,550. In noise quota terms, they amounted to 3,858.5—a somewhat bizarre statistic—against the noise quota of 5,000.

In the 1997 summer season, there were 2,755 movements which counted against the movements limit of 3,250, amounting to 4,274.5 against the noise quota of 7,000. There were also some movements by aircraft that are exempt from the restrictions, because they are so small and quiet, some given dispensations in circumstances permitted under the present arrangements, and some emergencies, which are automatically exempted from the night restrictions.

Of more immediate relevance to the hon. Gentleman is the trial of runway alternation at night for landing aircraft that has been carried out by Heathrow Airport Ltd. at the request of the airport consultative committee. The results were presented to the consultative committee in April, but no formal recommendation has yet been made to the Department. The approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions would be required before runway alternation at night could be extended into the night period on a permanent basis, and may require additional consultation by the Department. We intend to take the subject forward in our second stage consultation paper on night restrictions.

As the hon. Gentleman has pointed out, a westerly preference has been operated at Heathrow since 1962, with aircraft operating towards the west when there is a light easterly tailwind. The purpose is to reduce noise disturbance from departing aircraft taking off over the more densely populated areas to the east of the airport. It also means that landings over Windsor are reduced.

In 1996, work commissioned by the Heathrow Airport Consultative Committee confirmed that, during the day, there remains an overall environmental benefit from continued use of a westerly preference. However, at night, because almost all flights at Heathrow are arrivals in the early morning, the requirement to operate a westerly preference means that those aircraft are being routed over the more densely populated area of London than is strictly necessary, and it is right that it should be reviewed.

Mr. John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): My hon. Friend will be aware that, as Heathrow is in my constituency, the proximity of many of my constituents to Heathrow airport means that alternation is irrelevant. During the period of disturbance between 4 and 6 am every night, the noise is of such intensity that their sleep is disturbed and their entire environment is ruined. That is why I support the call by the hon. Member for Windsor (Mr. Trend) for a total night ban, which is the only way to resolve the matter, as has been demonstrated in the report published this week by HACAN—the Heathrow Association for the Control of Aircraft Noise.

Ms Jackson: My hon. Friend has highlighted a point that was made earlier by the hon. Member for Windsor and my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall—that noise disturbance from aircraft is not limited to those who live particularly near the three airports in question, albeit I acknowledge that my hon. Friend's constituency is very close to Heathrow. The issue of bans was also raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall. There has never been a ban on night flights, although it has been discussed in the past.

Initial analysis of the 4 am to 6 am period by my Department, and recently reported to the Heathrow Airport Consultative Committee, shows that, with the current arrangement of a westerly preference, the airport operates on westerlies for about 87 per cent. of the time.

[Ms Jackson]

With no preference, westerly operations would account for about 60 per cent. of the time on average—easterly operations accounting for the other 40 per cent.—and with an easterly preference operated, the proportion of easterly operations would rise to about 84 per cent. in the 4 am to 6 am period.

I stress that we have not taken a view on the merits or otherwise of the different possible runway preferences, and no decisions have been reached. There will be full public consultation. More work is needed, particularly on the noise impact of the various options on local communities. We also intend to invite views on modifying the operation of westerly preference at Heathrow at night in the second-stage paper of the current night restrictions consultation.

Mr. Trend: The Minister referred to trials in which planes are brought in at night from the west, of which I was aware. I have spoken about the need for a balance, and about hon. Members receiving no thanks for improving the balance but receiving considerable odium if it gets worse.

If the airport went to an easterly preference, even with alternation allowing both runways to land planes from the west because of low traffic, there would, instead of 80 per cent. landing over Windsor—a rise from the current 15 per cent.—be 40 per cent. landing over Windsor, which is 25 per cent. more than now, and 40 per cent. landing over St. Leonard's Hill to the south of Windsor, which currently experiences no substantial night disturbance. That would mean two angry communities. I implore the Minister to consider the balance of misery. It is unsatisfactory at present, but to disturb it would cause more trouble.

Ms Jackson: I can only repeat what I have said already. There has been no formal presentation to the Department on those trials, so we are not able to take a view. There is no possibility of any kind of change in the areas to which the hon. Gentleman referred without the most thorough public consultation.

We shall invite views on the possibility of modifying the operation of westerly preference in the second-stage paper of the current night restrictions consultation. The hon. Gentleman commented on British Airways' recent announcement in a press release on night-time operations that it supported a review of runway preferential use at night—not alternation—with a clear implication that it favoured an easterly preference. BA is entitled to its views, but we shall consult on the second night restrictions paper, which is due out the end of September.

The hon. Gentleman referred to aircraft landing at Heathrow in the very early morning, from about 4.30 am onwards. That reference is understandable, as such flights constitute the majority of night flights, at present, at Heathrow. They fly across Windsor when the wind is from the east, and they fly across central London when the wind is from the west. I am aware of complaints from both sides of the airport, as well as from all shades of the political spectrum.

The whole pattern of scheduling movements, particularly flights from the Asia-Pacific region, is a significant factor in the present pattern of early morning arrivals. The night curfew at Hong Kong Kai Tak contributed to that, but it was far from the only reason. We do not expect the pattern of movements to change radically, now that the new airport at Chep Lap Kok has opened.

There are very few departures at Heathrow during the night quota period, but some flights take off before our restrictions come into force, and land at sensitive times at other international airports. Any change to night restrictions at London airports that would have significant effects on intercontinental scheduling might have knock-on implications for some of our daytime traffic. We have specifically invited comments on that in our preliminary consultation paper on night restrictions.

We fully accept that aircraft noise, both by night and by day, is a contentious subject. Unfortunately, despite the great improvements made over the past 30 years, it is likely to remain so.

As I announced on 27 February, we are commissioning further research, initially on a trial basis, into the impact of aircraft noise at night. We are particularly interested in the scope for researching sleep prevention—that is, delay in getting to sleep at night—and the difficulties of not being able to get back to sleep again after being awakened in the early morning. However, we must not underestimate the complexities of such research, or the length of time that it may take.

It must also be acknowledged, as the hon. Member for Windsor has stated, that Heathrow airport is a major national asset. It occupies a position of central importance in international trade and communication in Europe, and in the UK's economy.

Heathrow is the busiest airport in Europe, and the busiest international airport in the world. In 1997, it handled nearly 58 million passengers, with 35 per cent. using the airport as an interchange point. It is used by more than 90 airlines, serving 180 destinations world wide. It is the UK's largest port in terms of value of trade handled, and it provides 56,000 direct jobs and a further 26,000 indirectly in support services: jobs that benefit people who live around the airport, as well as contributing to the prosperity of the country as a whole.

Successive Governments have consistently recognised the need to ensure that people who live near Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are not exposed to excessive levels of aircraft at night. This Government equally recognise that need. We believe that it is both right and necessary to set restrictions on night flights at those airports, and, in doing so, to preserve a balance between environmental and aviation interests.

I thank the hon. Member for Windsor for giving us the opportunity to consider these issues and to help us, in conjunction with all the responses that we have received to the preliminary consultation, to determine the formal proposals that we shall put to consultation in the autumn.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute past Two o'clock.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what restrictions are placed on political advisers in respect of use of their official position to further private interests or receive benefits from third parties. [49656]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Special Advisers are required under paragraph 8 of the Civil Service Code not to misuse their official position or information acquired in the course of their official duties to further their private interests or those of others. They must not receive benefits of any kind from a third party which might reasonably be seen to compromise their political judgment or integrity.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from (a) the Secretary of State for the Home Department and (b) the Minister without Portfolio in respect of the proposed Freedom of Information Bill. [50356]

Dr. David Clark: Both my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio have continued to contribute to the discussions in the Cabinet Sub-Committee on the Freedom of Information Bill.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49811]

Mr. Kilfoyle: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster will shortly publish figures showing the volume of correspondence which he, other individual Ministers and Agency Chief Executives received from hon. Members, the targets set for reply and the percentage of replies sent within target. Figures showing the average time taken by Ministers and Agency Chief Executives to respond to letters are not collated centrally.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49813]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The e-mail address of my Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit is mcu@ccta.gov.uk.

Civil Servants

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many members of the Home Civil Service have been on leave on full pay either between appointments or pending retirement from the Civil Service for (a) more than three months, (b) more than six months, (c) more than nine months and (d) more than one year. [28898]

Dr. David Clark: The information requested is not held centrally and is a matter for individual Departments. The figures for my own Department, including our Agencies, for the year 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998 are as follows:

(a) Five (including two members of staff on long-term sick leave and one on maternity leave

(b) Zero

(c) Three

(d) One

Figures for previous years are not readily available.

The Central Office of Information (COI) is a separate Department reporting to me. There were no cases in COI matching the criteria.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Coalfields Report

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Government's response to the Coalfields Task Force report, "Making the Difference". [50402]

Mr. Prescott: Today, I will be announcing the Government's initial response to the Coalfields Task Force Report at the Coalfields Conference at Ollerton Miners Welfare in North Nottinghamshire.

I will launch a detailed programme of action for the coalfields at a second conference to be held in the Autumn.

Rural White Paper

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the range of issues to be covered in the Rural White Paper; and when it will be published. [48611]

Mr. Meacher: We are further considering the range of issues to be covered in our confirming review of rural policy.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which organisations attended consultation meetings with Ministers held in connection with the production of the Rural England White Paper, Command 3016. [48607]

Mr. Meacher: A number of seminars and other meetings took place in 1995 prior to the publication of the previous administration's White Paper, "Rural England" (Command 3016). They were attended by a range of organisations representing rural interests. A full list could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Homelessness (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional costs are incurred within London in the provision of accommodation for the statutorily homeless; and what allowance he makes for this in the funding of London local government. [49440]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1996/97, net current expenditure by authorities in London on homelessness was £68m, which is equivalent to £9.61 per head of population. The corresponding figure for spending by authorities elsewhere in England was £51m, which is equivalent to £1.22 per head of population.

Different levels of expenditure may reflect variations in service and performance across Local authorities, not just costs.

The need for expenditure by local authorities on the provision of accommodation for the statutorily homeless is taken into account in the calculation of the 'other services' element of the standard spending assessments and hence in revenue support grant entitlements. The formula used to determine the amount for each local authority is given in The Local Government Finance Report (England) 1998/99 (HC506).

Refuse Disposal (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional costs are incurred within London in the provision of refuse collection and disposal services; and what allowance he makes for this in funding London local government. [49439]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1996–97, net current expenditure by authorities in London on refuse collection was £76m, which is equivalent to £10.77 per head of population. The corresponding figure for spending by authorities elsewhere in England was £429m, which is equivalent £10.21 per head of population.

In 1996–97, net current expenditure by authorities in London on refuse disposal was £96m, which is equivalent to £13.54 per head of population. The corresponding figure for spending by authorities elsewhere in England was £451m, which is equivalent to £10.74 per head of population.

Different levels of expenditure may reflect variations in service and performance across Local Authorities, not just costs.

The need for expenditure by local authorities on the provision of refuse collection and disposal services is taken into account in the calculation of the 'other services' element of the standard spending assessments and hence in revenue support grant entitlements. The formula used to determine the amount for each local authority is given in The Local Government Finance Report (England) 1998/99 (HC506).

School Costs (London)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional costs are incurred within London in the provision of (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary education; and what allowance he makes for this in his Department's funding of such provision. [49418]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1996–97, net current expenditure by authorities in London on the provision of nursery, primary and secondary education, and the corresponding figures for spending by authorities elsewhere in England was as shown in the following table.

	Authorities in London	Authorities elsewhere in England
Nursery and primary education	£1,362 million	£6,680 million
Secondary education	£800 million	£5,540 million
Special education	£250 million	£1,090 million
Total per pupil	£2,879	£2,385

Notes:

1. Nursery and primary education cannot be separately distinguished
2. Expenditure on special education cannot be divided between nursery, primary and secondary education
3. Expenditure per pupil cannot be calculated for each category, because numbers are not split. The pupil number used relates to the total number of pupils aged 5–15 in education as at January 1997.

Different levels of expenditure may reflect variations in service and performance across Local Authorities, not just in costs.

The need for expenditure by local authorities on nursery, primary and secondary eduction (including special education) is taken into account in the calculation of the corresponding elements of the standard spending assessments and hence in revenue support grant entitlements. The formula used to determine the amount for each local authority is given in The Local Government Finance Report (England) 1998/99 (HC506).

Connex South Central

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if a timetable for public consultation has been set in relation to the request by Connex South Central to the Rail Regulator for an extension of its current franchise from seven to 15 years; and if he will make a statement on the form such consultations will take. [49519]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is a matter not for the Rail Regulator, but for the Franchising Director. The franchise agreement with Connex South Central allows for an extension of the franchise term to be negotiated with the Franchising Director. I understand that he has consulted the principal rail users' representatives on the enhancements proposed by Connex South Central. He will conclude his evaluation of Connex's bid in due course.

Regeneration

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses have been received to the discussion paper on 'Regeneration Programme—the way forward'; when the consultation period will end; what is the timetable for the implementation of proposals on regeneration policies; and if he will make a statement. [49684]

Angela Eagle: The discussion paper 'Regeneration Programmes—the Way Forward' was issued in November 1997. We received 145 written responses to the paper by the end of March 1998. Feedback was also received from regional seminars from a wide range of organisations and individuals involved in regeneration.

The responses revealed a broad consensus on a number of issues including:

the continued need for a regeneration programme that addresses the multiple causes of social and economic decline; that, whilst retaining the benefits of competition, there should be a greater emphasis on the needs of the most deprived areas;

the need for a more collaborative approach to be taken by local partnerships and Government Offices to ensure a shared understanding of the regeneration needs of their areas; that schemes should take better account of existing strategies for promoting economic development and tackling depravation.

The responses have been fed into the Comprehensive Spending Review of Regeneration Programmes, and it is hoped to announce proposals for future regeneration policies and programmes shortly.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to make an announcement on the future of the Single Regeneration Budget; and if he will make a statement; [49730]

(2) what proposals he has for the SRB Challenge Fund; and if he will make a statement. [49729]

Angela Eagle: Under the Regional Development Agencies Bill, it is proposed that management of the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund (SRBCF) will be transferred from Government Offices for the Regions to the RDAs in April 1999. Different arrangements will apply in London, where it is proposed in the Greater London Authority White Paper that regeneration activity will become the responsibility of the Mayor, operating through the London Development Agency. Until the Mayor is established, the Government Office for London will continue to manage the SRBCF.

It is too early to say whether there will be a new (fifth) round of the SRBCF. Any announcement will be made in the light of the Comprehensive Spending Review, the outcome of which will be announced shortly.

Local Investment Fund

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the local investment fund established in 1994 has been loaned to voluntary organisations; how many projects have failed and at what cost to the fund; and what action is proposed to replenish the fund. [49682]

Angela Eagle: The Department helped establish the Local Investment Fund with a one-off grant; the rest of the resources came from the private sector. The Fund makes loans to voluntary organisations, which cannot raise loans from conventional sources, to support their economically viable enterprises contributing to the regeneration of deprived communities.

I understand from the Fund that, since 1994, a total of £1.2 million has been lent, or committed, to eligible bodies. All the loans made so far either have been repaid in full or are currently on target to repay on schedule, so replenishment of capital is not an issue.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will extend the powers available to local authorities to deal with empty and unfit privately owned homes. [49731]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are looking at the powers available to local authorities to tackle empty and unfit property in the private sector. We are conducting a review of the housing fitness standard and, alongside this, we are looking to see whether the current fitness enforcement procedures can be made more effective. We are also reviewing the efficiency of compulsory purchase and compensation law, including an assessment of the powers available to local authorities for dealing with housing.

Travel (Cheltenham)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentage of journeys to schools and further and higher education colleges in Cheltenham are made by (a) bicycle, (b) motor cycle and (c) car; [50056]

(2) what percentage of journeys to schools and further higher education colleges in Gloucestershire by district, are made by (a) bicycle, (b) motor cycle and (c) car; [50057]

(3) what percentage of journeys to work in Cheltenham are made by bicycle; [50054]

(4) what percentage of journeys to work in Gloucestershire, by district, are made by bicycle. [50055]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The percentages of journeys to work in Gloucestershire, by district, including Cheltenham, in 1991 are shown in the table.

Districts in Gloucestershire	Percentage travelling to work by bicycle
Cheltenham	7
Cotswold	5
Forest of Dean	1
Gloucester	6
Stroud	3
Tewkesbury	7

Source:
1991 Census

Data are not available for travel to school and colleges in Gloucestershire.

Unleaded Petrol

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the replacement of leaded petrol with the special grade of unleaded petrol containing lead substitutes will require adaptations to those engines in which it is used. [50025]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Engine adaptations should not be necessary for the majority of motorists who switch from leaded to unleaded petrol containing lead substitutes. This "lead replacement petrol" will be marketed with an equivalent octane level to that of leaded petrol and will contain a lead substitute that will provide satisfactory protection against engine wear under mixed motoring conditions. Increased wear of exhaust valve seats may arise in vehicles driven predominantly with high engine speeds or high loads. Should this condition occur, engine modifications would then become necessary.

Carlisle City Council

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to present to Parliament the Local Government Boundary Commission's proposal on the new ward arrangement for Carlisle City Council. [49733]

Mr. Raynsford: We have now made a preliminary decision to accept the final recommendations of the Local Government Commission for the districts of Cumbria. It is intended that the new arrangements will be established in time for the 1999 elections. Electoral Arrangement Orders are not subject to parliamentary procedure.

Railways

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from railway operating companies on the introduction of direct services from the regions to mainland Europe. [49955]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Virgin Group have made proposals to the Government and to London and Continental Railways, which are responsible for the management and operation of the Eurostar business. These proposals are being considered as part of the review of regional services which my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced in his statement to the House on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70.

Eurostar

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Virgin Rail's proposals to run Eurostar trains on a regional basis. [49746]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, that the consortium chosen by LCR to operate Eurostar had been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional Eurostar services, and to report to the Government before the end of the year. He has asked that proposals from the Virgin Group should be considered as part of that review.

Shipping (Investment)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage investment in United Kingdom shipping companies; and if he will make a statement. [49947]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are committed to reversing the decline in the UK merchant fleet and increasing employment and training opportunities for UK seafarers. That is why the Deputy Prime Minister established a Shipping Working Group late last year to look at ways to revitalise the British shipping industry. A shipping policy paper will follow publication of the White Paper on Integrated Transport.

Mobile Telephones (Drivers)

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to make it an offence for drivers to use hand-held mobile telephones in moving vehicles. [49785]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 10 July 1998]: The police have advised that the offences of "careless and inconsiderate driving" and

"failing to have proper control of a vehicle"

provide them with sufficient powers to prosecute, where appropriate, people driving while using a hand-held mobile phone. The publicity campaign launched on 16 March by my noble Friend the Minister for Roads aims to educate drivers about the dangers of using phones while on the move.

Number Plates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations the Government have had with companies involved with the manufacture and distribution of vehicle number plates about the proposed change in format; and if he will make a statement. [49959]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 10 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 470.

Local Authority Planning

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 1998, Official Report, column 330, what assessment he has made of the potential impact of the proposals recently issued by the London and South East Regional Planning Conference on housing need in the region; and what steps he plans in response to the Conference's statement that insufficient housing provision will be made for single people on low incomes. [50244]

Mr. Caborn: The London and South East Regional Planning Conference (SERPLAN) is consulting on the draft strategy for the SE which assumes that a proportion of the new single households expected up to 2016 will not need separate accommodation. SERPLAN will need to consider the responses made to it during the consultation before preparing draft revised regional planning guidance. Draft guidance will be subject to a public examination in Spring next year before being issued by the Secretary of State. It is important that SERPLAN fully justifies the assumption it has made on single households, and that it makes clear the consequences of not fully providing for the housing needs of the projected number of households in the region.

Integrated Transport Policy

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the disability organisations whom he consulted in drawing up his forthcoming integrated transport policy. [50002]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 10 July 1998]: Between August and November 1997, we carried out an extensive consultation as part of the fundamental review of transport policy. Over 25,000 copies of the consultation document were issued and over 7,000 organisations including the Disabled Persons Advisory Committee and members of the public responded in writing, a number of whom were disabled people or representatives of disability groups. In addition, Ministers attended a number of seminars to discuss a wide range of transport issues, including those of particular interest to disabled people, and we have held several meetings with disability organisations. The discussions and the written representations we received have played an important role in informing the development of our integrated transport policy.

Vehicle Fuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average cost of converting (a) a bus and (b) a HGV to run on (i) compressed natural gas and (ii) liquidefied petroleum gas. [50331]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The cost of converting these vehicles to run on compressed natural gas is approximately £12,500 for small to medium lorries and buses rising to about £18,000 to £25,000 for the largest lorries and buses. Costs for conversion to liquefied petroleum gas, where suitable engines are available, are understood to be of a similar order.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49814]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49816]

Angela Eagle: My Ministerial Support Unit does not currently have an e-mail address; we hope to be able to receive electronic mail in the Department by the end of the year. I shall write to the hon. Member when the system is fully operational.

Recycled Land

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–31, what types of land he includes within his definition of recycled land. [49853]

Mr. Raynsford: As we explained in Planning for the Communities of the Future, which was launched by the Secretary of State on 23 February, the Government are currently setting up a National Land Use Database. This will provide a comprehensive national picture of previously developed sites including derelict land and vacant buildings, which may be available for development. We are in the final stages of drawing up the list of site types and characteristics which will be covered by that database, following which we will be commissioning local authorities to undertake the identification work.

At the same time, we also announced that we would be issuing a discussion paper on the definitions of previously developed land and the issue of regional recycling targets. This will be available shortly.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the value of suburban and urban back gardens in the context of his target of 60 per cent. of development being concentrated on recycled land. [49855]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has not made a specific evaluation of the contribution back gardens can make to the supply of previously developed urban land for housing, although it is felt that this is likely to be small by comparison to other, previously developed sites. Developments on back gardens are included in the totals in the Department's monitoring the reuse of land; however, they cannot be separately identified.

Eco Management and Audit Scheme

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if in developing his proposals for best value, he will ensure that the Eco Management and Audit Scheme for local government is recognised as an acceptable quality management system. [49893]

Mr. Raynsford: Quality Management systems, including the Eco Management and Audit Scheme (EMAS), will be important management tools in the delivery of best value. However, the extent to which they are used by local authorities will be essentially a matter for them to decide in the light of their own local circumstances and priorities.

Where services under best value are to be provided by the private sector, local authorities may specify that contractors establish an EMAS, but in so doing they will need to comply with the EC Procurement Directives.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many local authorities have been accredited under the Eco Management and Audit Scheme; [49891]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to promote the use of Eco Management and Audit within local government. [49892]

Angela Eagle: At present, two local authorities are registered under the Eco Management and Audit Scheme for United Kingdom Local Government (LA-EMAS). The London Borough of Sutton has registered twenty-six separate units covering various operations, and Stratford-on-Avon District Council has registered all its departments and services apart from its Housing Service. The Housing Service will be included in Stratford-on-Avon's application for reregistration of all their services at the end of July. Hereford City Council, which was the first local authority to register all its operations, was obliged to withdraw from the scheme earlier this year when it ceased to exist as a separate authority. The new unitary council, the County of Herefordshire District Council, expect to register their Planning Services in 1999 and intend to register all their operations by the year 2003.

My Department has produced a full range of free publicity about LA-EMAS, including guidance notes, case studies and a video. It also works closely with the Local Government Management Board to encourage local authorities to participate in the scheme, and is jointly funding a Help-Desk which provides information and runs workshops as well as monitoring the progress of authorities towards full participation. 53 councils (11 per cent. of all 472 local authorities prior to restructuring in April 1998) have committed themselves to achieving external recognition by either EMAS or ISO 14001. A further 106 councils are currently implementing an environmental management system but have not yet decided whether they will seek registration under EMAS or certification to the international standard ISO 14001.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the respondents to the consultation paper on improving local financial accountability explicitly supported its proposals to replace capping. [49890]

Mr. Raynsford: We have received 387 responses to the consultation paper on improving local financial accountability which address capping issues, the majority of which support the end of crude and universal capping. We have received a wide range of views about what, if anything, should replace it and are still analysing these responses.

Suburban and Urban Gardens

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the wildlife value and recreational opportunities presented by suburban and urban gardens. [49854]

Angela Eagle: Suburban and urban gardens have considerable local value for wildlife and such gardens cover an estimated 3 per cent. of Britain's land surface. Gardens form important wildlife habitats in urban areas and are the place where the majority of the public enjoy their day to day contact with nature.

It is difficult to determine the recreational opportunities that suburban and urban gardens provide. However, it is clear that they offer scope for a range of informal recreational activities which will vary according to the size and type of garden.

Suburban gardens make excellent bird habitats and the number of different species they hold is often higher than that in nearby rural areas and always greater than that of the inner city. One in ten gardens has a pond and this has proved important to the common frog at a time when its population declined in many parts of the countryside. British town gardens have some of the best developed communities of plants growing on walls in Europe.

Approximately 30,000 species of animals are found in Britain and it is believed that about 25 per cent. occur in gardens. A single garden in Leicester had 2,200 species of plant and animal recorded there between 1973 and 1986 and this is likely to be reasonably representative of many medium gardens.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on development taking place in suburban and urban gardens. [49856]

Mr. Raynsford: Current planning policy on this issue is set out in detail in paragraph 26 of Planning Policy Guidance note 3 (Housing), which was issued by the last Administration. This states that:

"Homes with large back gardens are a common feature in many urban, suburban and village areas. Sometimes it may be acceptable to develop back gardens for new housing which is in keeping with the character and quality of the local environment. Where development of back garden or back land is allowed, it will require careful planning. For example, there must be proper means of access, which is convenient and safe for both drivers and pedestrians, and adequate provision for car parking. There must be adequate space between old and new buildings to avoid spoiling the amenity of neighbouring houses, for example, by overshadowing. Sensitive design and good landscaping are particularly important if new buildings are to be fitted successively into small vacant sites in established residential areas. "Tandem" development, consisting of one house immediately behind another and sharing the same access, is generally unsatisfactory because of the difficulties of access to the house at the back and the disturbance and lack of privacy suffered by the house in front".

The Government are currently revising PPG3, and will be issuing a draft for consultation later this summer.

Cycling

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the existing provision of secure cycle parking areas; and what steps are being taken to increase the provision of urban cycle routes. [49680]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The responsibility for on-street cycle parking rests with individual local authorities. Parking can also be provided at destinations such as schools, transport interchanges and workplaces by those responsible for the sites. Good-quality cycle parking is essential to overcome the fear of theft that is an important factor deterring more people from cycling. We have issued advice to practitioners to assist in the choice of the best locations for cycle parking in our Traffic Advisory Leaflet 7/97, "Supply and Demand for Cycle Parking".

The provision of urban cycle routes is also the responsibility of local authorities. We give advice on the design and construction of cycle facilities in our Local Transport Note publications on cycling and in our Traffic Advisory Leaflets which are issued to all local authorities.

We are encouraging all local authorities to provide better facilities for cycling as part of our support for the National Cycling Strategy and its objective of increasing cycling fourfold by 2012.

Vacant Housing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he is undertaking to reduce the number of vacant housing units; and what plans he has to encourage the development of an empty property strategy through public-private partnerships. [49678]

Mr. Raynsford: The majority of empty properties are in private ownership. Our aim is to make better use of these as part of our strategy for planning for household growth in the future.

We will continue to encourage local authorities to develop empty property strategies in their areas, in partnership with local public and private agencies. About 200 authorities have strategies in place or under development. My Department is providing funding to the Empty Homes Agency to work with authorities to bring more empty commercial property back into housing use and to assist rural authorities in drawing up successful strategies.

We have made extra money available to local authorities for renovating and improving stock through the Capital Receipts Initiative. Capital funding is also available through the Housing Investment Programme, the Single Regeneration Budget and the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme.

Brown-field Regeneration

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made in ensuring that Government targets for brown-field regeneration are met within the current unitary development plans. [49679]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government expect local authorities to make full and effective use of previously developed land both when allocating land for housing in their local plans and UDPs and when they decide planning applications. Authorities are making good progress towards that goal. Currently nationally over half of all new dwellings are being built on previously used sites.

In February, the Government announced in Planning for the Communities of the Future that they expected local authorities to be able to raise the national proportion of new homes to be built on previously developed land to 60 per cent. over the next 10 years. The same document went on to announce that the Government expect regional planning conferences to draw up regional recycling targets. This is because some regions will already be close to, or achieving, the national target, whilst others may be unable to match it because of their geographical and other circumstances.

Fishing (Safety)

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 461, what assessment he has made of the causes of fishing accidents resulting in the loss of life at sea in each of the last three years. [50388]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Marine Accidents Investigation Branch assesses the causes of all fishing vessel accidents where there is loss of life, as well any other, less serious, accidents. Individual investigations involve a comprehensive appraisal of all available evidence which might include the interviewing of survivors, underwater surveys of wrecks, and technical assessments of the vessels.

Recommendations are made to those best placed to take appropriate action, and lessons to be learned are published in MAIB's Safety Digest which is distributed widely to fishing companies, skippers, fishermen's missions and associations, and the fishing press.

The Safety Digest comprises individual reports as well as an overview statement relating to accidents in the fishing industry. Action is continuing on a number of fronts to improve the regrettably worsening fatality rate in the fishing industry and I am fully supportive of MAIB's role in this.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review his Department's policy on the non-recovery of bodies lost at sea. [50421]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The recovery of bodies is covered in the consultation paper on fishing vessel accidents and the recovery of those lost at sea. The responses to the paper will be carefully considered and the results of the consultation process announced before the end of the year. We will review our position in the light of those results.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he made of the representations he received on the proposed Code of Safe Practice for Smaller Fishing Vessels which was subsequently withdrawn. [50352]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The representations received on the proposed Code of Safe Practice For Fishing Vessels of Less than 12m Registered Length, following consultation in the summer and autumn of 1997, have been considered by the Steering Committee responsible for the development of the Code. Concerns about the complexity of the Code and the cost of compliance, together with points of details, are being taken into account in developing a revised code which will deliver a genuine improvement in safety without placing an undue financial burden on fishermen.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the proposed consultation paper on maritime safety in the fishing industry. [50389]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The consultation paper will be issued shortly.

Roads

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the daily and hourly peak traffic flows along (a) the M42 from Junctions 7 to 11 and (b) the M6 (i) from Junctions 4 to 10 and (ii) from Junctions 10 to 16, (1) in each of the last five years and (2) at present; [50246]

(2) what are the projected traffic flows along (a) the M42 from Junctions 7 to 11 and (b) the M6 (i) from Junctions 4 to 10 and (ii) from Junctions 10 to 16 in (1) 2000, (2) 2005, (3) 2010, (4) 2015 and (5) 2020. [50247]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Brian Jenkins, dated 13 July 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to your questions about past and current traffic flows and future projections for sections of the M42 and M6 motorways in the West Midlands. In his absence, I am writing on his behalf.

The average daily and peak flows for M42 junctions 7 to 11 and M67 junctions 4 to 16 are shown on Annex 1 attached. The table shows traffic flows on individual links (ie from junction to junction). The flows for 1993 to 1997 are based on averages of the available count data over the whole year for each of the sections of motorway, whilst the 1998 estimate is an average based on available data between January and May.

Forecasts of traffic flows over the same sections of M6 and M42 motorways are shown on the table at Annex 2. These have been produced by applying National Road Traffic Forecast (NRTF) central estimate factors (for urban or rural motorways as appropriate) to the 1997 annual estimates. They do not attempt to take into account any future changes in the road network or the effects of network constraints on the ability of the motorways to accommodate future traffic growth.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Airports

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the regulations of the allocation and operation of airport landing and take-off rights; and if he will make a statement. [50377]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The European Community has full competence for policy on the allocation of slots for take-offs and landings at airports. The legal framework for this is set out in EC Regulation 95/93 on common rules for the allocation of slots at Community airports. We are still awaiting a proposal from the Commission to revise the current slots regulation. The UK intends to take an active role in responding to that proposal in the Council of Ministers.

Retirement Homes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what investigations he has made into the purchase of managed freehold retirement homes; if he will assess the advantages of regulating the contracts entered into by purchasers of these homes; and if he will make a statement. [50168]

Mr. Raynsford: We have conducted no research into the purchase of managed freehold retirement homes. We are looking generally at the market for house purchases, but at present there are no plans to look at the purchase of retirement properties separately.

Shipping

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those measures undertaken by his Department to support British shipping since 1 May 1997. [50434]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Deputy Prime Minister established a Shipping Working Group late last year to look at ways to reverse the decline in the UK merchant fleet and to increase employment and training opportunities for UK seafarers. A shipping policy paper, based on the work of the Shipping Working Group, will follow publication of the White Paper on Integrated Transport.

My Department launched the new Support for Maritime Training (SMarT) scheme on 1 April 1998. We have already allocated 30 per cent. more to the SMarT budget than the total grant payments under the previous training schemes in 1997–98 and, whilst 465 new cadets were recruited last year, we have agreed funding for 643 new cadets this year on the basis of industry bids.

Merchant Navy Day

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received calling for the establishment of an official Merchant Navy Day; and if he will make a statement. [49557]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the election, there have been five written representations from the Merchant Navy Association, and eighty-nine from members of the Association writing in a personal capacity. Of the latter, fifty-one have been letters from MPs on behalf of their constituents.

Pesticides

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are taken to conduct post marketing surveillance on cases of suspected adverse reactions or pesticides incidents reported to the relevant authorities after initial investigation by those authorities in order to determine any long-term effects. [50343]

Angela Eagle: Investigated incidents of alleged ill-health involving pesticides are assessed by the Health and Safety Executive's Pesticides Incident Appraisal Panel (PIAP) so that new issues and trends can be identified. The independent Veterinary Products Committee's (VPC's) Appraisal Panel for Human Suspected Adverse Reactions (SARs) evaluates reports of SARs for the same purposes as PIAP. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides and VPC respectively are then informed so that any necessary action can be taken. In addition, the Government sponsor specific research projects to investigate possible health effects of pesticides and veterinary medicines, including long-term effects.

Tesco

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions (i) Ministers and (ii) officials have had, concerning the possibility of taxes or charges on car parking spaces at out-of-town shopping centres with (a) Tesco and (b) partners or employees of the firm Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement; [50157]

(2) if he will list the occasions upon which ministers and officials have had contact with Tesco plc or their representatives or advisers. [50159]

Mr. Prescott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) of 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 649.

We have carried out an extensive consultation as part of the fundamental review of transport policy. In addition, my Ministers and I have met with a large number of individuals and organisations and have attended a number of seminars to discuss a wide range of transport issues. The discussions and the written representations we received have played an important role in informing the development of our integrated transport policy.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many safety reports on Sellafield have been completed by the Health and Safety Executive over the last five years; and have been withheld from public release under the provisions of section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. [47876]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE), as the statutory nuclear safety regulator, produces a large number of internal documents each year which relate to safety at Sellafield. These are working documents produced as part of the dialogue between HSE and BNFL about what actions must be taken to comply with the law and to maintain or improve standards of safety. They can range from single page minutes to more substantial documents.

Because they contain material obtained in pursuance of HSE's regulatory duties, most of these working documents are subject to the restrictions on their disclosure provided for under Section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. It must be understood, however, that Section 28 also provides for exceptions to these restrictions, empowering HSE to make regulatory information public at any time if it believes that this is necessary to discharge its statutory functions to protect the health and safety of workers and the public.

It is HSE's policy to be as open as possible about issues which arise in respect of nuclear sites. To this end, HSE site inspectors produce regular reports which are given to the Local Community Liaison Committee for each licensed site. In addition, HSE publishes reports summarising the important aspects of major decisions or investigations. HSE has published ten such reports in the last five years.

PRIME MINISTER

Chief of the Defence Staff

Mr. Maples: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings he had with the Chief of the Defence Staff between 25 June and 2 July; and if the meetings were at the request of the Chief of the Defence Staff. [49549]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministerial colleagues and I met a large number of people, both service personnel and others in the period prior to the publication of the Strategic Defence Review, the most open and inclusive review of Britain's armed forces ever undertaken and in particular, at my request, I met the Chief of the Defence Staff on 29 June.

Rio Summit, May 1999

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the Rio summit in May 1999 on Latin American, Caribbean and European countries, mutual concerns and the environment. [48629]

The Prime Minister: The date for the EU/Latin America/Caribbean Summit planned for Rio in 1999 has yet to be fixed. The Government will take a decision on UK representation once a date has been agreed.

China

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise human rights issues during his forthcoming visit to China. [50424]

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that details of all contacts, formal and informal, between Government ministers and lobbyists are recorded and made available for parliamentary scrutiny. [50169]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 600.

European Aerospace and Defence Industry

Mr. Pound: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to co-ordinate Government activity in the restructuring of the European aerospace and defence industry. [50646]

The Prime Minister: I have established a new Ministerial Group (MISC5) to develop Government policy and co-ordinate related activity in this area. The Group will be chaired by the President of the Board of Trade.

The terms of reference and membership are as follows:

Ministerial Group on the Restructuring of the European Aerospace and Defence Industry (MISC5)

Constitutional Reform

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a Royal Commission to consider reform of the House of Lords. [49749]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Fendle (Mr. Prentice) on 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 357.

DEFENCE

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49849]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit does not currently have an e-mail address; however, we plan to set one up shortly.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 355, concerning departmental vehicles, if he will supply such information as is available without incurring disproportionate cost. [49965]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member in due course and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Trainer Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 265–66, what assessment he has made of the employment consequences for the UK of the award of the contract for the replacement of the Bulldog trainer aircraft; and what discussions he had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment concerning the costs to public funds of those consequences. [48040]

Dr. Reid: Assessments were made of the employment consequences for the UK for each of the bids for the Royal Air Force Light Aircraft Flying Task contract. These assessments included the consequences for employment at the University Air Squadron locations, the competing bidders and the aircraft manufacturers. Assessments were made in consultation with officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Yorkshire and Humberside Regional Government Office.

Parliamentary Question

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Ludlow for answer on 19 June relating to the Bilderberg meeting (Ref. 46988). [50351]

Mr. George Robertson: I replied to the hon. Member on 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 659.

Departmental Holdings

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 192 of the Strategic Defence Review, if he will include representatives of (a) the National Farmers Union, (b) the Tenant Farmers Association and (c) the Scottish Crofters Union as appropriate in respect of the management and disposal of Ministry of Defence rural holdings; and if he will make a statement. [50376]

Mr. Spellar: We have undertaken to consult a number of environmental and conservation bodies about our future rural estate strategy. We would be happy also to seek the views of the bodies listed and will contact them later in the year.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the need to improve access for humanitarian aid in Sudan. [50162]

Clare Short: The civil war in Sudan is preventing food reaching many starving people. Access to those in need is vital to the relief operation. I have had recent discussions with the Executive Directors of the World Food Programme and United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) on this question. While the position has improved, we need to maintain pressure on the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Army to ensure that enough access is provided to allow relief agencies to reach all vulnerable people. My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited Nairobi and Khartoum on 14–16 July to help secure this access.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) non-governmental organisations and (b) aid agencies in the past three weeks over the crisis in Sudan. [50164]

Clare Short: I met the Directors of Action Aid, Christian Aid, the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development (CAFOD), Save the Children Fund (SCF) and Oxfam on 23 June and the Executive Director of United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) on 9 July. My officials maintain frequent contact with all NGOs and agencies helping to alleviate the crisis in Sudan and regularly update me on the situation.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the current need for further humanitarian aid for Sudan. [50163]

Clare Short: On 23 June, the World Food Programme increased its assessment of need and estimated that 10,573 tonnes of food need to be delivered each month until the end of October to stabilise the situation in the south. But, as more access becomes possible, new needs will emerge and we expect this figure to be revised.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support is being provided to (a) the Nuba Relief Rehabilitation and Development Society and (b) other agencies working in the Nuba region of Sudan to overcome food shortages; and if she will make a statement. [49693]

Clare Short: We have received no requests from the Nuba Relief Rehabilitation and Development Society for support. Access to parts of the Nuba region by the United Nations continues to be denied by the Government of Sudan. We, along with other Governments and the United Nations, are pressing the Sudanese Government to agree access to all areas. We provide financial support to the World Food Programme and the UNICEF Nutrition Programme in Sudan. These programmes work to overcome food shortages throughout the whole of Sudan, including those parts of the Nuba region to which they have access.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contacts have been established with refugee Sudanese organisations based in the United Kingdom with particular reference to the Nubian International Relief and Development Council; what discussions have been held regarding the current political and economic situation in that country; and if she will make a statement. [49690]

Clare Short: Officials have had discussions with United Kingdom-based refugee Sudanese organisations but the Nubian International Relief and Development Council has not approached the Department for International Development (DFID). I have had discussions with my Foreign and Commonwealth colleagues on the political and economic situation and my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), the Minister for State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, has been involved in discussions within the framework of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development SudanPartners Forum. He is in Nairobi tomorrow for discussions with the Government of Kenya and the Sudan People's Liberation Army and will be travelling on to Khartoum for talks with the Government of Sudan on 15/16 July.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support is being provided to Operation Lifeline Sudan, organised by the UN; what discussions have taken place with the Government of Sudan regarding access to the areas affected by famine; and if she will make a statement. [49692]

Clare Short: We have committed £24 million in support of Operation Lifeline Sudan activities since February. We have pressed the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Army at all levels in Khartoum, Nairobi and London to allow full access to all vulnerable people. During our Presidency of the European Union, we led discussions on Sudan in the General Affairs Council and the Development Council which emphasised the need for all member states to make similar representations.

Colombia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's work in assisting vocational education in Colombia. [48632]

Clare Short: We are currently supporting, at a cost of £771,563, the second phase of a project with the Colombian Adult Vocational Training Service (SENA) designed to enhance training programmes for farmers in post-harvest fruit and vegetable management. The aim of the project is to create income and employment opportunities for the rural poor, by facilitating an increase in the quality and marketable quantity of fruit and vegetables in the post harvest chain.

In addition, a number of NGO projects which have helped to train Colombian community groups in marketing, business and other vocational skills have been supported through our Joint Funding Scheme.

Know-how Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what has been the financial contribution to date of the Know-how Fund in developing a bakery training school at St. Petersburg, Russia; and how much further funding is currently planned. [49948]

Clare Short: My Department has contributed £415,427 to date towards the development of the Leningrad Minibakeries Training Centre through a Know-how Fund project. The first phase of this project ended in May. The final cost to Department for International Development of the first phase will be approximately £480,000. A second phase of support began in June. We plan to provide approximately £100,000 of funding under this second phase, which will finish in June 1999. We have no plans for further funding beyond that date.

Chernobyl (Children)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid her Department is giving in the current year to help children suffering the effects of the Chernobyl disaster; and if she will make a statement. [50037]

Clare Short: We are providing assistance for the effects of the Chernobyl disaster mainly through the multilateral agencies such as the World Health Organisation.

In addition, in Belarus we are supporting Chernobyl charities through our Small Grants Scheme. We will fund a workshop in September 1998, through the Know-how Fund in collaboration with the charity Chernobyl Children's Life-Line, which will bring 12 people from Belarus to visit UK hospitals and social services here. Also under the Know-how Fund, and in collaboration with Chernobyl Children's Life-Line, we are preparing a project to support foster homes in Belarus.

Schools (Computers)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support she plans to give to programmes to increase the number of computers in schools in developing countries. [49621]

Clare Short: As our White Paper makes clear, we are strongly committed to the key international targets of universal primary education and gender equality in primary education by 2005. These targets will not be achieved unless we take advantage of appropriate technologies at all levels of education to up-grade teaching skills and enhance teaching and learning at all levels. In this respect books, journals and computer technology all have a significant part to play.

The Department for International Development (DFID) education projects are being implemented in many of the poorer areas of developing countries which lack basic school infrastructure, such as secure buildings and electricity, to support computer technology. In such places, our priority is geared towards the attainment of basic literacy and the provision of at least minimum facilities.

Nevertheless, we understand the increasing importance of computer technology in education. We support the Commonwealth of Learning (COL). Based in Vancouver, its purpose is to create and widen access to opportunities for learning via the application of communication technologies to education. We are funding a number of studies through COL to increase understanding of problems and practicalities of introducing new technologies and distance education in developing countries.

A number of our bilateral education projects include the provision of computers in, for example, resource centres where they are used to deliver teacher education programmes.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will give a breakdown of aid to Sri Lanka by the Government in the last 10 years. [49683]

Clare Short: The breakdown of UK Government's development assistance to Sri Lanka over the last 10 years is set out in the table. Final figures for 1997/98 are not yet available. Details are contained in the annual publication of British Aid Statistics, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the e-mail address of her Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49843]

Clare Short: The e-mail address is as follows:

Enquiry@dfid.gtnet.gov.uk.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what target her Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49841]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49842]

Clare Short: I will write to the hon. Member.

Banana Producers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what European Union funding is being provided to banana producers in ACP countries; and if she will make a statement. [49723]

Clare Short: I will write to my hon. Friend.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Wembley Stadium

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport under what circumstances the public sector will be able to assume ownership of the redeveloped Wembley Stadium or claw back public investment. [49889]

Mr. Banks: All Lottery Sports Fund grant awards are subject to clawback provisions as a mandatory condition of award. Clawback provisions in relation to the stadium will be included within the projects formal Lottery Funding Agreement and can be invoked if this is broken.

Television Licences

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people were prosecuted for non-payment of their television licences in South Yorkshire in the past 12 months. [49618]

Mr. Fisher: Prosecutions for television licence fee evasion are not recorded separately from other offences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts of 1949 and 1967, although the great majority of offences under these Acts relate to licence fee evasion. Provisional figures for 1997, the most recent year for which information is available, show 2,544 prosecutions under the wireless Telegraphy Acts in the South Yorkshire Police Force area.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what would be the cost of introducing free television licences for all households containing a pensioner aged over (a) 70 and (b) 75 years of age. [48955]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 6 July 1998] [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1998, c. 552]: The estimated cost of providing free television licences for all 'pensioner only' households where at least one member has reached the age of 70 is £288 million, and the estimated cost of free television licences for all 'pensioner only' households where at least one member has reached the age of 75 is £198 million.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will place in the Library copies of gender impact assessments which have been undertaken in respect of legislation introduced in this Parliament; if he will make it his policy to do so in respect of future legislation; and if he will make a statement. [47015]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department is committed to the mainstreaming initiative launched on 18 May which requires policy initiatives to be assessed for gender impact. We will report progress through the planned cross-Departmental Annual Report to Parliament, to be published after the end of this financial year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ukraine

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance is being provided in support of change of use projects in the Ukraine to convert redundant missile facilities into satellite launch pads; if this funding provides for retraining local scientists to be able to undertake this work; and if he will identify the amounts of funding (a) arising from bilateral aid, (b) arising from EU aid and (c) co-ordinated by the EBRD. [44681]

Mr. Fatchett: There are no existing sites in Ukraine suitable for launching satellites. However, we are aware that there have been proposals that Ukrainian ballistic missile manufacturing facilities inherited from the Soviet Union, which have been doing some missile work under contract from Russia, could build launch vehicles for satellites, making use of their considerable expertise in rocket propulsion. HMG have no plans to fund any retraining of local scientists for this purpose and are not aware of EU or EBRD involvement in the venture.

Correspondence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the volume of correspondence sent to and received from hon. Members by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the periods (a) 1 January to 26 March 1994 and (b) 1 January to 26 March 1998. [47688]

Mr. Robin Cook: Between 1 January to 26 March 1998, I received 1,329 letters from hon. Members. In the same period, I replied personally to 222 letters from hon. Members.

This reflects the long-standing convention that the Foreign Secretary answers letters from Cabinet (or ex-Cabinet) Ministers, Shadow Cabinet Ministers and Privy Councillors, and replies to some other hon. Members where there is special reason for doing so.

On immigration issues, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replies to Privy Councillors, and the FCO Correspondence Unit to other hon. Members. On consular issues, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replies to the majority of letters.

The figures for 1994 are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49804]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This department handles its public e-mail via an interactive form on its Web site (www.fco.gov.uk). Messages are acknowledged electronically and then sent to the relevant internal address for appropriate reply.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meet that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49802]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of the Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Diplomats

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the relative staffing levels of diplomatic representation abroad as between the UK and (a) France, (b) Germany and (c) Italy. [48206]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 30 June 1998]: A 1997 European Commission survey of Member States gave numbers of home-based Foreign Ministry staff serving abroad:

	Number
UK	2,400
Italy	2,816
France	6,000
Germany	3,619

Nazi Gold

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names and addresses of those people who have had their claims honoured following the International Conference on Nazi Gold. [49522]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The aim of the London Conference on Nazi Gold (2 to 4 December 1997) was to establish a sound body of fact on gold looted by the Nazis from both occupied countries and individuals, on which governments and other bodies could base future decisions. It achieved this aim and the full Conference report will be published shortly. The Conference did not set out to establish claims procedures, or to settle individual claims.

Cardiff Summit

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of public events for the Cardiff Summit. [49645]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The only public event at the Cardiff European Council paid for by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was the reception given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister for some 250 representatives of the local community, as well as exhibitors and sponsors of the "Wales, the Next Generation" exhibition, in the National Museum of Wales on 14 June. This cost £5,000 (ex VAT). The fireworks display at Cardiff Castle at the end of the dinner given by HM The Queen on 15 June could also be seen by many members of the public in Cardiff. It cost £28,085.11 (ex VAT), and was funded through sponsorship. Some other events were laid on for the public by the local authorities and other local bodies.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost to (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) the European Union institutions of hosting the European Council in Cardiff, indicating separately the costs of the organisation of (i) the Youth Summit and (ii) other events associated with the Council meeting. [49755]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are still awaiting final invoices, but expect the cost to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of hosting the European Council in Cardiff to be about £6.6 million (ex VAT). There were also costs arising for the Home Office and the Welsh Office.

The European Union institutions involved in the European Council met the costs of their own staff, senior officials and some office equipment. These costs are not readily available.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave a grant of £2,500 to the British Youth Council who were involved in the organising of the Youth Summit.

I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer today with regard to the costs to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of other events at the European Council meeting.

Mr. Thomas Trafford Ottowell

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the current validity of the claim by the late Mr. Thomas Trafford Ottowell, registered under the Board of Trade No. ED61544, for repayment of unlawful and arbitrary deductions by the German Government from his savings. [49521]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The British Government are not in a position to assess the current validity of this claim which appears to be more a matter for the Austrian or German authorities.

Cuba

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the draft EU-US Understanding on Cuba of 18 May will require EU countries not to encourage investment in property nationalised from Cuban nationals who subsequently acquired US nationality. [50050]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The disciplines on investment in expropriated property agreed as part of the EU/US Understanding signed on 18 May include a denial of government support to new investment in properties expropriated in contravention of international law. Each case would have to be considered on an individual basis. There are no specific provisions concerning properties which belonged to individuals who were Cuban citizens at the time of their expropriation and who subsequently became US citizens.

EU (Television Advertisements)

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many television advertisements have been funded by EU institutions in 1998–99 to date; what has been their nature; what has been the estimated number of viewers in each EU country; and how much they have cost. [49758]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not readily available. We will make inquiries with the institutions concerned and I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to trace the assets of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia under the control of Serbia and to ensure that these are returned on an equitable basis to the successor nations. [50349]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None. It is for the five successor States to resolve questions of succession to assets and liabilities of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Negotiations continue under the auspices of the High Representatives special negotiator, Sir Arthur Watts, whose fees we cover.

Latin American Students

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's current funded scholarships to Latin American students in British universities. [48630]

Mr. Fatchett: The FCO's Scholarship programme for overseas students comprises the British Chevening Scholarships (in co-operation with the Department for International Development), an annual grant to the Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission for Marshall Scholarships, and a contribution to the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan. The principal objective of our scholarship programme is to win long term friends overseas for Britain. Scholarships are targeted at potential leaders, decision makers and opinion formers in about 150 countries.

In Latin America Chevening scholarships are used to promote our twin objectives in the region of the increased trade and investment and closer political ties, with an increasing emphasis on good government and human rights.

Belarus

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Government of Belarus regarding the treatment of diplomatic missions in Minsk. [50423]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 1 July 1998, Official Report, column 202. Since the recall for consultations to the British Ambassador in Minsk and the return to Minsk of the Belarusian Ambassador in London, the British Charge d'Affaires in Minsk, and the representatives of the missions directly affected by Belarusian action, have continued to make frequent representations to the Belarusian authorities, so far without success. In response to the continued failure of the Belarusian authorities to comply with international law, on 9 July the EU introduced visa restrictions on Belarusian Ministers, Deputy Ministers and senior officials in the Presidential Administration.

Morocco

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Morocco about the fines imposed on Graham Hutt, Serge Dechoz, Kelly Vinikka and Antero Ylikangas, their arrest and interrogation; what discussions he has had with that Government about religious freedom in Morocco; and if he will make a statement. [50166]

Mr. Fatchett: We have provided consular assistance to Dr. Hutt, but we have made no representations to the Moroccan authorities about his case, which is sub judice. He has appealed against his sentence and is free to leave Morocco pending the outcome. The others referred to are not British nationals. We do not have consular responsibility for them in Morocco.

Moroccan law allows personal freedom of religion, as provided for in the Constitution. The Christian church is active in Tangier, Casablanca and Rabat, which has its own Roman Catholic cathedral. As well as the Christian community, Morocco is home to a large Jewish community.

Pakistan

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Pakistan regarding sentences imposed as a result of its blasphemy laws. [50167]

Mr. Fatchett: Our High Commission in Islamabad led an EU demarche to the Pakistan authorities on 14 May about the situation of religious minorities. We made clear the EU's concern about the death penalty imposed on Ayub Masih, a Christian, for blasphemy, and the negative effect such cases can have on inter-faith relations in Pakistan.

I raised the rights of religious minorities with the government of Pakistan during my visit there in June last year, as did my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in January this year.

Human Rights Project Fund

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects approved for funding from the Human Rights Project Fund to date and the sums allocated in each case. [49485]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: More than 100 projects totalling over £3.5 million have been approved or approved in principle to date from the Human Rights Project Fund:

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Council what target she sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members. [49880]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Council what is the e-mail address of her Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49882]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: My office's e-mail address is "ecrooks@cabinetoffice.gsi.net".

Drug Action Teams

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the President of the Council (1) if she will make a statement about future funding to secure the continued existence of drug action teams; [50336]

(2) if she will take into account the specific nature of drug issues in rural areas when future funding for drug action teams is determined. [50337]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Decisions on resourcing for anti-drugs programmes will be announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper. Further details will be released in announcements at a later date.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49838]

The Attorney-General: The target set for the maximum time in which letters are responded to is 15 working days. During the year 1997/98, the latest period for which figures are available, 88% of letters were answered within that target. The average time taken to respond to letters from an hon. Member was 13 days.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49840]

The Attorney-General: Although my Department does not have a separate Ministerial Correspondence Unit the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers has the following e-mail address:

lslo@gtnet.gov.uk

Counsel's Fees

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish the current year's budget for the Crown Prosecution Service together with his estimate of the amount to be spent on counsel's fees. [49213]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service's gross provision for 1998–99 totals £302,737,000. At this stage I estimate that the Department will spend £86,000,000 on counsel's fees. Expenditure on council's fees will be monitored throughout the year to refine the forecast outturn and an additional Supply provision will, if necessary, be sought.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General what budgetary controls are exercised in the expenditure of public funds in payment of counsel's fees in work done by the Serious Fraud Office. [49216]

The Attorney-General: In SFO cases the normal procedure is to ask 3 counsel to tender for the work. Hourly rates for preparatory work and a daily rate for court attendance are then agreed in advance. The number of hours spent in preparation is agreed with the lawyer in charge of the case and is an integral part of the SFO budgeting arrangements. It should be noted that the fee levels will not necessarily be the deciding factor but rather one of the factors in the choice of counsel.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the total budget for the Crown Prosecution Service for each of the last three years together with the amount spent on counsel's fees. [49212]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service's total provision for each of the last three years together with the amount spent on counsel's fees were as follows:

Year	Provision	Counsel fee expenditure
1997–98	320,752,000	85,134,613
1996–97	320,307,000	82,699,317
1995–96	315,817,000	73,884,561

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the total budget for the Serious Fraud Office for each of the last three years and the amount of each of those budgets that was spent on counsel's fees. [49215]

The Attorney-General: The SFO (net of Appropriations in Aid) budget and expenditure on counsel's fees for each of the last three years are as follows:

Year	Provision	Counsel fees
1995–96	17,376,000	3,245,642.57
1996–97	16,988,000	3,091,045.09
1997–98[1]	16,317,000	[2]2,574,842.03

[1] This year's account has yet to be audited and the figure is subject to change

[2] The fees paid to counsel excludes VAT which is to be recovered for the first time by the Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria are applied in agreeing fees with counsel's clerks. [49214]

The Attorney-General: Fees are determined by the Crown Prosecution Service either by reference to the rates and guidance set out in the CPS Fee Scheme, or in exceptional cases, negotiated individually. The CPS Fee Scheme is agreed annually with the Legal Aid and Fees Committee of the Bar Council.

When agreeing fees in individual cases, the Crown Prosecution Service has regard to any unusual weight, gravity or complexity of the issues, and to the skill, standing, seniority or expertise of counsel appropriate to the case. The fee determined reflects the time actually and justifiably spent by counsel in both preparing and presenting the case for hearing, and provides fair and reasonable remuneration for the work done.

The Serious Fraud Office apply a different procedure, having regard to the complexity and weight of the work undertaken. It is described in my answer today to Question No. 49216, Official Report, column 39.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 564, what was the expenditure in 1996–97 on counsel's fees by (a) the Department of Trade and Industry and (b) HM Customs and Excise. [49217]

The Attorney-General: Having regard to the context of my hon. Friend's question, I have taken it to refer only to fees paid to prosecuting counsel. The expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1996–97 on counsel's fees for prosecution work was £824,540.10 (inclusive of VAT).

The total fees paid by Customs and Excise to prosecution counsel in the same period was £7,141,612 (inclusive of VAT).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Training Allowance

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the provision of allowances for hon. Members to undertake training to assist in the fulfilment of their duties. [49688]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: There is no allowance specifically for Members' training.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bloody Sunday Inquiry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations she has received concerning the legal representation of witnesses at the Bloody Sunday inquiry; and if she will make a statement. [49722]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have received two letters from a representative of Madden and Finucane (Solicitors) and my officials have met a delegation from the Irish Government to listen to concerns. The level of legal representation is a matter for the Inquiry being conducted by Lord Saville and his team.

"Partnership for Equality"

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the replies she received to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" and what percentage of the total expressed opposition to the proposals with particular reference to the proposed establishment of a single commission dealing with all equality issues; and if she will list the groups expressing opposition. [48372]

Mr. Worthington: Written comments on the consultative elements of the White Paper were to be sent by 12 June 1998 and by that date we had received 114 replies, as indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 254. A further 9 responses were subsequently received and a total of 123 were considered. Of those expressing a view on the proposed establishment of a single Commission 55 or 45 per cent. were broadly against. These were:

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the responses to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" will be made public. [48373]

Mr. Worthington: The Government do not intend to publish the responses but arrangements have been made for copies of the replies, with the exception of one requesting confidentiality, to be placed in the Parliamentary Libraries.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" are being made as a result of responses received to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality". [48374]

Mr. Worthington: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) on 10 July 1998, Official Report, columns 665–66.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will allow interested parties to make changes to their submissions to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" to take account of the publication of the Belfast Agreement. [48375]

Mr. Worthington: No. All but two of the 123 submissions on the White Paper were received after the Belfast Agreement was published and almost all respondents were therefore able to take the Agreement into account.

Equality Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reduction in costs and manpower she estimates will occur as a result of the proposed establishment of a single Equality Commission. [48376]

Mr. Worthington: The proposal to establish a single Equality Commission was not based on seeking a reduction in costs and manpower. A new Commission would take on roles additional to those currently exercised by the Fair Employment Commission, the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland, the Commission for Racial Equality for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Disability Council. These new roles include responsibilities in relation to the statutory obligation on the public sector to promote equality of opportunity, changes to Fair Employment law proposed in the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" including the outlawing of discrimination in the provision of goods, facilities and services and functions comparable to those proposed for a Disability Rights Commission in Great Britain. No estimate of the costs and staffing of such a body has yet been made.

Suicides

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received concerning recent trends in the rate of suicide; and what measures she intends to take. [48378]

Mr. Worthington: Representations have been received from one local councillor and from the Coroner for Greater Belfast. I am shortly to meet the Coroner to hear his assessment of recent trends in the rate of suicides, particularly in relation to young people. Additionally, a number of practical steps are being taken by the Department of Health and Social Services and by local health and social services boards and trusts to identify the possible root causes of suicides and prevent further tragic loss of life.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49837]

Mr. Hoon: The Unit's e-mail address is:

mcu.lcd@gtnet.gov.uk.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what target he sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49835]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service Official Report, column 1.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the total cost to his Department of (a) considering and (b) processing successful applications for silk in 1998. [49267]

Mr. Hoon: The departmental expenditure apportionable to the procedure for considering applications for Queen's Counsel in 1998 is estimated to be £117,236. This comprises £65,975 for direct staff costs and £51,261 for indirect costs, such as a share of the costs of common services. The cost of processing successful applications (that is, the cost of granting silk to successful applicants) in 1998 was approximately £9,000, which was recovered through a fee paid by new Queen's Counsel.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what fee his Department would have needed to charge each applicant in 1998 to cover the cost of processing applications for silk. [49268]

Mr. Hoon: The Department would have needed to charge applicants a fee of £230 to enable the estimated departmental expenditure apportionable to the procedure for considering applicants for Queen's Counsel in 1998 to be fully recovered. The cost of granting silk to successful applicants is covered by the fee of £150 payable by new Queen's Counsel.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oil Over-capacity

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the problems of physical storage capacity world-wide associated with the world-wide over-capacity in the production of oil. [48631]

Mr. Battle: Assessments of current surplus storage capacity are difficult to make due to a lack of complete information on the current levels of stocks. However, it is clear that global inventories are currently high. In their latest Monthly Oil Market Report, the International Energy Agency estimates that, for April 1998 (the latest month for which accurate data are available), total OECD industry and Government-controlled stocks of crude oil and products stood at 3,733 million barrels, 101 million barrels higher than at the same time last year.

Football Hooligans

Mr. Loughton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from employers on the taking of further measures against people who have been convicted of offences during the World Cup while in France, on their return to the United Kingdom. [48400]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has received one letter.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for encouraging the development of energy from waste technology. [49677]

Mr. Battle: To date, well over 200 schemes, with a total capacity exceeding 1,000MW, have been offered contracts under the first four rounds of the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-1 to NFFO-4) to generate power via waste-based technologies from sources including landfill gas, sewage gas, and municipal and industrial waste.

In the short-term future, I expect to announce the fifth round of the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO-5) in the autumn. Subject to suitable bids being received, I am considering including three separate bands in the NFFO-5 Order for waste-based technologies—for landfill gas, for municipal and industrial waste, and for municipal and industrial waste using combined heat and power (CHP)—as well as separate bands for small-scale hydro and onshore wind energy.

In the longer term, and in line with this Government's manifesto commitment to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources, I have been reviewing policy towards new and renewable energy, including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10% of UK electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments. Further support for energy from waste technology is being considered as part of that review process. I hope to announce the outcome of that review this summer.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the EU White Paper on renewable energy. [49676]

Mr. Battle: We have given the White Paper careful consideration, along with our European partners. Under the UK Presidency, the Council of Ministers adopted a Resolution welcoming the White Paper and urging Member States to develop strategies to promote renewables in order to bring about a substantial increase in renewables throughout the EU.

In line with this Government's manifesto commitment to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources, I have been reviewing policy towards new and renewable energy, including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10% of UK electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010, and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans her Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49884]

Mrs. Beckett: The core Department has had facilities in place for some time to allow all staff to correspond electronically with any individual or organisation able to exchange E-mail via public networks such as the internet. The Department's Agencies have, or plan to have, similar facilities.

E-mail addresses are included in the Department's letterhead and, additionally, will be published for key contacts. The Department is also connected to the Government Secure Intranet and able to correspond electronically with an increasing number of public sector organisations via that network.

In line with the Government's target that:

"25% of Government transactions should be capable of being handled electronically by 2002", we have active programmes of our own aimed at ensuring these facilities are used to best effect, and we are also involved in central initiatives to develop and extend the concept of 'Joined-Up' Government for wider business benefit.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the e-mail address of her Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49885]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department does not have a central Ministerial Correspondence Unit. Each Minister's Private Office handles its own correspondence. The relevant e-mail addresses are:

beckett.tlo@tlo.dti.gov.uk

battle.tlo@tlo.dti.gov.uk

Joint Research Equipment Initiative

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much public money has been allocated to date to the Joint Research Equipment Initiative; how much more will be allocated; and what is the planned limit for public contributions. [49946]

Mr. Battle: In 1996, the first year of the Joint Research Equipment Initiative, £25 million of public money was allocated to the scheme. In 1997, this figure rose to £35 million. The amount of public money allocated to date for 1998 is £25 million.

Future public contributions are dependent on allocations from the Science Budget and DfEE.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to announce the results of the third round of the Joint Research Equipment Initiative. [49945]

Mr. Battle: As stated in the JREI rules, which were available from the Higher Education funding councils' web sites until the closure of the competition on 31 May 1998, it is expected that the results of the third round will be announced by the end of January 1999.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many bids have been received for the third round of the Joint Research Equipment Initiative. [49944]

Mr. Battle: Applications are still being checked for eligibility, but initial indications are that some 400 applications have been received for JREI 98.

Export Licence Applications

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of applications for export licences were processed by her Department within 20 days for the period 1 May 1997 to date. [48227]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: The Export Control Organisation (ECO) of DTI measures its performance against two aims:

- to provide a substantive response to an application within 20 working days of receipt for applications that need to be circulated to other Government Departments according to their policy requirements ('circulated' cases);
- to provide such a response within 10 working days of receipt for applications that are dealt with by DTI itself ('non-circulated' cases).

In each case, full documentation in support of the application must be provided by the applicant at the outset for these targets to apply.

ECO management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four-week periods. The accumulated data for the period beginning nearest to 1 May 1997 are for the period 3 May 1997 to 30 May 1997. The latest period for which management data are available is the period 2 May 1998 to 29 May 1998.

To the nearest percentage point, 51 per cent. of circulated cases during the period were finalised within 20 working days.

This information was taken from the Export Control Organisation's management data, which are compiled in order to monitor performance at processing applications for Standard Individual Export Licences. The performance measures do not apply to applications for Open Individual Export Licences (due to the very wide variations between goods and country coverage of such licences), to licences covering Iran or Iraq or to exports which are subject to control solely because of United Nations Sanctions.

Science and Engineering

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the future of the science and engineering base. [50611]

Mrs. Beckett: As a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review I am able to announce a £1.1 billion additional investment. This will transform the Science and Engineering Base, modernise the UK's research performance, respond to the Dearing Committee's concerns about research infrastructure in universities, and help boost economic growth. It reverses the decline under the previous Government and is made possible by a path-breaking public private partnership with the Wellcome Trust. Up to 2002, the package includes:

- A £600 million fund for building new and refurbishing existing university laboratories, equipment and other essential infrastructural needs as identified in the Dearing Report, funded equally by my Department and the Wellcome Trust;
- £400 million for the Research Councils to meet the current and capital costs of new project funding in priority areas like life sciences;
- £100 million from the Wellcome Trust towards a new high intensity synchrotron X-ray machine which will help keep the UK at the forefront of research on the exploitation of the human genome;
- new arrangements to ensure that the Funding Councils and the Research Councils work closely together to deliver better value for money and transparency in the use of research funds.

The UK's output of world class scientists and cutting-edge discoveries is second to none—and a guarantee of our economic prosperity and quality of life in the 21st Century. Our greatest asset is our scientists, but they need funding for their research and tools to do it with. Years of under-investment in laboratories and equipment—and in the people themselves—have jeopardised this inheritance. This major injection of funds reverses this decline that our predecessors allowed, ensuring that we have a modern and effective science base for the new millennium—particularly in the life sciences where the UK is a world leader.

I am particularly grateful to the Wellcome Trust—the major charitable funder of scientific research in the UK—for the generous offer which has resulted in this pioneering partnership.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts she is making to raise awareness of environmental and sustainable issues within her Department; and if specific training will be made available to staff where appropriate. [50059]

Mr. Battle: Like all my ministerial colleagues, I am clear about the important role that the Government's commitment to the objective of sustainable development must play in DTI's work. A range of actions has been taken to ensure that this is backed up throughout the Department, and more will be developed. This includes: circulation of copies of the recently published detailed advice on environmental appraisal to all directors and to staff at all levels, to be supported by staff training sessions; a series of seminars with prominent speakers from industry and NGOs to raise the level of understanding of sustainable development issues and the implications for our work; a Sustainable Development network throughout DTI and Government Offices to provide a focal point for two-way communication with the 50-strong Environment Directorate which provides a central contact point for advice and information to all staff on environmental issues; and a revised Green Housekeeping Guide which has recently been issued to all staff, as well as being made available on the Department's intranet, with the aim of both further increasing staff awareness of environmental issues and encouraging staff action that helps to ensure continuous improvement in the Department's environmental performance. Alongside the DTI's contribution to the revision of the UK Sustainable Development Strategy, work is also underway on the development of a DTI sustainable development strategy. The DTI strategy will encompass all DTI policies and operations, including training to ensure effective implementation.

Part-time Work Directive

Miss McIntosh: To ask the President the Board of Trade when she estimates the Part-time Work Directive will take effect in the UK. [49869]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Part-time Work Directive was extended to the UK on 7 April with two years for implementation. It will therefore take effect in the UK by April 2000. We intend to consult widely on the best way to implement the Directive.

Textiles Industry

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment her Department has made of the Commission's calculations relating to the need for EU anti-dumping tariffs on unfinished textiles; [49629]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact of the imposition of the anti-dumping tariffs on unfinished textiles on imports of grey cloth from (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Germany; [49624]

(3) what estimate she has made of the impact on employment levels in the United Kingdom textile finishing industry of the EU's imposition of anti-dumping duties on finished textiles; [49620]

(4) what assessment she has made of the effects on the prices and output of finished textiles as a result of the EU anti-dumping tariff on unfinished textiles. [49623]

Mrs. Roche: The European Commission has imposed provisional anti-dumping duties on imports of most unbleached cotton fabrics from China, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Pakistan and Turkey for a period of six months from 8 April 1998 because, in its judgment, such imports were being dumped and causing injury to Community weavers and the Community interest calls for intervention to prevent such injury.

We, with a clear majority of Member States, advised strongly against this action.

In our judgment, any injury to EU weavers has resulted predominantly from increased imports from countries outside the EU that are not covered by the anti-dumping investigation and that are not subject to the provisional anti-dumping duties. Any benefit to EU weavers from any reduction in imports from countries that are subject to those duties and resulting from those duties is therefore likely to be temporary.

On the other hand, the imposition of anti-dumping duties, particularly if they are made definitive and remain in place for five years, is likely to result in some increase in the price of unbleached cotton fabrics, to the detriment of EU users of such cloth and, ultimately, of EU consumers. Moreover, manufacturers in the countries that are subject to those duties are thereby given a clear commercial incentive to bleach, print or dye, and, perhaps, make up their cloth before export, to the detriment of the corresponding EU industries.

The likely overall effect is a reduction in production and employment in the EU textile industry.

While the likely direction of these effects is clear, reliable estimates of their scale cannot readily be made.

UK imports of unbleached cotton fabrics from Germany are modest, and unlikely to be greatly affected by the imposition of anti-dumping duties on the import into the EU of such cloth from certain countries outside the EU.

The Government will, for those reasons, vigorously oppose the imposition of definitive anti-dumping duties on unbleached cotton fabrics should the European Commission make such a proposal to the Council of Ministers.

Casting Industry

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of (a) the imposition of and (b) the recent removal of EU anti-dumping duties on pig-iron on the British casting industry. [49627]

Mrs. Roche: The European Commission introduced anti-dumping measures on imports into the EU of hematite pig-iron from Brazil, Poland, Russia, and the Ukraine from January 1994, and on such imports from the Czech Republic from January 1996.

We advised strongly against such action primarily because we were not satisfied that imports from those countries were the cause of any injury to EU producers of hematite pig-iron and because of the likely detriment to users of that pig-iron in the EU, the foundry industry.

The European Commission's subsequent review of those measures, in essence, confirmed that our concerns were well founded. We therefore welcome the European Commission's repeal of those measures from 9 May 1998. This is likely to benefit the foundry industry in the UK and the rest of the EU.

Planning (Overhead Lines)

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to review the Overhead Lines (Exemptions) Regulations 1990 and their interrelationship with normal planning regulations. [49745]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Nuclear Industry

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many reports on the nuclear industry are currently being withheld for reasons of commercial confidentiality under section 28b of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974; and if she will list their titles. [49475]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 9 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today, in answers from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 19.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Sales (Young People)

22. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the purchase of alcohol by persons under 18 years old. [48416]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received representations about preventing adults from buying alcohol on behalf of children, increasing the use of test purchases and closing the loophole affecting sales by company employees.

Isle of Man and Channel Islands

23. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's handling of relations with the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. [48418]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend is the Privy Councillor with special responsibility for the Islands, and the Constitutional Unit of the Home Office is the formal point of communication between the United Kingdom and the Island authorities.

Neighbourhood Nuisance

24. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his time scale for the introduction of new legislation to deal with neighbourhood nuisance. [48420]

Mr. Michael: We plan to implement the anti-social behaviour order provisions of the Crime and Disorder Bill with effect from 1 April 1999. We expect to implement the Bill's provisions for local crime and disorder reduction partnerships in September, so that the first crime and disorder audits can take place this autumn, to allow strategies to tackle locally identified problems to be in place by 1 April 1999. Youth Justice and other provisions of the Bill will also be implemented from this autumn onwards.

Immigrants (Detention)

25. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of immigration detention procedures to be complete. [48421]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The review is largely complete. I expect to announce our approach to detention in the proposed Immigration and Asylum White Paper.

Illegal Immigration

26. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extent to which illegal immigration into this country is by way of other member countries of the European Union. [48422]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Significant numbers of illegal immigrants enter the United Kingdom from neighbouring continental countries within the European Union. We have been handicapped in returning many of them by the provisions of the Dublin Convention signed up to by the previous Government.

Paedophile Activity

27. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effects of his initiatives to reduce paedophile activity. [48423]

Ms Quin: There has been a significant change of approach since we implemented the Sex Offenders Act 1997 last September, with the police and probation services actively co-operating over public protection.

New measures in the Crime and Disorder Bill, in particular the Sex Offender Order and the extended supervision of sex offenders, will help protect the public still further from the risk of known sex offenders re-offending.

Prisons (Population)

28. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current number of inmates in Her Majesty's prisons and the forecast change over the next 12 months. [48425]

Ms Quin: The current prison population is 65,754. If trends which have been observed in recent years continue, the total prison population is expected to average 65,700 during 1999, once the effect of Home Detention Curfew has been taken into account. Home Detention Curfew, as provided for in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], is expected to reduce the prison population by around 3,000 to 4,000 below where it would otherwise be. On this basis, the prison population is expected to be 64,500 at the end of June 1999.

Young Offender Institutions

29. Mr. Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the contents of current regimes in young offender institutions. [48426]

Ms Quin: In line with recommendations made by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons in his Thematic Review of young prisoners, a significant programme is underway to review and improve arrangements for holding young offenders within the Prison Service.

Improved regimes are being developed in four Young Offender Institutions: Huntercombe, Werrington, Swinfen Hall and Onley. £2 million has been made available to allow for an increase in hours spent in purposeful activity; an improvement in education, work, offending behaviour programmes and Physical Education; and development of throughcare and resettlement. The results of this project will be assessed by comparing the progress of young prisoners in these establishments with those in a control group.

As part of the Government's New Deal, "Welfare to Work" gateway courses are being trialed in 11 establishments. Seven of these establishments are Young Offender Institutions and two hold young offenders as well as adult prisoners. This scheme will benefit 18 to 24-year-old prisoners by improving their chances of finding employment after release, and therefore should assist the resettlement process.

The results from both projects will inform the development of regimes in other young offender in other young offender institutions.

Police (Lancashire)

30. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the number of beat policemen in Lancashire. [48427]

Mr. Michael: The Lancashire Police Authority made representations about the funding settlement for 1998–99, but it expressed no particular concern about the number of police officers on the beat. The previous Government's Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 gave chief constables the responsibility to determine the number of officers in each force within available resources.

Provisional police manpower figures for March 1998 show that the number of constables in Lancashire increased by 12 over the previous 12 months to 2,504, and that there was an overall increase in police numbers of ten to 3,257. The Lancashire Police Authority will have a spending capacity for 1998–99 of £177 million. This is an increase of 3.8 per cent. or £6.4 million over 1997–98.

Alcohol (Young People)

31. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning links between under-age drinking and violent and loutish behaviour in town centres. [48428]

Mr. Michael: The public, police officers and local councillors have all indicated that alcohol-related crime and disorder, including that involving underage drinkers, is a significant problem. We have implemented the Confiscation of Alcohol (Young Persons) Act 1997 and will be legislating to clarify the law relating to adults buying alcohol for children and the use of children in test purchases. The Anti-Social Behaviour Order and other provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill will also help with specific local problems.

It will be for the police and local authorities, with their partners, to assess the extent of such problems locally as part of the crime and disorder audit required under the Crime and Disorder Bill and to develop strategies to reduce violence and bad behaviour, including steps to deal with under-age drinking where necessary.

Police (Disciplinary Procedures)

32. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had about reforming police disciplinary procedures; and when he proposes to implement changes. [48429]

Mr. Michael: I have regular discussions with the police staff associations and other interested parties. As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 23 March 1998, Official Report, columns 21–24, new police discipline procedures will come into effect on 1 April 1999.

Fire and Police Service Pensions

33. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform fire and police pension arrangements. [48430]

Mr. Michael: Consultation documents on the police and fire service pension schemes were published on 31 March of this year. We have invited comments by 31 July on the issues raised in the documents. We will take careful account of the comments we receive when we come to consider any changes to the pension arrangements for new entrants to the police and fire services and to medical retirement procedures.

Police (Performance)

34. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what mechanisms he compares the performance of different police forces. [48431]

Mr. Michael: The Home Secretary sets out his strategic development priorities (key objectives) for the police and the performance of different police forces is compared on the basis of their effectiveness in working towards these objectives and the other measures of effectiveness studied by the Inspectorate and the Audit Commission. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary has a statutory duty under the Police Act 1996 to inspect and report to the Secretary of State on the efficiency and effectiveness of police forces in England and Wales. In so doing, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) takes into account the performance of forces against the key policing objectives and performance indicators set by the Home Secretary, as well as against a wider range of performance indicators and criteria. HMIC also carries out thematic inspections on specific issues of public interest. Comparison of performance between forces is assisted by HMIC's model of Most Similar Force Analysis, which groups together forces with similar characteristics.

The Audit Commission is required under the Local Government Act 1992 to collect data from police authorities which will allow comparison between different areas. The data are incorporated in the HMIC reporting process, and published separately by the Audit Commission on an annual basis.

Prisons (Suicides)

35. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has evaluated on the suicide rates in Her Majesty's prisons. [48432]

Ms Quin: Statistics on the number of self-inflicted deaths are collected and published each year in the Prison Service's Annual Report. The Prison Service examines each death in prison custody thoroughly to see whether any lessons can be learned and, where apparent clusters of deaths occur, considers whether there are any common factors. Research has identified that the first month of imprisonment (whether as a sentenced or remand prisoner) is a period of significantly increased risk of suicide. This particularly affects local prisons with a high proportion of remand prisoners.

The Prison Service is also conducting research into suicide and self-injury to improve the understanding of self-injury and its relationship with suicidal behaviour. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons is also preparing a thematic report on suicides and self harm in prisons.

Prisons (Hepatitis)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce levels of hepatitis in prisons. [48401]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service runs an extensive education and counselling programme to make prisoners aware of the risks to health from communicable diseases and offers prisoners and staff who come into contact with them immunisation against hepatitis B. As part of efforts to reduce hepatitis and HIV, it is also piloting the reintroduction of disinfecting tablets in selected establishments from this month, as announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton East, (Mr. Howarth) the Under-Secretary of State.

Probation Service

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage offender behaviour programmes run by the probation service. [48407]

Ms Quin: We have just issued guidance to all probation services on this subject. The guidance sets out a detailed programme of action intended to ensure real progress towards the goal that all offenders are supervised in ways which have been shown to be effective in reducing reoffending. This initiative (which has the full backing of the Association of Chief Officers of Probation) includes the development and piloting of new evidence-based supervision programmes and a new system for their independent accreditation.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage offender behaviour programmes run by the Probation Service. [48399]

Ms Quin: We have just issued guidance to all probation services on this subject. The guidance sets out a detailed programme of action intended to ensure real progress towards the goal that all offenders are supervised in ways which have been shown to be effective in reducing reoffending. This initiative (which has the full backing of the Association of Chief Officers of Probation) includes the development and piloting of new evidence-based supervision programmes and a new system for their independent accreditation.

Prisons (Drug Use)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the results of random drug tests in prisons. [48410]

Mr. George Howarth: There has been a reduction in the percentage of random mandatory drug test samples testing positive for drugs, from 24.4 per cent. in 1996/97 to 20.8 per cent. in 1997/98. This reduction is a welcome indication of the Prison Service's success in reducing the level of drug misuse in prisons.

Supervision of Offenders

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on arrangements for the post-release supervision of offenders who have been convicted abroad and have been released back to the United Kingdom. [48414]

Ms Quin: Offenders who have completed prison sentences abroad before returning to the United Kingdom are not subject to any compulsory supervision. We are concerned about risks to the public by certain offenders who have committed serious crimes and who are deported to this country, and are considering legislative options to address the issue. This will be done in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to continue to authorise the use of conductive loop tags. [49642]

Ms Quin: Any electronic monitoring equipment used in the new electronic monitoring services in England and Wales will need to satisfy the technical criteria specified by the Home Office prior to its authorisation for use.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the companies shortlisted for the national roll of tagging (a) use and (b) propose to use equipment supplied by Bolder Industries of America. [49641]

Ms Quin: No equipment supplied by Bolder Industries is currently used in the existing trials of electronic monitoring. Shortlisted bidders for the national electronic monitoring service are required to propose the equipment they intend to use in their bids, which are due today.

Football Arrests

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from the United Kingdom have been arrested before and during football matches involving teams from England and Scotland played in the World Cup in France. [49567]

Mr. Michael: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The information presently available indicates that 286 English and Scottish people were arrested in France during the World Cup Finals (up to 30 June), 275 of whom were English and 11 Scottish. Fourteen English people were deported or expelled from France, and 363 were refused leave to enter.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sources of information are used in the preparation of the country assessment for Sri Lanka by the Information and Policy Unit of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, with particular reference to those relating to the human rights situation of the Tamil community; how often that assessment is reviewed; and if he will make a statement. [49686]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) on 13 May 1998, Official Report, columns 127–28. The Sri Lanka country assessment is fully sourced and draws on information contained in reports produced by Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch Asia, United Nations High Commission for Refugees Centre for Documentation and Research, as well as the United States' Department reports on Human Rights Practices in Sri Lanka. Details of these sources of information are contained in the bibliography which accompanies the assessment.

It is intended to revise and update the assessment regularly at about six monthly intervals.

Prisoners (Communicable Diseases)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 587–88, in respect of plans to reduce the risk of the spread of communicable diseases in prisons, if he will outline the criteria that the independent academic team based at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine will use to evaluate the success of the initiative; and if he will list the prisons in which the pilot scheme will take place. [49488]

Mr. George Howarth: The purpose of the pilot scheme is to trial a variety of distribution methods for disinfecting tablets. The evaluation by the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine will take account of:

take-up rate of the tablets;

the working of the various methods for distribution of the tablets, including whether or not they ensure anonymity;

any obstacles to implementation; and any evidence of intended and unintended effects on existing regimes.

The following establishments are taking part in the pilot scheme: Askham Grange; Coldingley: Cookham Wood; Garth; Highdown; Holloway; Long Lartin; Norwich; Stoke Heath; Welstun; and Woodhill.

Prisons (Closed Visits)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many closed visits have taken place in prisons in England and Wales during the last 12 months. [49478]

Ms Quin: Governors have discretion under Prison Standing Order 5 to impose closed visits on any prisoner where security or control considerations so require. The decision to impose closed visits on a prisoner is taken on the basis of information available in each case and is kept under review. Figures for the number of prisoners subject at any one time to closed visits and the number of visits held under closed conditions are not held centrally.

CS Sprays

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been prosecuted for misuse of CS sprays since January 1996. [49492]

Mr. Michael: This information is not available centrally. Of all the complaints investigated by the Police Complaints Authority from 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1998, there were two cases in which police officers were prosecuted for misuse of CS. In both cases the officers were found not guilty.

Vehicles (Spray Suppression)

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for driving a vehicle whose spray suppression devices have failed to comply with Regulation 65 of the Road Vehicle (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 (a) from April 1987 to March 1992 and (b) since April 1992. [47765]

Mr. Michael: Prosecutions for this offence cannot be distinguished from other similar offences connected with defective vehicles in the statistics collected centrally.

Most offences of this nature are dealt with by the issue of a prohibition notice, but figures kept by the Vehicle Inspectorate (an executive agency of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions) do not separately distinguish offences of defective spray suppression devices from offences connected with defective wings and wheel arches.

The Government recognise the importance of this issue and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson), has outlined the steps being taken in the United Kingdom and Europe to improve the standards of spray suppression.

The Home Office is co-operating with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on a variety of issues and this issue will be included in future discussions between Ministers.

Security Service Files

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of security service files which are no longer required to be held for operational purposes; [50390]

(2) pursuant to his oral statement of 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 346, how and when he proposes to carry out his undertaking concerning security service files. [50353]

Mr. Michael: During the debate on 25 February, my right hon. Friend undertook to make a statement on Security Service files before the summer recess. That remains his intention.

Police Communications

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support his Department is giving in order to improve police communications systems. [48417]

Mr. Michael: The Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP) is intended to replace all radio infrastructures for the police service with the new generation of digital radio communication systems from 1999 onwards. The project is being managed by the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), which became a Non-Department Public Body in April this year. Under the PSRCP, a national co-ordinated approach is being taken to the planning, design and implementation of the new communications systems, and PITO has been supporting all police forces in England and Wales to achieve this. This next generation of communications systems will utilise new radio spectrum we have secured for the service which will overcome many of the current operational difficulties, including radio interference within existing bands. A Business Case for the implementation of the project will be completed this year, and a decision taken on whether to proceed.

PITO is also responsible for managing the contract for the Police National Network (PNN), the police service's own national data and telephony communications network. The Organisation is in the process of procuring a second generation PNN which will be available by summer 1999. The new service will build on the success of the existing network and will offer the next generation of telecommunications infrastructure for policing, criminal justice and public safety throughout the United Kingdom. It is envisaged that it will offer the latest intranet features and will incorporate the Emergency Communications Network.

Mental Ill Offenders

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 326, what progress has been made on improving the level of information provided to the victims of crimes committed by people with mental disorders. [49266]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) on 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 18.

Cannabis

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many licences he has issued for cannabis to be grown, processed or supplied for medical research; when they were issued; and if he will make a statement. [49721]

Mr. George Howarth: Records show that two licences have been issued for cannabis to be grown, processed or supplied for medical research. The first was issued in 1982 and the second in 1998.

Prisoners (Education)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has obtained as to the proportion of the prison population who are deficient in (a) literacy and (b) numeracy; and if he will make a statement on the provision of education in prison with respect to these problems for (a) adults and (b) young offenders. [50112]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service derives its knowledge about literacy and numeracy rates from the results of the basic skills screening test which prisoners may be invited, but are not required, to take. These suggest that between 60 and 75 per cent. of prisoners have basic skills needs deficiencies: 60 per cent. of prisoners have poor literacy skills; and 75 per cent. of prisoners have poor numeracy skills.

Prison education focuses on the Prison Service Core Curriculum, which comprises basic educational skills (literacy and numeracy), life and social skills and information technology skills. All prisons and young offender institutions are required to offer this programme, which has been designed to help prisoners find a job on release, resettle themselves into society and cope with life after prison without re-offending.

The Prisons Board has recently endorsed an education policy framework for prison education which is consistent with the Government's wider education priority of improving basic skills and improving the skills in the national labour force.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meet that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49805]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49807]

Mr. Straw: Anyone wanting to contact the Home Office by e-Mail can do so by using—gen.ho.@gtnet.gov.uk. At present, there is no separate e-Mail address for my Department's Ministerial correspondence unit.

Prisoners (Methadone)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Prison Service in respect of prisoners who enter custody with existing methadone prescriptions; and to what extent the implementation of this policy varies between prisons in England and Wales. [50251]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service health care standard for the management of opiate misusers calls for abstinence to be achieved wherever possible. The standard does, however, allow for the provision of methadone maintenance for those remand prisoners who are already on maintenance treatment and require its continuation.

The Prison Service will begin actively to monitor the implementation of its health care standards from September 1998 and information about the extent to which the implementation varies across the prison estate will become available after that.

Police (Drug Problems)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on co-operation between Colombia and the West Midlands police on drug problems. [48633]

Mr. Michael: Colombia is the world's largest producer and distributor of refined cocaine. Western Europe and the United Kingdom are major targets for this illicit trade. We believe that constructive anti-drug co-operation and assistance can help their law enforcement authorities counter the problem more effectively. Law enforcement co-operation between the United Kingdom and Colombia is excellent. Since 1989 we have provided £15 million of equipment and training to Colombia. I am not aware of any current links between West Midlands Police and Colombia on drug problems.

Prisons (Midwifery Services)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of prisons make use of community midwifery services to provide antenatal and postnatal care within prisons; [50038]

(2) what proportion of women's prisons have agreed joint local protocols with their nearest hospital for the care of pregnant prisoners. [50034]

Ms Quin: All prisons which hold pregnant women provide a community midwifery service through the local NHS Trust. All but two of those prisons also have locally agreed arrangements for hospital care for pregnant prisoners.

Of the two which do not, one has a local protocol for the care of pregnant women agreed with the NHS midwifery service; and the other is in the process of agreeing an arrangement with the local hospital.

Terrorist Offences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1976 the number of persons accused of terrorist crimes in the United Kingdom tried under the Criminal Law Jurisdiction Act 1975 in the Irish Republic specifying in so far as the information is readily available to him the offence alleged, where it was committed and the outcome of the trial. [46743]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

The extraterritorial legislation that would allow persons to be charged and tried in the Republic of Ireland is the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976, not the Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 which applies only in Northern Ireland. Accurate figures for 1976–1990 are 16 persons tried and 12 convicted. It has proved difficult to establish the offence and location. However, since 1990 the figures are as follows:

Date	Offence	Where	Result
1991	Membership of unlawful organisation	Rosslea	Acquitted
1992	Attempted murder	Belleek	12 years
1992	Attempted murder	Belleek	12 years
1995	Attempted murder	Belleek	12 years

TREASURY

Bank of England, Cardiff Bay

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rent-free period applied under the lease of the new Wales office of the Bank of England at Scott Harbour, Cardiff Bay. [49446]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Under the terms agreed to take a lease on offices for its Wales agency in Cardiff, the Bank of England benefited from a rent free period of one month.

Family Incomes

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the highest possible level of family income which will be supplemented by working families tax credit and/or child care tax allowance. [47484]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The highest possible level of family income which will be supplemented by the WFTC depends on the number, and age, of the children in the family. For example, a family with two children under 11 and maximum eligible childcare costs will still receive some WFTC with family income of around £31,000.

Tax (Hypothecation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the introduction of a conscience element in income tax collection to enable revenue from people who request it to be allocated to budgets other than defence. [46776]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: One representation has been received on this matter from the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers).

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of administering a system in which income tax revenue from people who request it is allocated to budgets other than defence. [46775]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 June 1998]: The Government have no proposals to allow income tax to be hypothecated either toward or away from individual departmental budgets and have therefore made no estimate of the costs of administering such a system.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49817]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49819]

Mrs. Liddell: www.hm-treasury.gov.uk

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Personal Investment Authority Ombudsman Bureau Limited about their system of charging companies against which complaints are made for their services. [50165]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 105.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) of 23 June 1998, Official Report, columns 453–54, on heavily indebted poor countries, if he will list in respect of each country the creditors in the United Kingdom; if he will estimate how much is owed to each creditor; and if he will make a statement. [50161]

Mrs. Liddell: The export credit debts listed in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 23 June are all sovereign debts which are owed directly to ECGD. ECGD is owed a total of £5,389 million by the countries that were listed. In the case of the aid loans that are listed, DFID is the creditor, and is owed a total of £27.55 million.

Interest Rates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the long and the short-term rates of interest in real terms at present relative to (a) 1996, (b) 1993, (c) 1987 and (d) 1984. [49619]

Mrs. Liddell: Information on nominal interest rates is contained in the ONS publication Financial Statistics. Real interest rates can be derived using figures for inflation which are detailed in the ONS publication Economic Trends.

Financial Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the Financial Services Authority a statutory duty to improve the quality of financial services in the marketplace. [50078]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's plans to reform the financial services regulatory structure are intended to deliver an improvement in the quality of financial services regulation to the benefit of both consumers and the industry. The statutory objectives of the Financial Services Authority will include protecting financial services consumers.

Fiscal Indicators

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury proposes to revise its latest published estimates of key fiscal indicators. [50615]

Mr. Darling: The second Industry Act Forecast will be published in the Pre-Budget Report later this year. The date of publication is not yet known.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the efficiency with which the Office for National Statistics delivers its statistical outputs. [50672]

Mrs. Liddell: In order to ensure that the Office for National Statistics (ONS) provides the best service possible, I am today announcing a review of the way in which the ONS delivers its outputs in order to ensure that it makes best use of the resources available. This review will be taken forward by external consultants who will examine the efficiency with which the ONS delivers its outputs and will also examine the scope for radical changes for both direct service delivery and support services, for example through increased public/private partnerships, business process re-engineering and rationalisation.

The review will be steered by a group with an independent chair. It is envisaged that it will report by the end of the year.

Insurance Regulation

Ms Atherton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the adequacy of arrangements for the regulation of the insurance industry; and if he will make a statement. [50083]

Mrs. Liddell: The planned legislation to reform the structure of financial services regulation will provide for the Financial Services Authority to assume responsibility for all aspects of the regulation of insurance companies.

The Treasury is currently considering responses to the consultation document issued on 7 April on the regulation of insurance brokers and other intermediaries.

MIRAS

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for 1996–97 the amount of MIRAS spent in Scotland and for 1997–98 and 1998–99 the estimated amount to be spent on MIRAS in Scotland. [47975]

Dawn Primarolo [pursuant to her reply, 3 July 1998, c. 322]: The cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland is estimated to be £180 million in 1996–97 and £200 million in 1997–98. The amount of relief given through the MIRAS—mortgage interest relief at source scheme—is estimated to be £170 million in 1996–97 and £190 million in 1997–98.

These estimates are based on the regional distribution of the cost of mortgage interest relief from analyses of family expenditure surveys up to 1996–97. The estimates for 1997–98 are projections based on applying the same regional distribution as in 1996–97 to the total figure for 1997–98. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates below United Kingdom level for 1998–99.

SCOTLAND

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49825]

Mr. Dewar: My Department's e-Mail address is ceu@isd01.scotoff.gov.uk.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49823]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

NHS Expenditure

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the value of capital expenditure in (i) real terms, (ii) cash terms and (iii) as a percentage of total National Health Service expenditure in Scotland that will be undertaken by the National Health Service in the years (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–2002 and (d) 2001–2002. [50160]

Mr. Galbraith: The public sector baseline for capital in 1998–99 is £136m which represents 2.9 per cent. of the total expenditure of £4,626m on the NHS in Scotland. In addition a further £180m of private sector capital is expected to be spent in 1998–99 on the NHSiS through the Private Finance Initiative.

Provision for future years will be announced in due course as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Hospital Consultants

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital consultants have been dismissed in each of the past five years; how many of these appealed against their dismissal; how many were reinstated following a successful appeal; and if he will make a statement. [49738]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the number of consultants dismissed by Trusts and Health Boards in Scotland is not kept centrally. Since 1993, 12 consultants have appealed to the Secretary of State against termination of employment: 3 of these appeals were not upheld; 2 were withdrawn and the appellant reinstated; 2 were withdrawn since a settlement had been reached before the appeal was heard; 3 appeals were time barred; 1 appeal was judged outwith the Secretary of State's jurisdiction and 1 appeal has yet to be heard.

The number of appeals heard each year is very small and many result in reinstatement or an amicable settlement before the full appeal procedure is concluded. Every effort is made to ensure that the appeal process is carried out as quickly as possible.

Allotments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what recent guidelines have been issued to local authorities about the designation and provision of allotment sites; and if he will make a statement; [49001]

(2) what action he proposes to take to protect existing allotment sites; and if he will make a statement; [49003]

(3) what recent representations he has received about the provision of allotments; and if he will make a statement; [49005]

(4) what advice his Department gives to local authorities on the subject of the sale of allotment sites; and if he will make a statement; [49007]

(5) what recent discussions he has held with COSLA on the drawing up of a best practice regime for allotments and its implementation by local authorities as recommended in the Fifth report of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee (HC560-I); and if he will make a statement; [49131]

(6) what plans he has to modify the legislation governing (a) the provision of allotment sites and (b) the rights of allotment holders; and if he will make a statement; [49002]

(7) what recent discussions he has had with representatives of COSLA about the annual publication of local authority allotments provision; and if he will make a statement; [49004]

(8) what recent representations he has received about the sale by local authorities of allotment sites; and if he will make a statement; [49006]

(9) if he will make a statement on the recommendation in paragraph 5 of the Fifth report of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee, (HC560-I); [49130]

(10) what plans he has to collate the information on allotment provision held at local authority level in order to establish and maintain a data base on such provision; and if he will make a statement. [49161]

Mr. Macdonald: In Scotland, decisions on the provision of allotment sites are a matter for local authorities. The Scottish Office has issued no recent guidelines and Ministers have had no recent discussions with COSLA on the subject. The Scottish Office has received three representations within the past year about the protection of allotment sites: two about the Dalmuir plots in Clydebank, and one about the Craigentinny plots in Edinburgh.

The Government are considering the recommendations contained in the Fifth Report of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee, and will publish a response in due course.

Geriatric Unit (Greenock)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects a contract to be signed for the construction of a geriatric unit at the Larkfield Site, Greenock; and if he will make a statement. [49736]

Mr. Galbraith: The Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS Trust are aiming to sign a contract for the new facility at Larkfield in October.

Residential Development (Gourock)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the Chief Reporter's report and recommendations anent the application for a residential development at Levan Farm, Gourock; and if he will make a statement. [49739]

Mr. Dewar: The Chief Reporter of The Scottish Office Inquiry Reporters Unit expects to have his report and recommendations regarding the application for a residential development at Levan Farm, Gourock with me within the next few weeks. Given that I am to take the decision on this matter, it would not be appropriate to make a statement at this time.

Trust Board Committees

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to issue guidelines anent trust board committees being open to the public; and if he will make a statement. [49737]

Mr. Galbraith: The Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) (National Health Service Trusts) Order was laid before Parliament and became effective on 6 February 1998. This made it statutory for all UK NHS Trusts to hold their Board meetings in public. Guidance from the Management Executive of the NHS in Scotland on the implementation of this amendment, with particular regard to Committees of Trusts, was issued to the main health bodies in Scotland on 15 April and 5 June. Copies of this guidance have now been placed in the Library of the House.

Patients (Costs)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average cost per day of keeping a person in hospital in the most recent year for which information is available (a) for all patients and (b) for patients suffering from diseases of the respiratory system, excluding influenza. [49719]

Mr. Galbraith: The latest year for which information is available is 1996–97. In that year the average cost per day of keeping a patient in hospital for all specialties was £170. In respiratory medicine the average cost per inpatient day was £185. Figures for respiratory medicine excluding influenza are not available.

Pharmaceutical Services (Costs)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to the NHS in Scotland of pharmaceutical services, net of prescription charges, for each year from 1985–86 to 1997–98, separately identifying costs arising from prescriptions from (a) dispensing doctors, (b) pharmacies and (c) hospitals. [49717]

Mr. Galbraith: The information for Scotland for the financial years 1987–88 to 1997–98 is set out in the table. Costs for 1985–86 and 1986–87 are not available because the data were not collected electronically, in financial years prior to 1987.

The total costs shown include the ingredient costs of drugs and appliances dispensed through community pharmacies, dispensing doctors and appliance suppliers, dispensing and other fees, and the reimbursement of certain other costs, including VAT. The costs are net of prescription charges paid by patients and prescription charges recovered from patients under health board post-dispensing/checking arrangements.

The sums collected in respect of the sales of pre-payment certificates have not been taken into account because they are not deemed to be the payment of a charge under the NHS (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) (Scotland) Regulations 1989, as amended.

It is not possible to cost separately prescriptions written in hospitals and dispensed in community pharmacies.

Respiratory Diseases

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each month in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 admissions to hospitals for (i) asthma, (ii) bronchitis, (iii) pneumonia, (iv) influenza, (v) hypertensive heart disease, (vi) ischaemic heart disease and (vii) myocardial infarction for the age bands (1) 0 to 14, (2) 14 to 64 and (3) 65 years and over. [49720]

Mr. Galbraith: As the information requested is rather lengthy I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the House Library.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prescriptions were issued for treatment of respiratory diseases, excluding influenza, in the most recent year for which information is available; and what was the cost to the National Health Service in Scotland in the same period of drugs to treat (i) asthma, (ii) pneumonia and (iii) bronchitis. [49718]

Mr. Galbraith: It is not possible to identify separately drugs used in the treatment of influenza, pneumonia and bronchitis because these drugs are also used in the treatment of conditions other than respiratory disease and the NHS prescription form does not indicate the medical diagnosis for which a drug has been prescribed.

Table 1 shows the number of prescriptions for drugs contained in British National Formulary Chapter 3: Respiratory system, which were dispensed by community pharmacists and dispensing doctors in 1997–98. The table does not show prescriptions dispensed in respect of Diamorphine Hydrochloride, Methadone Hydrochloride and Morphine Hydrochloride, which are indicated for cough in terminal disease.

British National Formulary Sections 3.1 (Bronchodilators), 3.2 (Corticosteroids) and 3.3 (Cromoglycate and related therapy) contain drugs for use in the treatment of asthma. Table 2 shows the number and cost of prescription items dispensed in respect of these drugs, some of which may also be used in the treatment of other conditions. The costs shown are based on the value of ingredients before the addition of dispensing fees or deduction of any discount or patient charges.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49844]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49846]

Dr. Howells: The e-mail address for the Department for Education and Employment's Ministerial Correspondence Unit is:

dfee.ministers@dfee.gov.uk.

Key Stage 2

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the relative difficulty of this year's and last year's Key Stage 2 tests; and if the percentage mark required to achieve Grade 5 has been changed. [50387]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his latest estimate of the cost of loans to higher education students measured in terms of cash accounting and resource accounting over the period 1999–2000 to 2001–02. [50648]

Mr. Blunkett: The estimated cost of loans is as follows:

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Cash accounting	1,150	1,550	1,750
Resource accounting	650	950	1,050
Difference	500	600	700

Estimate are for loans outlay net of repayments under cash accounting. Figures are for England and Wales and are rounded to the nearest £50 million. They are in current prices.

Methods of implementing resource accounting are still being determined. These figures reflect the latest conclusion from the Financial Reporting Advisory Board and the National Audit Office.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to make Regulations for 1998–99 governing student loans made under the Education (Student Loans) Act 1990. [50647]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid the Education (Student Loans) Amendment Regulations 1998 before the House on Friday 10 July 1998. These will enable loans to continue to be made to students already attending courses of higher education on the same terms as before. Regulations governing loans for students entering higher education for the first time in September 1998 will be made shortly, as soon as Royal Assent to the Teaching and Higher Education Bill is received.

Permanent Exclusions

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many permanent exclusions there were from schools by local education authority area in each of the last five years broken down by ethnic origin; what strategies are being developed to reduce the number of pupils excluded; and if he will make a statement. [49685]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information on permanent exclusions by ethnic group from schools in each local education authority is set out in the following table. Data on exclusions were not collected centrally before 1994–95. The 1996–97 data are currently being analysed and will be available later this year.

The Government are tackling exclusion by implementing the recommendations in the Social Exclusion Unit's Truancy and School Exclusion report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The report highlighted the over-representation of certain ethnic minority pupils among those excluded from school, and included recommendations to tackle this, including the promotion of community mentoring in ethnic minority communities. In addition, a number of projects supported by grant paid under Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 employ strategies designed to reduce exclusions of pupils from particular minority ethnic groups. These include home-school liaison, mentoring, and other strategies designed to motivate pupils to learn and to raise teacher expectations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Identity Cards

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Minister is responsible for benefit identity cards; and what progress has been made with regard to their implementation. [50355]

Mr. Field: There is no benefit identity card.

We are however concerned about fraud within the Social Security system. On some estimates benefit fraud could cost up to £7 billion a year. This is equivalent to an extra £10 a week to every single pensioner in the country. Or enough to cut the tax bill of every taxpaying household in the country by £435 a year.

I am therefore pleased to announce that we are today publishing a Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future" setting out our comprehensive anti-fraud strategy.

The Green Paper sets out the four key aims of the Government's strategy and lists what actions we are currently taking to achieve these goals; what further action we will be taking this year, next year and beyond.

The first aim is to develop an anti-fraud culture among staff and the public. We will be conducting a campaign to bring the scale and nature of fraud to people's attention to win public support for action to prevent the misuse of money which could go to those in real need. We will also build on the partnerships between the public and private sector to mount a joint crusade against fraud.

Our second aim is to design and operate systems which minimise fraud. We will be reviewing benefits to determine the extent to which they can be more effectively designed to prevent fraud from occurring in the first place. We will also be seeking to prevent fraud through a more active management of new and continuing cases, as well as improved detection and more effective punishment of those who commit fraud.

Our third aim is to create an environment in which work against fraud can flourish, by improving systems for funding and performance measurement, and securing greater co-operation amongst all parties in anti-fraud in central, and local, government, and in public bodies.

Our fourth aim is to develop a highly skilled anti-fraud profession. We need a new professionalism to combat the ever increasing sophistication of the serious fraudster. We will build up a highly skilled anti-fraud profession with common training and accreditation, and codes of conduct.

For the first time there now exists a comprehensive cross-Government strategy against fraud rather than a piecemeal approach. We have timetabled our work in building up effective barriers to fraud. The Government are establishing a ministerial group under my chairmanship to help devise strategies to combat welfare fraud and safeguard taxpayers' money, and counter other forms of financial fraud affecting welfare services. We will also publish an annual Fraud Audit, describing our anti-fraud activities, estimates of the scale of fraud, and new policy initiatives.

The Government are committed to making a difference to the level of fraud as a key element of their plan to create a modern welfare state in which the people can have confidence. The Green Paper is the first staging post towards a benefit system which is more accurate, more fair, more efficient and more secure.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the early results from the research into pensioner non-take-up of income support have been consistent with the results from large-scale quantitative surveys undertaken by the Department with respect to (a) the level of non-take-up and (b) the distribution of non-take-up between different categories of pensioner. [50114]

Mr. Denham: The early results published 24 June 1998 offered an overview of key barriers and triggers to claiming Income Support amongst a specific group of pensioners—those apparently entitled to, but not claiming, the benefit. They were from qualitative interviews carried out to explore the reasons for not claiming Income Support and to identify possible means of encouraging pensioners to claim. As such, the results were not designed to provide the data that would be needed for such comparisons.

This is the first research carried out by this Department specifically into why pensioners do not take up the Income Support to which they are entitled. The purpose of the research, and of the nine pilots currently underway, is not to provide comparative data with previous information on non-take-up, but rather to establish why so many pensioners fail to take up the Income Support to which they are entitled, and to identify the most effective and efficient ways of encouraging them to claim.

Together, the research and the pilot exercises will enable us to find ways of delivering more automatic help to the poorest pensioners.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the median amount of unclaimed income support among (a) single male pensioners, (b) single female pensioners and (c) married pensioners who are aged (i) 60 to 64, (ii) 65 to 69, (iii) 70 to 74, (iv) 75 to 79 and (v) 80 years and above, based on the Department's Family Resources Survey. [50113]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

Median unclaimed amounts for pensioners by age, gender and marital status for 1995–96

Pensioner group	Age 60–64	65–69	70–74	75–79	80+	All
Pensioner couples	16.80	22.60	5.20	6.80	9.50	9.90
Single male pensioners	7.70	10.10	7.30	8.30	8.20	10.00
Single female pensioners	4.90	5.90	5.30	7.10	12.40	8.40

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10p. These estimates are based on the 1995–96 FRS and are almost certainly subject to some degree of error. The true amounts may be higher or lower and should therefore be treated with some caution. The age breakdowns for Pensioner Couples and Single Male Pensioners are based on small sample sizes and should therefore be treated with extreme caution
2. "Pensioner couples" means both married and unmarried couples

Mr. Field: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer today from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Field: The information is set out in the table.

Disablement Benefit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long a claimant for disablement benefit in respect of occupational deafness must have worked; if additional hours worked in overtime may be included in this requirement; and what proposals she has to change the current criteria. [48938]

Mr. Denham: To qualify for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) for Occupational Deafness (prescribed disease A10), a person must have been employed in one or more of the occupations prescribed, for at least ten years. An independent Adjudication Officer decides whether a claimant has met the ten year rule, taking into account the job history of the individual claimant. The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, which advise on the Industrial Injuries scheme, are currently undertaking a review of the list of prescribed diseases, including occupational deafness. We shall of course consider any recommendations which they make.

Elderly People

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of households in Gloucestershire, by district, have an elderly dependant needing care. [49257]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available.

HEALTH

Pharmacists

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential cost to the National Health Service of trends in closures of community pharmacies. [48233]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The overall number of community pharmacies in England and Wales has remained virtually unchanged over the last three years. It is difficult to estimate the cost, if any, to the National Health Service of any particular closures that have occurred during this period.

Pen Needles

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when pen needles will be available to diabetes sufferers on prescription; [47998]

(2) if will make a statement on the use of pen needles as a method for diabetes sufferers to administer insulin. [47919]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 1 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) on 28 April 1998, Official Report, column 121.

Diabetes

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffering from diabetes there were within the Durham Health Authority Easington District locality area in each year since 1995. [49281]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not held centrally.

Beef on the Bone

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the risk to human health of eating beef cooked on the bone; and what the estimated incidence is of health problems from this cause. [49631]

Ms Jowell: In its advice to Ministers on 3 December 1997, the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) said that Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) infectivity had been found in the dorsal root ganglia and bone marrow of cattle and there was a small risk of BSE-infected material entering the human food chain. On the basis of the risk assessment concerning the various factors involved in the transmission of BSE to humans available to it, the Committee concluded that there was a 95 per cent. chance of no cases of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease and a 5 per cent. chance of one case arising from this exposure in 1998.

Taking account of this advice, and that of the Chief Medical Officer that he would be very concerned if any tissues that had been shown to transmit BSE were knowingly allowed to remain in the human food chain, we introduced the Beef Bones Regulations.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into possible links between breast cancer and pesticides containing Lindane. [50060]

Ms Jowell: The Department has not commissioned any research into possible links between breast cancer and pesticides containing lindane.

The independent advisory Committee on Carcinogenity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products, and the Environment (COC) reviewed the available data on breast cancer in women and levels of lindane in serum and breast fat tissue in 1995. COC concluded that there was no clear evidence of an association between serum and fat levels of lindane and breast cancer. COC recommended that the matter be kept under review.

The Department of Health is conducting a search for any new scientific data on lindane and, if fresh information is uncovered, this will be referred to COC for further consideration.

Children in Care

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of children looked after in residential care are from ethnic minority groups; [49712]

(2) what proportion of children adopted from care were from ethnic minority groups in the last year for which figures are available; [49713]

(3) what proportion of children looked after by local authorities for more than two years were from ethnic minority groups in the last year for which figures are available; [49714]

(4) what proportion of children looked after by local authorities are from ethnic minority groups broken down by age and gender. [49715]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 10 July 1998]: The information is not currently available in the format requested, but the Department will be carrying out a pilot exercise later this year to collect ethnic origin data for looked after children, from a sample of authorities.

Waiting Times

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the maximum waiting times faced by individuals between a referral from a general practitioner and an appointment with a consultant; what guidance he has issued as to maximum acceptable waiting time; and what are his policies to reduce such waiting times. [50005]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 10 July 1998]: The latest available figures show that, during the quarter ending 31 March 1998, 96 per cent. of patients were seen for their first outpatient appointment within 26 weeks of general practitioner referral.

Guidance issued to the National Health Service with the additional £417 million to tackle waiting lists made clear that reducing inpatient lists should not be achieved at the expense of outpatient waiting times. In addition, The New NHS White Paper guarantees that by the year 2000 everyone with suspected cancer will be able to see a specialist within 2 weeks of their GP deciding they need to be seen urgently and requesting an appointment (by April 1999 for breast cancer).

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49852]

Ms Jowell: The Department does not yet have an e-mail address; plans to establish one are being considered.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49850]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Dentists

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department intends to take (a) to increase the proportion of the adult population which is registered with a dentist and (b) to mitigate the effects of the introduction of tuition fees on student dentists' debt levels. [48377]

Mr. Milburn: We are aware that registering with a National Health Service dentist can be a problem for adults in some areas of the country which is why, in September 1997, we introduced the Investing in Dentistry scheme. We have made £19 million available through the scheme to help dentists expand existing practices and to set up new ones in areas where access to NHS dentistry is most acute. To date we have received over 480 Investing in Dentistry proposals from health authorities. In the longer term we will be piloting the personal dental services which will provide health authorities with the flexibility to tailor dental services more closely to local need. I recently announced 15 pilot schemes, involving over 150 dentists, to be launched in October.

For medical and dental students who enter training from 1 September 1998, the NHS will meet tuition costs and fund means tested bursaries in years 5 and beyond.

Cancer

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to invest in clinical drug trials in district hospitals to advance knowledge of cancer treatment. [50115]

Mr. Milburn: The main agency through which the Government support clinical trials is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body receiving its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC has an extensive programme of clinical trials on cancer including the use of treatments. These are conducted in many locations including district hospitals. Information on these trials is available from the MRC. Their address is 20 Park Crescent, London, W1N 4AL.

Patients (Lifting)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to NHS nursing and auxiliary staff as regards lifting patients in and out of beds indicating if all (a) trusts and (b) authorities are required to insure nurses and auxiliary staff for back or related injuries sustained from lifting patients; and if she will make a statement. [49452]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive issued revised guidance in June 1997 on Health and Safety at work in the NHS, copies of which are available in the Library. The guidance covers manual handling, and refers to complementary guidance in the Health Services Advisory Committee booklet "Guidance on Manual Handling of Loads in the Health Services". It also reminded managers of their responsibilities under the Manual Handling Operations Regulations 1992.

All NHS employees are covered by the National Health Service (Injury Benefits) Scheme. This is a statutory scheme providing benefits where an injury or disease, which is attributable to NHS employment, results in either temporary loss of earnings or permanent reduction in earning ability.

WALES

Science and Mathematics Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (a) science and (b) mathematics teachers in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in Wales. [49562]

Mr. Hain: The latest available information indicates that, in 1996, there were an estimated 2,800 full-time teachers qualified to teach mathematics and 2,700 qualified to teach science at Key stage 3 and at Key stage 4. Comparable information is not available on primary schools.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49826]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49828]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Office Ministerial Correspondence Unit currently does not have an e-mail address.

Numeracy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he proposes to increase numeracy in the primary schools of Wales. [50344]

Mr. Hain: Raising standards of numeracy is at the heart of the Government's programme for raising levels of attainment in schools. We have already set stretching targets for Wales covering literacy and numeracy. We have allocated additional funds to support the In-service training of teachers. This summer, we will be piloting summer numeracy schemes. In the light of the report from the National Numeracy Taskforce, we are now considering what further initiatives in Wales might support this vitally important work in schools.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the learning of times tables in Welsh schools. [50346]

Mr. Hain: The National Curriculum in Wales places a strong emphasis on the learning of "times tables" for all the children from an early age. The learning of multiplication tables plays a central part in the development of children's understanding of the number system. OHMCI's latest annual report indicates that, in general, mathematics is well taught in schools in Wales. Standards are satisfactory or better in over 90 per cent. of classes in primary schools and over 80 per cent. of classes in secondary schools. The evidence available to us suggests that standards are improving but that much work is needed to reach the national targets we have set for the year 2002.

A key feature which contributes towards improvement is an increasingly strong emphasis on the development of pupils' knowledge of multiplication tables and other number facts. Many primary schools include regular sessions of mental mathematics to develop pupils' capacity to think quickly and to recall their tables.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local numeracy experts he proposes to advise schools from April 1999; and if he will make a statement. [50345]

Mr. Hain: Many Local Education Authorities in Wales have already appointed numeracy advisors. The Welsh Office will be consulting with LEAs to determine whether the need to improve standards of numeracy requires an increase in the number of expert advisers in future.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Over-30-months Scheme

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the examination of options for the disposal of waste arising from the over thirty months scheme; and if he will make a statement. [49716]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 July 1998]: Good progress has been made on this issue. The Intervention Board invited eight companies with a track record in combustion or in the handling of meat and bone meal (MBM) to submit proposals under the negotiated procedures of the EU Services Directive for the incineration of waste MBM from Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS) animals. Seven costed proposals were received and these have been evaluated by a Project Board, against criteria of energy recovery, appropriate technology, early deliverability, high volumes and reasonable costs.

Negotiations continue with a view to the early award of contracts to the suppliers best able to meet the Board's requirements. Owing to the commercial sensitivity of these negotiations, it would be inappropriate to identify the companies at this stage but their names will be announced when contracts are signed. Burning under contract is subject to the companies obtaining the necessary planning and environmental consents from the relevant authorities in accordance with normal procedures.

These developments reflect the Government's determination to find solutions which will lead to the destruction of the waste MBM stocks, which currently stand at 330,000 tonnes, while taking full account of the need to protect human health and the environment and at the same time keeping the cost to the taxpayer as low as is consistent with this. An announcement on plans to destroy the OTMS tallow stocks, currently standing at 174,000 tonnes, will be made in the autumn.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many letters were sent by the British Cattle Movement Service where the name on the envelope did not match the address; and what was the cost of writing a second time to correct the mistake; [50042]

(2) what was the cost of replacing the faulty software in respect of advertising the British Cattle Movement Service. [50043]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 July 1998]: The British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS) issued approximately 109,000 leaflets giving details of the BCMS Helpline going live on 1 July, in the week beginning 29 June. We estimate that around 50 per cent. had the wrong name matched to the addresses. The letter of apology sent to livestock farmers, which again provided the BCMS Helpline details in case farmers had missed the previous publicity, cost around £45,000.

The cost of replacing the faulty software was £256.45. The fault concerned mail address labels only, and was entirely unconnected with the integrity of the BCMS database.

Meat Imports

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics his Department collects on animal rearing practices in respect of meat products imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will publish them. [49523]

Mr. Rooker: Responsibility for approving countries from which meat products may be imported into the European Community, and for collecting information and statistics on practices within those countries to aid decisions on approval, rests with the European Commission. In deciding whether to approve countries, the Commission must, in particular, take account of information on the state of health of the livestock, other domestic animals and wildlife; the provision of information on incidence of certain diseases; the country's rules on disease prevention and control and how these are organised and implemented; the structure of the veterinary services; and legislation on the use, authorisation, distribution and marketing of substances which might be administered to livestock.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the public expenditure in the current financial year to support activities which will fall under the responsibility of the Food Standards Agency. [48495]

Mr. Rooker: Those Ministry activities that are likely to fall under the responsibility of the Food Standards Agency are covered by MAFF programmes PP1:01, PP1:02, part of PP1:04, PP1:07, PP1:08, PP1:09 and EA1:06. Details of these programmes can be found in the MAFF/Intervention Board 1998 Departmental Report, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The total estimated provision for these programmes in the current financial year, after allowing for receipts, is approximately £55 million. This figure is for MAFF only and relates to direct costs; it makes no allowance for central service overheads associated with the work in question.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in this session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49083]

Mr. Morley: The guidelines to which my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women referred in her Answer were in place and reflected in Departmental guidelines prior to 18 May. The nature of the Department's responsibilities means that most of its legislative programme does not have a gender-specific impact. Nevertheless, in appropriate cases, national women's organisations have been consulted on proposed legislation.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many samples of fruit and vegetables grown in the United Kingdom were tested for organophosphate residues in 1997; and how many were found to exceed the maximum residue levels. [50371]

Mr. Rooker: The latest available survey information relates to samples collected in 1996. A total of 528 samples of various fruits and vegetables were analysed for up to 43 different organophosphate compounds. No residues exceeded the maximum residue levels (MRLs).

I expect the 1997 survey report to be published in September.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many samples of white and brown bread were tested for OP residues in 1997; and how many exceeded the maximum residue levels. [50372]

Mr. Rooker: The latest available survey information relates to samples collected in 1996. 48 samples each of white, brown, wholemeal, wholegrain and ethnic bread were analysed for 10 different organophosphate compounds. No residues exceeded the maximum residue levels (MRLs).

I expect the 1997 survey report to be published in September.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the test subjects and what other parameters were used to establish permitted levels of exposure to organophosphates in current use; and how many of these levels were established as a result of research in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America and (c) elsewhere. [50340]

Mr. Rooker: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. As a general rule, it is up to the applicant to decide where to carry out the tests required by the regulatory authorities, provided that they are able to demonstrate that tests have been conducted to acceptable standards and under appropriate conditions. Guidance on the scientific studies required to support an application for approval of an agricultural pesticide is set out in the Registration Handbook available from the Pesticides Safety Directorate.

For those pesticide organophosphate active ingredients for which an evaluation document has been published, the test subjects and other parameters (but not the country in which the test was carried out) will normally be quoted.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent the (a) synergistic and (b) potentiating effects of organophosphates combined with inert ingredients are taken into account when an OP product is licensed. [50339]

Mr. Rooker: When considering or reviewing applications for approval of pesticides, the impact on people and on the environment of both the active substance and the product are taken into account. In this way, the regulators allow for the consequences of any possible synergistic, potentiating or other combination effects.

If the effects which may arise from the proposed or actual use of the product are not acceptable, it is not approved.

Foodstuffs

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the estimated total consumption of fruit and vegetables in the United Kingdom for 1997; [50341]

(2) what is the estimated consumption by weight of bread in the United Kingdom for 1997. [50342]

Mr. Rooker: The following estimates are based on grossed-up National Food Survey data. They relate to imported and home-grown foods purchased by households for consumption at home; food eaten outside of the home is excluded as are fruit and vegetables grown privately.

Estimated household purchases of:	United Kingdom 1997 thousands of tonnes
Bread	2,190
Fresh potatoes	2,129
Processed potatoes	497
Fresh fruit	2,045

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49810]

Mr. Morley: The e-mail address for the Department's Correspondence Section is C.corres@sec.maff.gov.uk.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meet that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49808]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, Official Report, column 1.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to issue for public consultation his detailed proposals for changes to the pre-export procedures for live animals; and if he will make a statement [50573]

Mr. Morley: A public consultation document has been issued today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The proposed revised procedures deal with veterinary inspections for the purpose of export health certification for consignments of sheep and pigs destined for fattening, production or slaughter in other EC Member States. They seek to clarify the role of the exporter, the Department and the Local Veterinary Inspector (LVI) in the certification process. A summary of the revised procedures will be made available to the public. A key objective of the proposed revised inspection arrangements will be to ensure that unfit animals are rejected from export health certification.

We intend to establish a new panel of LVIs appointed to undertake these particular export health certifications, from which the LVI to conduct each particular certification will be nominated by the Department. We will provide additional training for veterinarians supervising the export of animals. Where an animal is found to be unfit to travel to the intended destination, LVIs on the new panel will have powers to serve Notices under the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order. The serving of such Notices will ensure that the person in charge of the animal takes the action necessary to protect the welfare of the animal. We intend to encourage exporters to ensure that sufficient facilities and staff are available to aid the inspection of the animals to be certified. We intend to clarify the methods for checking the identity of animals which form part of the proposed export consignment. Finally, we intend to provide clear indicators for the minimum times to be spent by the LVI on the inspection and identification of animals.

I announced on 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 116, that we intended to pay LVIs directly for inspection and certification of consignments, recovering the money by way of a charge (payable on application for certification) by exporters. We remain committed to introducing those changes so that the whole of the certification process for these types of animals can be demonstrated to be entirely independent. The consultation document sets out the general principles which we intend to apply for recovering the costs of these inspections and seeks information to enable us to make proposals about the detail of the changes to the financial arrangements. In order to enable us to calculate the costs of such a change and to come forward with detailed proposals, information is needed not only about current charges (which are a matter between the LVI and the exporter) but also about the likely effects of the proposed revised procedures on such costs. Once we have the responses to this consultation document, we will draw up a further consultation document which outlines our detailed proposals to change the existing financial arrangements, including the legislation necessary to give effect to such a change.

The closing date for comments is 8 September 1998.

CABINET OFFICE

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49831]

Written Answers to Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Photographic Passes

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if she will list the House passes issued to individuals who also work as employees of, directors of or consultants to (a) Prima Europe, (b) LLM (Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn) and (c) GPC Market Access. [50612]

Mrs. Roe: Such information is not required of applicants for House of Commons photographic passes.

However, holders of such passes who work for hon. Members as secretaries or research assistants do have to supply the Registrar of Members' Interests with full details of any other relevant gainful occupation which they may pursue other than that for which the pass was issued. This information is available for inspection by hon. Members in the Library.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what assessment he has made of the impact of the year 2000 computer bug on the operation of the House of Commons. [50172]

Mr. Allan: The House of Commons has been actively involved in assessing the Year 2000 problem for some time, and has commissioned a working party under the management of the Network Administrator's Group (NAG). This forum has produced the 'Year 2000 Implementation Guide for the Houses of Parliament', and contains a 'Definition of Year 2000 Conformity Requirements' prepared by the British Standards Institution committee, (their reference BDD/1/-/3). The NAG forum has tested and identified a set of tools and procedures for remedial action.

Each department in the House of Commons is busy developing a project plan, using these NAG recommendations, to ensure their systems are fully compliant. As part of this plan PCD will facilitate a test schedule for weeks commencing the 10 and 17 August 1998 so that all departments can test their computer equipment with the PDVN.

Lavatories

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what is the latest available annual figure for the amount of money spent on the provision of toilet rolls, hand towels and dryers and soap in the Palace of Westminster. [50171]

Mrs. Roe: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms; I have asked him to reply to the hon. Gentleman.

PRIME MINISTER

Media Relations Staff

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what complaints he has received since 2 May 1997 from editors or news editors of improper pressure on their journalists by his, or his Cabinet colleagues', media relations staff. [50534]

The Prime Minister: None.

Lobbyists

Sir George Young: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions (a) he and (b) civil servants at No. 10 Downing Street have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings. [50557]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list the occasions on which any director of Prima Europe or GPC Market Access has visited No. 10 Downing Street, since 1 May 1997; [50475]

(2) if he will list the occasions on which Mr. Roger Liddle has visited the premises of or met any director of GPC Market Access and Prima Europe since 1 May 1997. [50474]

The Prime Minister: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of Governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions when Roger Liddle has addressed meetings set up by (a) GPC Market Access and (b) other lobbying organisations, indicating whether these meetings were held under Chatham House rules. [50462]

The Prime Minister: Special Advisers and other civil servants address events arranged by outside organisations on many occasions, since part of their role is to inform the public and interested bodies about Government policy. Whether any such meetings are held publicly or privately, Special Advisers must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mirror Group

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when inspectors were appointed to investigate the 1991 flotation of the Mirror Group; and what their terms of reference were. [49510]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 8 July 1998]: The inspectors were appointed on 8 June 1992 to investigate and report on the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc. They were asked to look, in particular, at the offers for sale of the company's shares in early 1991.

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 240, when she expects to receive the report from the inspectors investigating the 1991 flotation of the Mirror Group; and what steps she has taken to expedite the report. [49512]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 8 July 1998]: It is not possible to forecast the timing of the completion of an investigation of this kind. Inspectors have a distinct statutory position and are independent of my Department. The inspectors are aware of the need to complete their inquiry and report as quickly as possible, consistent with the necessity for them to act fairly.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish the inspectors' report into the circumstances of the Mirror Group flotation. [50338]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The inspectors have not yet reported to the Secretary of State. A decision on publication will be taken when the report has been received and fully considered.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if there has been further investigation of the unaccounted for highly enriched uranium referred to in the Dounreay Shaft Inventory. [50256]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 10 June 1998, Official Report, columns 594–95.

The Safeguards Office of my Department is studying the nuclear material accountancy aspects of the UKAEA report "Dounreay Shaft Inventory". In addition, the Safeguards Office study will take into account any further information from UKAEA. The conclusions of the study will be made public.

Post Office

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the external financing limit for the Post Office for 1998–99. [50812]

Mrs. Beckett: As announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, the Post Office is able to carry forward an external financing limit (EFL) over-achievement under the nationalised industries end-year flexibility scheme. The Post Office over-achieved its 1997/98 EFL by £25m, and therefore its negative EFL for 1998/99 has been reduced from -£335 million to -£310 million.

North American Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with other EU member states with regard to encouraging closer trading links between the EU and NAFTA. [48732]

Mrs. Beckett: During our Presidency of the EU Council of Ministers, the UK hosted EU summits with both the USA and Canada to encourage closer trading links. On 25 May the General Affairs Council also approved negotiating directives for the Commission to pursue the liberalisation of trade with Mexico, as foreseen in the Agreements between the EU and Mexico signed in Luxembourg on 8 December 1997.

Pharmacies

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has evaluated into the number of pharmacies in the United Kingdom per 10,000 population relative to those in other EU countries. [48223]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

None.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the advantages of regulating prices of over-the-counter medicines; and what research she has evaluated as to practice in other EU countries. [48222]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 30 June 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

We have not considered regulating the prices of over-the-counter medicines, nor have we carried out specific research into practice in other European Union countries. At the 18 May 1998 meeting of the EU Internal Market Council, held under the United Kingdom Presidency, member states agreed unanimously to further pursuit of the single market in over-the-counter medicines, including price liberalisation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans her Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49887]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Each of the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office has a Web site which includes an Internet e-mail address. The latter enables hon. Members and members of the public to communicate electronically with Departments and for responses to be provided using the same medium.

Northern Ireland Civic Forum

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the membership, indicating which organisations members will be drawn from, and the role of the Northern Ireland Civic Forum. [50194]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Civic Forum will comprise representatives of the business, trade union and voluntary sectors and such other sectors as agreed by the First and Deputy Ministers of the new Northern Ireland Assembly. The Forum will act as a consultative body on social, economic and cultural issues.

Dementia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of people suffering from dementia in Northern Ireland. [50219]

Mr. Worthington: Figures on the actual incidence of people with dementia are not available as many sufferers are not in contact with services. Based on surveys elsewhere of the prevalence of dementia within the population it is estimated that in Northern Ireland there could be some 13,500 people suffering from one or other of the various forms of the disease.

Central Community Relations Unit

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the organisations in receipt of funding from the Central Community Relations Unit in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997, giving in each case the amount. [50190]

Mr. Worthington: The Central Community Relations Unit provided funding totalling £5,586,200.09 in 1995–96, £5,531,857.76 in 1996–97 and £5,627,728.91 in 1997–98. Details of the organisations funded in those years, together with the amount of funding they received, have been placed in the Library of the House. These do not include payments from the European Regional Development Fund and the European Social Fund in respect of European Union Measures administered by the Central Community Relations Unit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women sentenced to imprisonment in England and Wales in each of the last three years had children under the age of five years at the time of their sentence. [49525]

Ms Quin: This information is not collected centrally. However, a study of women in prison was carried out in November 1994 by the Office for National Statistics. It found that, of the 1,766 women interviewed, 265 (or 15 per cent.) had, at the time of imprisonment, at least one child under the age of five.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which women's prison has the largest use per inmate of (a) chlorpromazine (Largactil), (b) Melleril and (c) other anti-psychotic drugs; how many were prescribed there; and what was the prison population there, in each of the last five years; [50178]

(2) how many prescriptions for (a) chlorpromazine (Largactil), (b) Melleril and (c) other anti-psychotic drugs were issued in each of the past five years in each women's prison; [50180]

(3) what changes have taken place in the prescription of (a) minor tranquillisers, (b) major tranquillisers and (c) neuroleptic drugs in women's prisons since the publication of the 1996 report of the Advisory Council on Drugs Misuse. [50179]

Ms Quin: Details about prescriptions issued are not available in a form that could be used to provide the information sought and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Prison Service recognises that many women received into custody have complex medical histories and have very often already been prescribed the types of medications cited. A Prison Service health care standard on the use of medicines makes clear that medication will be prescribed only for clinical reasons and in line with the recommendation in the 1996 report from the Advisory Council on Drugs Misuse. Efforts are being made to reduce the prescribing of major and minor tranquillisers and neuroleptic drugs, except where their use is clinically essential. Increasing collaboration with NHS specialist psychiatric services is bringing prescribing in prisons under the influence of NHS consultant psychiatrists and concern about prescribing levels in prisons will continue to be addressed through improved monitoring of health care standards.

Police (Homosexuals)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to encourage homosexual people to join police forces in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [49526]

Mr. Michael: The responsibility for making appointments to the police service in England and Wales lies with the chief constable of each police force. Chief constables, with the assistance of their police authorities, are also responsible for ensuring that their forces represent the community they serve. It is for individual chief constables to decide whether to target certain groups in any recruitment campaigns, and I am aware that a number of forces now place recruitment advertisements in gay newspapers and magazines.

It is important for the police force in any area to reflect the composition of the wider community it serves. This issue was explored in a thematic inspection undertaken by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary last year. The report "Winning the Race. Policing Plural Communities" was published last year and copies are available in the Library.

Prison Officers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number and percentages of prison officers working with juveniles in young offender institutions and prisons by ethnic and religious background. [49872]

Ms Quin: These figures are not collated centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 347, which of the initiatives listed were (a) initiated during the United Kingdom presidency and (b) in progress at the commencement of the United Kingdom presidency. [49993]

Mr. George Howarth: The new initiatives launched under the United Kingdom Presidency were:

- proposals and agreement on the key elements of a new European Union drugs strategy for 2000–04;
- the first two large-scale Customs joint surveillance exercises involving the 15 member states and the applicant countries of Central and Eastern Europe;
- introduction and completion of a joint action on good practice in mutual legal assistance;
- introduction of a joint action on the identification, tracing, freezing, seizing and confiscation of assets; and
- agreement to a common European Union standard for the exchange of fingerprint information.

The other activities listed in my earlier answer were taking forward important work, initiated by the United Kingdom and other member states, but not completed during previous Presidencies.

Police Officers

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of (a) police officers and (b) constables in each police force in England and Wales. [50865]

Mr. Michael: Provisional figures show that at 31 March 1998 there were 126,944 police officers (down 214 from March 1997) in England and Wales, including 98,387 constables (up 255 from March 1997).

The number of constables and the number of officers in each force is shown in the tables. In addition, there are 2,058 officers on secondments to the National Crime Squad and Central Services.

Police Complaints

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful case brought by members of the public against the police for (i) malicious prosecution, (ii) false imprisonment and (iii) assault in the last five years, giving in each case the amount of compensation paid. [50202]

Mr. Michael: The available information is in terms of numbers of substantial and unsubstantiated complaints against the police, and is given in the table. Figures for the amount of compensation paid are not available.

Outcomes of investigated complaints for certain complaint types

	Reason for complaint

[1] Figures for unsubstantiated complaints were not collected in this directorate prior to 1993 and we are unable to provide figures for 1992

Note:

Substantiated complaints plus unsubstantiated complaints represent the total number of complaints investigated. Substantiated complaints are those complaints against the police which are found justified by the Police Complaints Authority

Racial Crimes

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the recorded incidents of (a) racial assault, (b) racist murder and (c) incitement to racial hatred in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [50201]

Mr. Michael: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. At present, individual forces submit their total racial incidents figures to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at the end of each financial year, on the basis of the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

"any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

These statistics are not broken down by the type of incident. In consultation with the police, the Home Office is currently exploring the possibility of police forces submitting a breakdown of the type of racial incidents recorded by the police in the future.

The total number of racial incidents recorded by the police in England and Wales[1] from 1989 to 1996–97 is given in the table.

[1] Figures are available from 1989 onwards

[2] Until 1993–94 figures were submitted to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary every calendar year.

In addition, under data collection requirements agreed by member states, figures giving the number of serious racial incidents have been submitted to the European Union since 1994. The 1994–95 figures showed that, of the 11,878 racial incidents recorded by the police in England and Wales, 508 were in respect of serious crime. Of these, four were murders; three were attempted murders; 161 were attacks involving explosives/arson; and 340 were serious assaults. In 1995–96, of the 12,222 racial incidents recorded by the police, 440 were in respect of serious crime. Of these, two were murders; 163 were attacks involving explosives/arson; and 275 were serious assaults. In 1996–97, of the 13,151 racial incidents recorded by the police, 414 were in respect of serious crime. Of these, three were murders; two were attempted murders; 158 were attacks involving explosives/arson; and 251 were serious assaults.

Ensuring that racial incidents are properly recorded and pursued is one aspect of the drive against racially aggravated crime. The Government intend to ensure that the criminal law is able to deal effectively with those involved in these incidents. The Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] contains new racially aggravated offences which will send out a strong message that racist violence and harassment is unacceptable. It is also hoped that the Inquiry into the matters arising from the tragic death of Stephen Lawrence will identify the lessons to be learned for the investigation and prosecution of racially motivated crime.

Ministerial Television Appearances

Mr. George Howarth: Every request for interview is treated individually and on its merits.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Women's Unit

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) resources and (b) programme money was provided to the Women's Unit for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99. [45796]

Ms Ruddock: A new Women's Unit was established in this Department with effect from 6 May 1997. Five civil servants from the Sex and Race Equality Division of the Department for Education and Employment were transferred to this Department to establish the Unit together with an annual budget of £165,000. The actual expenditure for the Women's Unit for 1997–98 was £565,202.

The allocation made for the Women's Unit for the period 1998/99 is £1,130,004.

These higher figures demonstrate this Government's commitment to ensuring that there is an effective and adequately resourced Women's Unit to prioritise women's interests at the heart of Government.

The Women's Unit does not have a programme budget of its own, although its work does, of course, influence the programmes of Government Departments.

Lone Parents

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents are claiming income support in each local authority area in London; and in each area, how many lone parents had one or more children aged (a) 0 to four and (b) five to 11 years; and how many children of lone parents fall into each age group. [48979]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The latest information available is set out in the table.

2. Lone parents are defined as claimants receiving the lone parent premium and will therefore exclude some single parents who receive a higher value premium such as the Disability or Pensioner premium
3. Numbers are based on a 5 per cent. sample
4. A lone parent may have children in both of the age bands shown. They will therefore be counted twice, as such a case will be shown in each banding

Unclaimed Pensions

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many women did not claim their state pension on reaching the age of 60 in the year 1997–98; [49079]

(2) how many men did not claim the state pension on reaching the age of 65 years in 1997–98. [49100]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. Information for 1995–96 on the number of men and women who have entitlement to Retirement Pension (RP) and have contacted the Department to say that they wish to defer claiming their pension is set out in the table.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will provide a breakdown of the sums available to pensioners who have not claimed their income support, indicating the number within the ranges (a) 0 to 50 pence, (b) 50 pence to £1, (c) £1 to £2 and (d) measured in £1 steps, up to £55 per week. [49650]

[1] The estimates are based on particularly small sample sizes and should be treated with caution

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and may not sum due to rounding. The estimates are based on the 1995–96 FRS and are almost certainly subject to some degree of error
2. The median unclaimed amount is £9.10: 50 per cent. of pensioners are therefore entitled to less than this amount and 50 per cent. are entitled to more
3. It has not been possible to provide figures in 50 pence bands up to £1, or figures in £1 bands above £13 because the amounts in the sample size are too small. The table therefore shows £10 bands above £13, up to £53
4. The term "pensioner benefit unit" refers to a single pensioner over the age of 60—with or without dependent children—or a couple (married or unmarried) together with any dependent children, whether either partner is over the age of 60

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her policy that the contract to operate the Benefits Agency Medical Service will not be transferred to a private company until that company can demonstrate that it has a sufficient medical workforce to execute the contract as demonstrated by signed and returned contracts between the accredited medical workforce and the company. [49695]

Mr. Keith Bradley: It was announced on 19 February 1998, Official Report, columns 861–62, that the contracts for Benefits Agency Medical Service would be awarded to the SEMA Group for five years with an option to extend the contracts for two years.

One of the acceptance criteria to be used to determine whether responsibility for providing the medical services is transferred to a private company is that a pool of suitably qualified and approved doctors is in place to deliver the service.

Residential Homes

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the preserved right benefits of persons living in independent sector residential homes can be reduced as a result of topping up payments from a local authority; and what plans she has to change the current rules. [49996]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Local authorities are permitted to top up Income Support paid to people with preserved rights only in cases where a person was receiving local authority topping up payments on 31 March 1993, is under pension age, or is in residential care and either facing eviction from the home or is resident of a home which is about to close. Such top-up payments have no effect on the amount of Income Support paid. We have no plans to change the rules on the treatment of such payments.

Widows Benefits

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will introduce measures to allow women to qualify for widows benefit when they have not been married to their late partners but could qualify as having been married by cohabitation. [50210]

Mr. Denham: Modernising the Social Security system is a key priority of the Government. In our examination of the current Social Security structure we will take account of the needs of the bereaved in pursuit of our aim of reducing poverty and welfare dependency, promoting work incentives and providing better, simpler more efficient services to clients.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments were made; and how much was spent on cold weather payments in the winter of 1997–98. [50211]

Mr. Denham: Last winter, 55,381 Cold Weather Payments were made, totalling £470,739.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she intends to reply to the letters to her dated 7 April, 27 April and 4 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. P. Hampson of 2 Hopterstall Walk. [50559]

Mr. Field: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 13 July 1998.

LETS Schemes

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of (i) the number of LETS schemes and (ii) the number of people trading in LETS in (a) England and Wales and (b) Derbyshire; and if she will make a statement. [50203]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not collected by this Department.

Benefits Appeals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals, in respect of each benefit, were successful during the last 12 months where the claimant (a) had an oral hearing and was represented, (b) had an oral hearing and was not represented and (c) did not attend the hearing. Supported Accommodation (Interim Funding)

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement about the future of the interim funding arrangements for supported accommodation from the end of October. [50751]

Ms Harman: I am pleased to announce that the Government will be extending for a further twelve months our interim funding arrangements for supported accommodation.

The Government fully appreciate the importance of supported housing for vulnerable people. Extending the interim scheme will ensure financial security for many thousands of tenants who rely on Housing Benefit to meet the cost of the support services they need and which allow them to live with some measure of independence in the community.

We hope to conclude the inter-Departmental Review of funding for supported accommodation in the near future. However, the supported housing sector is a complex area and the problems identified by the Review have proved to be particularly difficult to resolve. The Government remain committed to identifying and introducing appropriate long-term funding arrangements as soon as possible.

The Government believe that it is important to ensure that whatever arrangements are implemented for the long-term, they are sustainable and achieve a fair balance between the demands on Housing Benefit and other sources of funding. We will give supported housing providers and other stakeholders an opportunity to comment before new arrangements are implemented.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish the 1997–98 annual reports and accounts for each of her Next Steps agencies. [50750]

Ms Harman: The 1997/98 annual reports and accounts have been laid before Parliament today for the Benefits, Child Support, Contributions, Information Technology Services and War Pensions Agencies.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Library

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are the annual revenue account costs of the British Library's new public affairs directorate. [40132]

Mr. Fisher: The Public Affairs Directorate was established in 1996 with staff from existing resources. Annual revenue costs of the Directorate in 1997–98 were:

Income from sales and donations	2,158,972
Expenditure	3,510,157
Net Expenditure	1,351,185

Departmental Staff (Scotland)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [48359]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport and the Royal Parks Agency do not employ any staff in Scotland.

Historic Buildings (Cheltenham)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to publish the new list of buildings of historic or architectural interest for the Borough of Cheltenham. [49245]

Mr. Banks: The Cheltenham list is one of 140 which have been reviewed by English Heritage. The responsibility for checking, processing and agreeing these revised lists lies within the Department. This, together with the resolution of queries with English Heritage, is a time consuming task. We are about to start work on the Cheltenham list which includes over 1,000 buildings and expect to publish it before the end of November.

Local Authority Sports Strategies

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to encourage local authorities to develop sports strategies. [50232]

Mr. Banks: The Department is working with local government to develop guidance on cultural strategies embracing all areas of its responsibility, including sport. The English Sports Council has also produced a wide range of strategic guidance intended to assist local authorities and other bodies involved in planning for sport, both in terms of building facilities and sports development programmes.

Outdoor Sports

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to encourage participation in outdoor sports. [50235]

Mr. Banks: Through our policy of 'Sport For All', we are determined to encourage and improve participation in all sports.

Government support for sport is channelled through the Sports Councils. In 1998–99 almost £45 million of exchequer funding will be made available to the United Kingdom Sports Council and the English Sports Council. In addition, around £250 million will be awarded to sport through the Lottery Sports Fund.

With this funding, the Sports Councils undertake a range of activities to promote and develop a number of sports at all levels. The Sports Councils aim to support both indoor and outdoor sports when giving grants to sports governing bodies or making awards from the Lottery Sports Fund.

Sports Governing Bodies

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to improve the financial accountability of sports governing bodies. [50233]

Mr. Banks: This Department's funding for sport is channelled through the United Kingdom and English Sports Councils. The Sports Councils make decisions on awards to sports governing bodies and must ensure that organisations in receipt of funding are administered in an efficient manner and have rigorous financial controls in place. The Councils are required to give assurances to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to this effect.

The Councils carry out an audit programme of governing bodies to monitor performance. In addition, the Councils undertake advice and support activities, including conferences, seminars and workshops to help with corporate governance, financial planning and objective setting.

Sports Administration and Coaching

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to improve standards in sports (a) administration and (b) coaching. [50236]

Mr. Banks: In addition to audit work, the English Sports Council, which is funded by my Department, seeks to improve standards in the general administration of sport through its Running Sport programme. The programme offers courses and guidance material across a wide range of sports management and administration issues. The programme has been developed and delivered in partnership with a wide range of organisations, including governing bodies and local authorities. The ESC's Volunteer Investment Programme also includes training and advice on administration and management issues for the many volunteer officials and coaches who help run sport at all levels. 2,800 volunteer managers benefited from training in 1997–98. The ESC also keeps in regular contact with the British Institute for Sports Administration and collaborates with it on specific projects.

The United Kingdom and the English Sports Councils are providing £2.261 million in grant-aid to the National Coaching Foundation (NCF) during the current financial year. I am pleased that the Councils are continuing to support the NCF's work in providing education, instruction, and training to professional and volunteer coaches at all levels of British sport. Around half the ESC's £1.561 million grant to the NCF will be used to support two major projects under the ESC's National Junior Sport Programme: the Champion Coaching Scheme which seeks to recruit and train more coaches for young people; and, Coaching for Teachers, by which over 8,500 primary and secondary teachers will be given the opportunity to develop their coaching skills in 12 different sports. The United Kingdom Sports Council has been working closely with the NCF in particular to ensure that the needs of elite athletes and their coaches are properly met.

Boxing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will take steps to reduce potential damage caused by blows to the head in boxing in the United Kingdom. [50257]

Mr. Banks: While I appreciate the interest boxing creates, the Government are keen to see that the proper medical safeguards and regulations are in place for all sports. It is especially important for those who carry a higher level of physical contact, and believe that the sport's governing bodies are well equipped to keep these in place. The British Boxing of Control are currently undertaking a further review of their medical and safety procedures and have sought views from all their members across the country. I have requested a full report on the outcome.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Royal Train

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the sleeping car on the Royal Train will be made available for hire. [49524]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Yes. For Governmental and other uses to further the national interest. Up to four sleeping cars, together with the rest of the Royal Train would be available. The four coaches used by The Queen, The Duke of Edinburgh and the Prince of Wales would not be available for alternate use.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 696, during which period is the wider set of cross-system and cross-site year 2000 validation tests for the NATS systems expected to take place. [49864]

Dr. Strang: Cross-system and cross-site year 2000 validation testing on NATS systems is due to take place in the period September to December 1998.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 696, if he will make a statement on the progress of the independent audit of the NATS year 2000 activities. [49865]

Dr. Strang: The initial stage of the independent audit has been conducted and a report was produced in early May. Agreed recommendations are now being implemented. Further audit stages are due to be conducted at approximately 3 month intervals.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 696, how many of the 99 NATS software items found to be Year 2000 non-compliant have been fixed; and what is the expected completion date for the fixing and testing of these changes. [49863]

Dr. Strang: By the end of July 1998, remedial work on 79 of the 99 non-compliant operational systems and equipment will have been completed. The plan remains to have all non-compliant items fixed and tested by the end of December 1998.

Safer Routes to School Initiatives

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding his Department will be providing for local authority Safe Routes to School initiatives in Gloucestershire. [50058]

Dr. Strang: Funds are not normally earmarked for "Safer Routes to School" initiatives. In the 1998–99 Local Transport Capital Settlement, my Department allocated Gloucestershire County Council £700,000 for minor works in Cheltenham and Gloucester package areas. The Council has the freedom to use these resources for Safer Routes to School if it wishes.

As bids for funding 1999–2000 are not due until the end of this month it is too early to say how much Gloucestershire will have at its disposal for Safer Routes to School in that year.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the public capital expenditure on transport by English region on a per capita basis (a) for the last five years and (b) as a forecast for the next three years. [49862]

Dr. Strang: The information my hon. Friend has requested for the past five years cannot be produced comprehensively except at unreasonable cost to public funds. There are forecasts for the future pattern of the expenditure in question. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Organophosphates

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 22 July 1997, Official Report, column 530, who is carrying out the research into the effects of low-level exposure to organophosphate pesticides on human health; where this research is being carried out; what is the total value of the funding; and if the Chemical Defence Establishment put in a proposal and bid for this research funding. [49994]

Mr. Meacher: The main contractor for the research is the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh. Part of the study has involved visits to farms throughout Great Britain. In addition, some clinical work has been carried out by the Institute of Neurological Sciences at Glasgow. The total value of the funding is £500,000, jointly provided by the Health and Safety Executive, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health. The Chemical Defence Establishment did not put in a proposal or bid.

Air Passengers (Behaviour)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of incidents in the air related to disruptive behaviour and drunkenness reported to the CAA under the mandatory reporting system in each of the last five years. [50217]

Dr. Strang: The number of incidents reported under the mandatory reporting system related to disruptive behaviour and drunkenness, which are considered relevant to flight safety.

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to make a decision regarding the creation of additional council tax bands; and if he will make a statement; [50439]

(2) when he next proposes to review properties in relation to their council tax banding; and if he will make a statement. [50440]

Mr. Raynsford: Our consultation paper 'Improving local financial accountability' invited views on whether there is a case to change the council tax. The deadline for responses was 1 June. We have received a number of representations about the council tax bands. We are considering these and will set out our conclusions in a White Paper this summer.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many water disconnections at domestic properties there have been in each year since 1993. [50183]

Angela Eagle: The Director General of Water Services publishes data on disconnections twice a year, by water company area, for both household and non-household customers. Information about disconnections in the year to 31 March 1998, together with numbers of household and non-household disconnections in each year since 1989–90, was published in an OFWAT News Release on 14 May 1998. Copies of this and earlier OFWAT News Releases containing similar information are in the House Library.

Private Roads

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of private roads in England. [50184]

Dr. Strang: Separate figures for England are not readily available. Records show that in 1972—the latest year for which figures exist—there were some 40,000 private streets throughout England and Wales, amounting to some 4,500 miles. The number will have declined since that time, but as records of streets made up for adoption are not held centrally it is not possible to say by how much.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the statutory duties of the owners of private roads with regard to their upkeep and lighting. [50185]

Dr. Strang: In general, the responsibility of maintaining a private street falls to the owners of the adjoining properties (the "frontagers"). This is a matter of common law, rather than statute law, although under the Highways Act 1980 when there is an urgent need for repairs to obviate danger to traffic the local highway authority may by notice require the owners of the premises fronting the street to carry out specified repairs. The authority may also from time to time resolve to execute street works in order to make up the street to a standard they consider satisfactory, and the works may include lighting.

The common law imposes no obligations on frontagers to light streets, and while local authorities have certain statutory powers in respect of lighting there is no duty to light a private street.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities in England and Wales to which he has given consent to make registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation which vary from the model schemes prescribed in Circular 3/97; and which of the consents given were for (a) information schemes and (b) schemes containing control provisions. [50186]

Mr. Raynsford: HMO registration schemes which vary from the model schemes prescribed in Circular 3/97 have been confirmed for the following authorities in England:

Notification schemes

North East Lincolnshire

York City

Schemes containing control provisions

Barnsley

Colchester

Ealing

Guildford

Hackney

Hounslow

Islington

Kings Lynn and West Norfolk

Schemes containing special control provisions

Blackpool

Bournemouth

Portsmouth

Thanet.

In addition, my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has confirmed one scheme containing special control provisions for Swansea.

Bull Bars

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to ban bull bars on vehicles. [50253]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Last year we consulted on a range of possible options for dealing with bull bars at a national level. Having carefully considered the responses to this exercise, we are now in the process of identifying how best to take matters forward. We are keen to see aggressive bull bars off the road, but we must ensure that any action we take deals effectively with the complexities involved.

Strand Underpass

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total cost for each of the past 10 years of the Strand Underpass in respect of (a) capital costs and (b) maintenance works. [50359]

Dr. Strang: The City of Westminster is entirely responsible for the Strand Underpass. However, the following data on capital and maintenance expenditure have been obtained from that authority.

Strand underpass expenditure

Year	Capital	Maintenance[1]
1988–89	83.098	302.697

1997–98	0	113.199

Global Warming

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his latest estimate of the level of global warming for the current year relative to the average for the period 1951 to 1980. [50361]

Angela Eagle: Global temperatures recorded during the first six months of 1998 have been analysed and show that temperatures averaged from January to June have been 0.64 degrees Celsius warmer than the average measured for those six months during the period 1951 to 1980. A major contributor to this warmth has been the El Nino phenomenon. The Government do not, however, make forecasts of the average global temperature for the remainder of the current year.

Herald Way Marsh

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many species of plants and animals are indigenous to the Herald Way marsh in Coventry; and of those, how many are classified as endangered. [50120]

Angela Eagle: Over 1,142 species of plant and animal have been recorded at Herald Way marsh. The figure breaks down as follows:

848 species of invertebrate

4 species of amphibian and reptile over 40 species of bird

a range of common mammals.

The site supports an important assemblage of invertebrates, including 3 species that are classified as Rare or Vulnerable nationally, and 79 species classified as notable (considered scarce on a national scale).

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many species of animals, plants and insects there are (a) in Herald Way marsh and (b) on average in other sites of special scientific interest in England. [50122]

Angela Eagle: 1,142 species of animal, plant and invertebrate have been recorded at Herald Way marsh. For a breakdown of the figures I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the previous question.

Species lists for all 3,995 SSSIs in England are not held and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of water quality in Herald Way marsh; and what proportion of the impurities found comes from (a) industrial and (b) agricultural sources. [50123]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency, which is responsible for monitoring water quality, is not aware of any direct industrial or agricultural sources of pollution of the Herald Way marsh. The land beneath the marsh is, however, contaminated by longstanding deposits of colliery waste. Leachability tests have indicated that the contaminants are relatively immobile and therefore pose a negligible risk to the environment if left in-situ. Since construction activity could disturb the contaminants, the Agency has asked the local planning authority to request detailed assessment of the environmental implications of all proposed developments in the area.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the mechanisms currently used to prevent activities that damage sites of special scientific interest; what duties are placed on public bodies to protect sites of special scientific interest; and what powers agencies have to monitor sites of special scientific interest. [50124]

Angela Eagle: There are a variety of consultation mechanisms, both between the conservation agency and landowners and between the agencies and other bodies, which serve to highlight potential problems and enable the conservation agencies to take action to remedy them, and prevent damage.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many sites of special scientific interest are located in industrial or urban areas of (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom. [50119]

Angela Eagle: This information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government are taking to restore sites of special scientific interest that have been damaged by long-term pollution. [50121]

Angela Eagle: It is not the Government's responsibility to restore sites damaged by long-term pollution. In most cases, the owner is expected to take responsibility for the restoration of a site. However, several statutory regimes exist providing measures for the remediation of damage caused by long-term pollution, including damage in SSSIs. Section 161 of the Water Resources Act 1991, and section 161A when implemented, give considerable powers to the Environment Agency to deal with pollution of controlled waters. Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, when implemented, will give enforcing authorities new powers to secure remediation of contaminated land, as defined. SSSIs are proposed to be specifically included amongst the receptors to be considered when determining whether land meets the definition.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the eighth Annual report of the Drinking Water Inspectorate will be published. [50748]

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the eighth annual report of the Drinking Water Inspectorate will be published. [50813]

Mr. Meacher: The Drinking Water Inspectorate has published its eighth Annual Report today.

The Inspectorate will also publish leaflets for consumers. One will summarise the main points of the Report and the others will give brief details of the quality of drinking water supplied by each water company.

Copies of the Report and leaflets will be placed in the Library of the House.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's research on the impact of urban development corporations will be published. [50752]

Mr. Caborn: The results of two evaluations of Urban Development Corporations (UDCs) were published today, one examining the "Performance and Good Practice Lessons of UDCs" and the other the "Impact of UDCs in Leeds, Bristol and Central Manchester". Copies of each report and summary of findings have been placed in the Library of the House. The Department's evaluation of the LDDC, "Regenerating London Docklands" was published in June. These reports, taken together, represent a comprehensive evaluation of the impacts of UDCs and set out good practice lessons for future regeneration agencies.

Housing (Rents)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the implications for local authority rents of the figures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer today for expenditure on housing revenue account subsidy included in the total of annually managed expenditure. [50864]

Ms Armstrong: The provision for Housing Revenue Account Subsidy allows for a real increase in local authority rents of 1 per cent. next year and of 2 per cent. in each of the following two years. The consequent increase in rental income net of increased rent rebates will be available for increased revenue expenditure on maintaining the stock. The detailed proposals for the determination of HRA subsidy for 1999–2000 and subsequent years will be subject to consultation in the usual way. Rent policy for the longer term remains under consideration within the Welfare Reform process.

Roads Review

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the proposed Junction 8 of the M62 is included in the Roads Review. [50197]

Dr. Strang: No. The Commission for the New Towns have agreed to fund this scheme. Schemes like this which are to be funded by developers are excluded from the Review as explained in my Answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Mr. Whitehead) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, columns 278–79. This answer corrects the one given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State on 12 May 1998, Official Report, column 62.

M25

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on the implications of the recent proposal for widening the M25 for growth in (a) traffic and (b) carbon dioxide emissions; [47988]

(2) if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of the recent proposal for widening the M25; [47987]

(3) if he will make a statement on the cost of the recent proposal for widening the M25. [47986]

Dr. Strang: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 14 July 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the M25.

There are three sets of proposals to widen the M25 between Junctions 12–15, Junctions 15–16 and Junctions 16–19. All three are being considered in the Government's review of the role that trunk roads should play in an integrated transport system.

The schemes are described broadly in Vol 2 of the roads review consultation document—a copy of the relevant page is attached—but until we know the outcome of the review, we cannot say what form the proposals will take if indeed Ministers decide to take the schemes forward. I am afraid I cannot therefore provide the information you seek. The Government hopes to announce the results of the roads review this summer.

We are also considering proposals to improve safety on the eastbound approach to M25 J6, but these proposals are at too early a stage for us to be able to provide the information you ask for.

M25 J12–15 widening

Standard D5/D6

Scheme cost £93.8 million

Length 10.9km

Next Stage OM

Widening of the M25 in Surrey between Junction 12 (the junction with the M3) and Junction 15 (the junction with the M4). The scheme is to widen within the highway boundary from dual 4 lane to dual 5 lane between Junctions 12 and 14 and from dual 4 lane to dual 6 lane between Junction 14 and 15. This section of the M25 connects with the M3, M4, A30 and provides access via A3113 to Heathrow Airport. The M25 is part of the Trans European Road Network.

M25 J15–16 widening

Standard D5

Scheme cost £43.1 million

Length 7.5km

Next Stage OP

Widening of the M25 between Junction 15 (M4) and Junction 16 (M40) from dual 4 lane to dual 5 lane standard largely within the existing highway boundary. The M25 is part of the Trans European Road Network. The scheme's objective is to provide additional capacity.

M25 J16–19 widening

Standard D4

Scheme cost £94.4 million

Length 16.0km

Next Stage OM

Widening of the M25 between Junction 16 (M40) and Junction 19 (the Watford Spur) from D3 to D4 standard within the existing highway boundary. The scheme's objective is to provide additional traffic capacity. The scheme has been identified for review to establish whether a smaller scale solution could be adopted.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs Tsar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council on the basis of how many days work per week the salary of the Drugs Tsar is calculated. [50486]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator is employed as a Special Adviser, and under the terms of his contract is required to work a minimum of 41 hours over a 5-day week. Mr. Hellawell also has a position as a non-executive director with a property company, Evans of Leeds. The appointment was approved by the Cabinet Office on the basis that there was no conflict of interest and that the commitment was limited to attending six Board meetings a year, which would be taken out of his annual leave. Mr. Hellawell has waived the salary offered by Evans of Leeds.

Lobbyists

Sir George Young: To ask the President of the Council on what occasions (a) she, (b) the Lord Privy Seal and (c) their special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings. [50558]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of Governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available, a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many capital grants and for what purpose the former Rhuddlan Borough Council received under the former Clwyd Integrated Development Operations Programme in the last 10 years of its existence; and which have final grant claims currently outstanding. [49323]

Mr. Hain: The Clwyd Integrated Development Operations Programme operated only for the period 1989–91. Projects which were approved under it including those for which final grant claims are still outstanding are:

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1998, Official Report, column 292, for what reasons substantive replies were not given to earlier questions by the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent on Gwent Tertiary College, prior to the establishment of the two investigations. [49866]

Mr. Hain: I have sought to provide my hon. Friend with the answers to his questions on approval, payments and procedures over a prolonged period. I have also written to him on 19 May and 1 June about these matters and have offered to meet him to discuss it. Until now he has declined to take up my offer but I understand he is to join other hon. Members at a meeting that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have arranged for 16 July. I hope that this will provide him with the opportunity to raise any outstanding issues that still concern him.

TREASURY

Child Care Tax Credit

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance has been issued to local authorities in respect of the introduction of the child care tax credit. [48981]

Mrs. Liddell: The child care tax credit will be an integral part of the Working Families Tax Credit, which will be introduced in October 1999 and administered by the Inland Revenue. Work is continuing on the detailed design of the WFTC and its administration. We will be considering what guidance about the WFTC needs to be issued, and to whom, at the appropriate time.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 178, on the working families tax credit, if he will set out in each case the effect of the proposed reform on the number of people receiving (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit. [49272]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit will lead to 50,000 fewer families receiving Housing Benefit, and about 90,000 fewer families receiving Council Tax Benefit.

These figures are consistent with those published in the FSBR. They assume 1997–98 caseload and take-up rates.

Hypothermia

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the years 1986 to 1996 the number of deaths in North Cumbria as a result of hypothermia. [49734]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Eric Martlew, dated 14 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of deaths in North Cumbria as a result of hypothermia in each year from 1986 to 1996.

Deaths with a mention of hypothermia, North Cumbria, 1986–96

Year	Deaths
1986	7
1987	10
1988	2
1989	2
1990	3
1992	1
1993	9
1994	2

The data for 1986 to 1992 are the numbers of deaths registered in those years, whereas the deaths from 1993 to 1996 are those that occurred in each year.

Prior to 1994, North Cumbria did not exist as a district health authority and the data for years 1986–93 were obtained by adding the number of deaths registered in the two district health authorities of East Cumbria and West Cumbria.

Winter Mortality Rates

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the excess winter mortality rates in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Wales, (e) Greater London and (f) Sutton and Cheam for each of the last five years in terms of (i) numbers and (ii) percentages for (1) those aged 65 to 80 years, (2) those aged over 80 years and (3) all ages. [49552]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 14 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on excess winter mortality rates in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Wales, (e) Greater London and (f) Sutton and Cheam for each of the last five years in terms of (i) numbers and (ii) percentages for (1) those aged 65 to 80 years, (2) those aged over 80 years and (3) all ages.

The information is given in the attached table.

Data are not available by parliamentary constituency. The table therefore gives figures for the London Borough of Sutton and separately for the wards of Cheam South and Cheam West combined. However, these two wards are actually combined within the London Borough of Sutton.

Excess Winter Deaths are defined as the number of deaths in the four months from December to March minus the average of the numbers in the preceding autumn (August-November) and the following summer (April-July).

The Excess Winter Deaths Index is the number of excess winter deaths expressed as a percentage of the average of the number of deaths in the autumn and the summer periods.

Grave Memorial Stones (VAT)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was recovered by way of VAT in the last tax year in respect of grave memorial stones; and if he will make a statement. [49752]

Mrs. Liddell: We have no estimates of the amount of VAT recovered in respect of grave memorial stones.

Unleaded Petrol

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of excise duty he plans to levy on the special grade of unleaded petrol containing lead substitutes which will replace leaded petrol from 2000. [50024]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor is aware of the likely introduction of lead replacement petrol and will be considering the appropriate level of excise duty in the run up to the next Budget. The industry has indicated that lead replacement petrol could be introduced in mid-1999, in advance of the ban on leaded petrol from 2000.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 342, if he will assess the advantages of placing in the Library copies of the documents on the BNFL purchase of Westinghouse Nuclear with the commercially sensitive information removed. [49871]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The documents on the purchase of Westinghouse referred to largely comprise information which is commercially sensitive, and which would be of use to other companies operating in the highly competitive nuclear supplies and services markets. Removing such information would render the reports virtually meaningless. BNFL's own press release contains a helpful statement on the acquisition. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what threshold and by what criteria the £3.8 billion Government-guaranteed bonds for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link will count as public expenditure. [49861]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Any amounts paid by Government under their guarantee over the bonds to be issued by London and Continental Railways for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link will count as public expenditure. The Government guarantee itself is a contingent liability; the probability of its being called is remote.

VAT (Motor Fuels)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current forecast of the revenue from VAT on motor fuels (i) in the current year and (ii) in each of the two subsequent years. [49958]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 10 July 1998]: HM Customs and Excise do not produce forecasts of VAT receipts at this level of disaggregation.

Training Providers

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many training providers were consulted on the forms used for tax relief on training and how many responded to the consultation exercise; and if he will publish a regional breakdown of the consultees and respondents. [50008]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 July 1998]: An Inland Revenue Budget press release inviting comments on proposals to introduce a single new form to replace the two eligibility forms for vocational training relief (VTR) was issued on 26 November 1996. The press release invited those interested to obtain copies of the draft form and a commentary on it, and copies were placed on the Inland Revenue's Internet web site. Comments were sought by 1 March 1997. In addition, the Inland Revenue wrote to a cross-section of 25 training providers around the country seeking their views on the proposed new form.

The Inland Revenue received nearly 50 requests for a copy of the proposed form. About a dozen responses were received, only two of which were from the 25 training providers selected.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the administrative burden on training providers of the tax relief claims system. [50009]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 July 1998]: As our recent consultation paper on the Learning Age (Cm 3790) indicated, we are considering targeted public support to encourage people to open individual learning accounts, which might include tax incentives. There is potentially a read across here to Vocational Training Relief (VTR) and we will consider any changes to the administration of the current VTR system in the light of our decisions on individual learning accounts.

Earnings (Scotland)

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the average weekly earnings gross pay, (i) including and (ii) excluding overtime for full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain for (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all workers; [50177]

(2) if he will list the percentage of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain earning gross pay, both including and excluding overtime, less than (i) £249.97, (ii) £233.13 and (iii) £174.85 per week for the categories (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers; [50176]

(3) if he will list the proportion of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain with hourly earnings, gross pay, both including and excluding overtime, below (i) £6.61, (ii) £6.15, (iii) £4.61 and (iv) £3.60 for the categories (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers. [50175]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Michael Moore, dated 14 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics, I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions (50175, 50176 and 50177) on earnings.

The latest information, from the New Earnings Survey April 1997, is contained in the attached tables. These tables are voluminous and copies of them are being placed in the Library of the House rather than reproduced in Hansard.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral announcement of 11 June 1997,

Official Report, columns 1143–57, if he will publish the departmental objectives arising from the Comprehensive Spending Review. [50746]

Mr. Darling: A booklet setting out the revised aims and objectives of Government departments has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. They provide a clear statement of what the Government are seeking to achieve through our public expenditure policies.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts for 1998–99 resulting from the carry-forward of underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility schemes for capital, running costs, MoD operating costs, health, EU structural funds, nationalised industries and welfare to work expenditure. [50745]

Mr. Darling: A list of amounts totalling £362 million for capital expenditure; £574 million for control total running costs; £102 million for MOD operating costs; £225 million for health and personal social services expenditure; £486 million for EU structural funds, £54 million for Nationalised Industries and £62 million for Welfare to Work expenditure is shown in the table.

Subject to Parliamentary approval of any necessary Supplementary Estimates, individual cash, running costs or external finance limits will be increased when carryforward is taken up.

The total increase resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility within the control total will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Indirect Taxation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average annual amount of indirect taxation paid per citizen in each of the last 10 years. [50196]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 14 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking for an estimate of the average annual amount of indirect taxation paid per citizen in each of the last 10 years.

This information is shown in the table below. The figures are derived from the annual analysis of the effects of taxes and benefits on household income, which is based on the Family Expenditure Survey. The latest information available is for the fiscal year 1996–97. The actual amount of indirect tax paid by each individual will vary greatly depending on that individual's actual consumption.

Agricultural Subsidies

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid out in IACS payments in each of the last three years; what percentage of 1997 payments are currently outstanding and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement. [49327]

Mr. Macdonald: Under the IACS Schemes, £401.35m was paid out in the 1995 scheme year. £374.90m was paid out in the 1996 scheme year and £361.72m was paid out in the 1997 scheme year. A maximum of 2.71 per cent. of the 1997 scheme year payments remains to be paid subject to checking whether the claims are valid.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his plans for allocating total expenditure within his responsibility for 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02. [50861]

Mr. Dewar: The tables outline my plans for allocating the total expenditure for Scotland within my responsibility. The tables have been drawn up in accordance with the new public expenditure arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1195–1201. Thus they identify separately capital and current expenditure within the Departmental Expenditure Limit, Annually Managed Expenditure and resources which fall outwith my Department's Assigned Budget but form part of the Total Budget.

The plans, which are based firmly upon the operation of the Barnett formula provide for an additional £4bn of spending within the Departmental Spending Limit over the 3 years to 2002. In allocating these resources, I have placed particular emphasis on education, health and housing.

For education my proposals will ensure that all 3 year-olds will have the right to a free nursery place by 2002 and that by 2002 there will be 5,000 new classroom assistants in Scottish primary schools, giving a ratio of one adult for every 15 children. I will be establishing a new Excellence Fund to help deliver higher standards in schools and a promise of 42,000 more students entering Scottish colleges will guarantee that Scotland realises its economic potential as a "knowledge economy" of the future.

My second priority is to finance the creation of the most modern health service in Europe. My proposals will ensure that waiting lists will come down and stay down as the service invests for modernisation. By 2000, every hospital, clinic and GP surgery will be linked electronically to facilitate new developments such as one-stop clinics and instant personal booking for hospital appointments.

An additional £300m will be made available for housing. This will support the first steps towards a new future for Scotland's council houses built around the principles of greater community ownership and more private investment in our housing stock.

Beyond these core priorities I am making provision for the establishment of Parliament, including the construction of a world class Parliament building which will be the symbol of the new democracy in Scotland.

The plans also include investment and redeployment of resources across the range of my other programmes. With industry and training I am planning a radical shift from investment in physical infrastructure to a greater emphasis on human capital, and new investment in the commercialisation of research and the promotion of entrepreneurship. I am also planning major new investment in transport, where I will be establishing a new Scottish Public Transport Fund to encourage new public transport initiatives.

This is an excellent settlement for Scotland, demonstrating the concrete steps we are taking to encourage growth and employment, and to provide efficient and modern public services.

[1] Under the new public expenditure control arrangements and devolution, the Barnett formula used to determine Scottish expenditure applies to the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) in place of the former Scottish Block. Full details of the definitional changes between the DEL and the Control Total were given in the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998", published in June.

[2] Includes provision for the Crown Office, which will be within the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament.

[3] Total budget assigned to the Scottish Parliament. There are some differences between the coverage of the Assigned Budget and the former Scottish Block, the main one being the exclusion of non-domestic rates. Figures here include expenditure on Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance of around £37 million per year which is included in the DEL but excluded from the Assigned Budget for control purposes until 1999–2000.

[4] Includes around £1 million for the New Deal for Young People in 1997–98 and £3 million for Childcare in 1998–99.

[5] Total expenditure financed by the Windfall Tax and administered by the Scottish Office. The majority of expenditure on the New Deal is administered for all of Great Britain by DfEE and DSS. Total expenditure in Scotland on the New Deal is projected to be over £450 million in the period 1997–2002.

[6] Figures for future years uprated in line with the RPI.

[7] Total Scottish public spending within the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament or administered by the Scottish Executive.

[1] Includes non-domestic rate payments, which are outside the DEL.

[2] The requirement that local authorities must use 50 per cent. of non-housing capital receipts to redeem debt will be abolished from 1 August 1998. This will allow local authorities to raise an estimated £75 million per annum extra from asset sales.

[3] Includes market support under the CAP, which is outside the DEL.

[4] Reflects the new Resource Accounting treatment of student loans announced in the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998", hence it includes total expenditure on student grants, but only the subsidy element of student loans.

[5] Expenditure funded through the Capital Receipts Initiative is now included in the DEL. Housing figures also include Housing Support Grant, which is outside the DEL.

[6] This line covers industry, enterprise and training expenditure administered by the Scottish Office only. Further expenditure administered by other departments on the New Deal is projected to be around £75 million in 1998–99, and almost £90 million per year in each 1999–2000 to 2001–02.

[7] A large proportion of spending on law, order and protective services is included under central government support to local authorities.

[8] Includes support to nationalised industries.

[9] Includes around £1 million for the New Deal for Young People in 1997–98 and £3 million for Childcare in 1998–99. Additional support for schools' capital expenditure is included in support for non-housing local authority capital expenditure above.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the local government finance settlement for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [50725]

Mr. Dewar: My plans for the local government settlement for the next three years will allow councils to increase their spending by almost £840 million a year by 2001–02 including additional funding for pre-school education for three-year-olds.

I propose the Government supported Expenditure (GSE) should be set at £6,544 million in 1999–2000, £6,785 million in 2000–01, and £7,026 million in 2001–02.

After settling aside an amount to support loan and leasing charges, including level playing field support for Public/Private partnership projects, the totals available for allocation as Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE) are £5,778 million in 1999–2000, £5,991 million in 2000–01, and £6,194 million in 2001–02. The allocation of these totals between the main local authority service areas is shown in the table. This reflects the priority I have given to certain services, particularly education.

I further propose that Government support for local authority current expenditure—that is, Aggregate External Finance (AEF) which consists of Revenue Support Grant, Specific Grants and Non-Domestic Rate Income—should be set at £5,512 million in 1999–2000, £5,672 million in 2000–01, and £5,823 in 2001–02.

Given these increases it should not be necessary for council tax to increase on average by more than 5 per cent. per annum.

Proposals for the distribution of GAE and AEF to individual local authorities will be issued to councils later in the year.

I intend to replace crude and universal capping with a system of expenditure guidelines. I will retain the existing capping powers in reserve and will use them if council spending is excessive.

I have also decided to remove the requirement on local authorities to use 50 per cent. of certain non-housing capital receipts to redeem debt. It is estimated that this will generate an additional £75 million of spending power which can be channelled into new investment.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many motorists were (a) charged with and (b) convicted of (i) failure to accord precedence at pedestrian crossings, (ii) failure to comply with traffic signs, (iii) speeding offences, (iv) driving after consuming alcohol or taking drugs and (v) reckless driving in Scotland in (1) 1994, (2) 1995, (3) 1996 and (4) 1997. [50188]

Mr. McLeish: The available information is listed in the table.

Persons proceeded against and those with a charge proved where the main offence was for selected motor vehicle offences in Scotland 1994–1996

Dementia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from dementia in Scotland. [50220]

Mr. Galbraith: Comprehensive information is not held centrally but the Dementia Services Development Centre based at Stirling University estimates that around 61,000 people in Scotland have moderate to severe dementia.

Hospitals

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average size of a hospital in Scotland in terms of (a) number of beds and (b) employees; if he will estimate the average capital cost of building and equipping such a hospital; and if he will give the average costs of running such a hospital at 1998–99 prices. [50173]

Mr. Galbraith: The average sized hospital in Scotland has 139 beds and 400 employees. The average capital cost of building and equipping a hospital of this size would be about £25 million, and the annual running costs would be about £10 million.

Schools

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average size of (a) a primary and (b) secondary school in Scotland in terms of number of classes, pupils and employees including teachers, administrative staff and others; what is the average capital cost at 1998–99 prices of building and equipping such a school; and what are the average revenue costs at 1998–99 prices of running such a school, including salaries. [50174]

Mr. Wilson: The available information is set out in the table.

Average number of taught classes, number of pupils, number of full-time equivalent teachers, capital costs of building and equipping a new school and revenue costs per education authority school

		Primary	Secondary
Number of taught classes	September 1997	7.7	Not available

[1] Information on non-teaching staff was not collected in September 1997
[2] Information is not held centrally on the costs of building and equipping new schools
[3] The budgeted school running cost is provided to each School Board annually. It may not necessarily include all the costs of running the school. Other costs may be incurred, for example, capital spending or a proportion of total education authority expenditure on services such as those provided by advisers and psychologists

Boundary Review

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the boundary review for the 1999 unitary authority elections for each of the 32 unitary authorities in Scotland. [50563]

Mr. Macdonald: To date the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland have submitted reports on 7 council areas, namely Angus, East Dumbartonshire, East Lothian, Inverclyde, Moray, Perth and Kinross and West Dunbartonshire and we expect to receive the remainder of the reports between now and the end of September.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Lodgings

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average cost of one night's stay for a judge in a judicial lodging. [45691]

Mr. Hoon: In the financial year 1997–98, the average daily cost for a judge (and clerk) to stay in judicial lodging was £615.18. New systems to improve control and reduce costs progressively over three years were implemented last year, and it is intended that these will be reviewed after that three year period.

Decree Absolute Index

Ms Oona King: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will assess the advantages of removing the search fee relating to the Decree Absolute Index. [49472]

Mr. Hoon: As part of the review of fees associated with the Civil Justice Reforms, the Lord Chancellor is considering all civil court fees, including those paid in family proceedings. It is the policy of the Lord Chancellor that those who receive a service should pay for the cost of providing it. In the absence of a taxpayer subsidy, if a free service is provided for some litigants, other fee paying litigants would, in effect, be paying for that service.

Small Claims Court

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many claims were brought before small claims courts; how many of these were successful; and what was the total cost to the taxpayer of the small claims court service in the last year for which figures are available. [50200]

Mr. Hoon: Claims brought before the small claims court are: defended money claims where the amount claimed does not exceed £3,000 and personal injury cases where the amount claimed does not exceed £1,000. These cases are heard by arbitration. In the last financial year there were 97,813 arbitration hearings. Of those, in 87,320 cases the plaintiff was successful.

The majority of those issuing proceedings in county courts pay fees to cover the cost of providing the service. A cost to the taxpayer arises only where the party who would otherwise be required to pay a fee is legally aided or is granted fee exemption or remission. The cost of remission and exemption in non-family county court proceedings in 1997–98 was £1,088,407. Separate information is not available for the small claims court.

Lobbyists

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what occasions (a) he, (b) the Lord Chancellor, (c) their parliamentary private secretaries and (d) their special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn or (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings. [50620]

Mr. Hoon: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

16. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic initiatives his Department is pursuing to bring about an end to conflict in Sudan. [48716]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are all deeply concerned at the unfolding human tragedy in the Sudan and have been active through the EU and at the UN.

In conjunction with the Inter Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) Partners Forum, and supported by the General Affairs Council, the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) is in Nairobi for discussions with the Government of Kenya and the SPLA today and will be in Khartoum for talks with the Government of Sudan on 15/16 July, hoping to secure a break in the fighting. We will continue to be active in the search for a long-term solution.

European Union

17. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek repatriation of powers from the European Union to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [48717]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have no plans to seek changes to the EU Treaties in a way which would remove EC competence. However, in areas where competence is presently shared between the Member States and the EC, the Government believe that the Community should act only where it offers real added value, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity.

Banana Imports

20. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold discussions with Caribbean countries on the new banana regime for imports into the European Union. [48720]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We consulted Caribbean countries closely on how best to amend the EU banana regime in response to the WTO judgment, before decisions were taken in the EU last month. We will remain in close contact with them on this issue, which is of vital importance to the prosperity of many countries in the Caribbean.

Arms Sales

21. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to improve the transparency of data relevant to his ethical foreign policy on arms sales. [48721]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are preparing a report on UK strategic exports. It will include an account of the background to the UK's strategic export controls and of the moves we have made since 2 May 1997 towards a responsible UK and European arms export policy. It will list by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued in each equipment category and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted. It will also set out the value of defence exports to each country.

Iran (Terrorism)

22. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he is making on contacts with the Iranian Government over ending its alleged sponsorship of terrorism. [48722]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We and our EU partners welcome recent Iranian Government statements condemning terrorist attacks in Algeria, Egypt and on Israeli civilians. However, we remain concerned about Iran's record of support for terrorism. We will continue to raise our concerns bilaterally and through the new EU/Iran dialogue.

China

23. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the UK's relations with China following the visit by the Deputy Prime Minister. [48723]

36. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with China. [48737]

Mr. Robin Cook: UK/China relations are in good shape. We are building a strategic relationship for the long term across the full range of our shared interests. The visit of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister was an important step in this process. He made progress on a number of environmental and commercial issues.

Windward Islands

24. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the Windward Islands. [48724]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have very good relations with the Windward Islands. We maintain permanent representation in three of them. Our support for their banana industries is well known. Political agreement of a revised EU banana regime, which is compatible with WTO rules but also recognises Caribbean concerns, was an important UK achievement during our Presidency.

South Korea

25. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with South Korea. [48725]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have an important political and economic partnership with the Republic of Korea. We commend Korea's response to the financial crisis so far and its commitment to economic reform. We shall continue to support Korea through this difficult period. We also welcome the positive steps President Kim has taken towards encouraging dialogue with North Korea and fully support efforts to bring about a lasting peace on the Korean peninsula.

Angola

26. Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent developments concerning the peace process in Angola. [48726]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The peace process in Angola has reached a critical stage. UNITA failed to comply with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1176 which called for the extension of state administration throughout Angola, including Andulo and Bailundo where it has its headquarters, by 30 June. New sanctions against UNITA came into effect on 1 July. The mandate of the United Nations Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) has been extended until 15 August.

I was shocked to learn of the death of Maitre Beye, the United Nations Secretary-General's Special Representative to Angola, who died in an air crash near Abidjan on 26 June. I hope this tragedy may help generate renewed commitments from the Angolan Government and UNITA to genuine reconciliation through completion of the Lusaka Protocol. I urge UNITA to fulfil its remaining obligations under the Protocol without delay and call on the Angolan Government to continue to exercise patience and restraint.

East Timor

27. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia concerning the situation in East Timor. [48727]

28. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards East Timor. [48728]

33. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Indonesian Government regarding East Timor; and if he will make a statement. [48734]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friends to my earlier reply in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), Official Report, column 169.

Kosovo

29. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new political initiatives he plans to end violence in Kosovo. [48729]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton), Official Report, column 184.

Cyprus

30. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had concerning Cyprus. [48730]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I and my colleagues have regular discussions in different forums concerning Cyprus. In particular we continue to give our full support to UN efforts to achieve the resumption of negotiations on a comprehensive political settlement in Cyprus.

Germany

31. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with Germany. [48731]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Relations with Germany are good, and we look forward to President Herzog's State Visit in December.

Democratic Republic of Congo

32. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Nations representative's report on human rights in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [48733]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations Secretary-General's Investigative Team's report was published on 30 June. We regret that the investigation was not able to be completed. The team was therefore unable to establish the accuracy of many allegations of violations of international humanitarian law or international human rights law. It is nonetheless clear from such work as the team were able to conduct that serious violations did take place, and were carried out by a variety of groups. We are carefully considering the report's recommendations and the possibilities for further investigation.

We continue to call upon all countries in the region to acknowledge their international legal obligation to respect human rights. We have urged regional Governments to take appropriate legal action if members of their forces are shown to have been involved in any violations.

EU Enlargement

34. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation he will be having with other EU countries on EU enlargement as part of Agenda 2000. [48735]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson), Official Report , column 178.

Overseas Posts (Properties)

35. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the overseas posts where expenditure on refurbishment or replacement properties will individually exceed £500,000 between 1 May 1997 and 30 April 1999. [48736]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The details requested are shown in the table:

Note:

Gibraltar

38. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next visit Gibraltar to discuss relations between Spain, Gibraltar and the United Kingdom. [48739]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I have no present plans to visit Gibraltar.

Thailand (Adoption)

39. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of adoptions of children by European Union citizens in Thailand. [48740]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Thailand is not a country recognised under the Adoption (Designation of Overseas Adoptions) Order 1973. In common with all other such countries, adoption orders made there are not recognised under UK law. Thai children must therefore be adopted again through the UK Courts. Applications made on this basis are considered as a matter of discretion outside the Immigration Rules.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues regarding the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review; and if he will make a statement. [48738]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary remained in close touch with ministerial colleagues throughout the Government's Strategic Defence Review, as it was foreign policy led. I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state for Defence to the House on 8 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1073–96.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 144, on Sierra Leone, on how many occasions in April and May officials in his Department initiated discussions with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in connection with the progress of the investigation into Sandline International; and if he will list the date of each such occasion. [44957]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 9 June 1998]: In the course of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's close co-operation with HM Customs and Excise throughout this period, the FCO made contact with HMC&E on a number of occasions, most of them by telephone. It would not be normal for us to keep a record of all such contacts between Departments.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish Sir Thomas Legg's report immediately he receives it. [46029]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 15 June 1998]: I will publish Sir Thomas Legg's report as soon as it is completed.

Israel (Trade)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps will be taken by the Commission to implement the recommendations of its report on Implementation of the Interim Trade Agreement between the European Community and Israel. [50238]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The 29 June General Affairs Council encouraged the European Commission to pursue talks with Israel on the basis of its Communication of 13 May 1998. It noted the Commission's intention to report back on these talks and stressed the need for them to lead to concrete results.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to warn importers of the penalties they are likely to incur if they import goods marked "Made in Israel" that originate in the West Bank including East Jerusalem, Gaza or the Golan Heights. [50237]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HMC&E issued a notice to importers in January 1998 (VAT Notice No. 4 Item 12) warning that the European Commission had expressed doubts about the validity of all preference certificates issued in Israel (OJ C338, 8 November 1997). The Commission has subsequently published a Communication to the Council on the implementation of the EC/Israel Interim Agreement, which covered inter alia the issues mentioned by the hon. Member. The Commission hopes that its contacts with the Israelis will lead to progress which will allow the Commission to withdraw their earlier notice to importers.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the General Affairs Council of the European Community took at its meeting on 29 June in respect of the Commission report, Implementation of the Interim Agreement on Trade and Trade-related matters between the European Community and Israel. [50239]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The General Affairs Council on 29 June adopted conclusions on the issues raised in the two Commission Communications to the Council on EC/Israel trade and regional cumulation of origin. The text of these conclusions appear in the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Ms Stuart) on 2 July 1998, Official Report, columns 274–76.

Correspondence

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department will respond to the letter of 9 June 1998 from the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald in respect of Mr. D. A. Ladva; and if he will make a statement about ministerial response times to representations from hon. Members. [50142]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our Deputy High Commission in Bombay for a detailed account of the case. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to my hon. Friend after this has been received.

We aim to reply to Members' representations on entry clearance matters within 15 working days. In the month of June, we replied to 67 per cent. of representations from hon. Members about entry clearance cases within this target time.

Indonesia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage the new regime in Indonesia to release political prisoners. [50218]

Mr. Fatchett: I called on the new Indonesian government to release political prisoners, including those from East Timor, during my visit to Jakarta in May. This message has been repeated in other bilateral contacts and EU statements.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations office on human rights concerning Algeria; and if he will make a statement. [50358]

Mr. Fatchett: We have maintained regular contact with the United Nations on the situation of human rights in Algeria, particularly during the annual Commission on Human Rights. The UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights is aware of our concerns about the human rights situation there and our hope that the Algerian Government will engage and co-operate fully with UN mechanisms.

We welcomed the UN Secretary-General's announcement that Algeria has invited a top-level mission, under UN auspices, to visit Algeria in the near future.

Land Mines

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will assess the benefits of a pre-legislative hearing by the Defence Committee on the legislation required to meet commitments under the Anti-Personnel Land Mines Ottawa Convention. [48308]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

As the hon. Member will be aware, the Bill to ratify the Ottawa Convention was passed by the House on 10 July. There was therefore no time for a pre-legislative hearing. However, we sent a memorandum to the Committee which answered a number of questions that they submitted to the MOD. Publication is a matter for the Committee.

HEALTH

Ashworth Hospital

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Ashworth Hospital informed him that Ian Brady had handed over a large number of pills to Una Forsyth. [49413]

Mr. Boateng: I was informed on 20 April 1998 that an allegation had been made by a woman that Ian Brady had asked her to smuggle tablets out of the hospital, and that these had been handed to a Mr. Peter Green, a former executive director of the Ashworth Hospital Authority. I was told that a search of Ian Brady's room had uncovered one tablet of the type handed over by the woman to Mr. Green, and that the police had been informed.

I was informed on 14 May 1998 that the woman, who was at that point identified to me as Mrs. Forsyth, had indicated that she no longer wanted to complain to the police about the alleged actions of Mr. Brady. I also learned that the police had decided not to proceed with criminal proceedings, and furthermore that Mr. Brady had been put under close observation.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make public the findings of the review by Dame Fiona Caldicott into the management of Ashworth Hospital. [49347]

Mr. Boateng: Dame Fiona Caldicott was commissioned by the Chairman of Ashworth Hospital Authority to advise the authority on an internal management issue. No commitment was made to publish her findings; it is for the hospital authority to decide to what extent the advice which she has given to them should be made public.

Nuts

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the risk to health arising from pregnant women eating nuts; and what the estimated incidence is of health problems from this cause. [49630]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) report on peanut allergy was published by the Department on 17 July 1998. The report notes that the prevalence of peanut allergy, which is potentially life-threatening, appears to be increasing and that sensitisation of an infant to peanuts might result from the consumption of peanuts by pregnant or breast-feeding mothers. This risk is greatest in those with a family history of allergic disease. For those people COT recommends that avoidance of peanuts is a sensible, precautionary measure. COT also recommended further research to address the scientific uncertainties. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Reliable data are not available to estimate the incidence of health problems resulting from pregnant women eating nuts.

Ambulance Trusts

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the ambulance trusts in England in descending order of their performance against nationally set response times in 1997–98. [49732]

Mr. Milburn: The tables contained in the statistical bulletin "Ambulance Services, England: 1997–98" published on 26 June 1998 show how all ambulance trusts in England have performed against nationally set response times. Copies are available in the Library.

Dementia

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on trends in the number of those suffering from dementia sectioned under Mental Health legislation in the last 10 years. [50231]

Ms Jowell: Information available centrally on patients admitted to hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 identifies the category of disorder, as specified in the Act. These categories are mental illness, psychopathic disorder, mental impairment and severe mental impairment. No further breakdown is available.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current estimate of the number of people suffering from dementia in England. [50204]

Ms Jowell: It is currently estimated that there are 620,000 people suffering from dementia in England.

Deaths (Smokers)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died from smoking-related illnesses in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [50110]

Ms Jowell: The latest figures available in "The UK Smoking Epidemic: Deaths in 1995", by the Health Education Authority estimate that at least 121,000 people died prematurely as a result of their smoking in the United Kingdom in 1995.

Waiting Times

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the longest waiting time for any patient currently waiting for an orthopaedic operation at Arrowe Park Hospital on the Wirral. [50241]

Mr. Milburn: We are advised that, at present, the longest time that any patient has to wait for an orthopaedic operation at Wirral Hospital (comprising Arrowe Park and Clatterbridge hospitals) is twelve months from the date of being placed on the waiting list. This assumes that the patient is medically fit to undergo an operation.

Asthma

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the national average, expressed as a percentage, of children with asthma-related illnesses; what is the equivalent figure in Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement. [50205]

Ms Jowell: There are no comprehensive data on the number of children with asthma or related conditions. On the basis of all the information available, it has been estimated that "the prevalence of asthma sufficiently severe to require regular medical supervision is from 4–6 per cent. in children".

This estimate is quoted in "Asthma: An Epidemiological Overview" (Central Health Monitoring Unit, 1995), which brought together a broad range of the best statistics on asthma. Copies are available in the Library.

According to the report of the Health Survey for England 1996, which was published in January 1998, 21 per cent. of children at some time in the past had been diagnosed as suffering from asthma. Copies of this report are also available in the Library. Similarly, in a study of asthma in Great Britain among children aged 12 to 14 years, carried out as part of the International Study of Asthma and Allergies in Childhood, and also published in January in the "British Medical Journal", 20 per cent. of the children surveyed had had a diagnosis of asthma at some time.

The equivalent figures for Derbyshire are not available centrally.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning section 64 funding; and if he will make a statement. [50221]

Ms Jowell: The Department receives contact from hundreds of voluntary organisations each year about the section 64 general scheme of grants in a variety of respects. For the 1998–99 grants round, over 700 grant applications were made. In addition to this, we regularly receive feedback from over 400 voluntary organisations throughout the year about progress of their work for which grants have been awarded. We also receive a wide range of general inquiries about the scheme.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the needs of those who have received radiotherapy mis-dosage; and if he will make a statement. [50360]

Ms Jowell: Representations have been made by Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure (RAGE), and the Coalition for Unity in Radiotherapy Advice and Guidance (COU-RAGE). These are mutual support groups which have met Ministers and the Chief Medical Officer on several occasions to discuss concerns of their members who have suffered adverse effects following radiotherapy treatment for breast cancer and gynaecological cancers respectively.

The following action has been taken to help women with damage as a result of radiotherapy for breast cancer:

- in May 1994 the Department issued guidance entitled "Quality Assurance in Radiotherapy—A Quality Management System for Radiotherapy";
- the Royal College of Radiologists, at the Department's request, convened a small group of professionals and lay people in autumn 1994 to consider guidelines for care of women who have suffered tissue damage following radiotherapy for breast cancer. This report was issued to the National Health Service by the Department in October 1995;
- the Royal College of Radiologists carried out a confidential clinical review of 126 women who had suffered injury following radiotherapy treatment for breast cancer at 15 centres in the period 1980–1993. The report published in 1995 makes recommendations on the management of breast cancer, particularly on radiotherapy, and for further research.

With regard to those suffering adverse effects following pelvic radiotherapy for gynaecological cancers, a working group, which included representatives from a number of Royal Colleges, voluntary organisations and the Department, was set up in 1996 to consider the preparation of patient information material concerning possible adverse effects following pelvic radiotherapy and to raise awareness generally. The first booklet was published this year. A sub-group is devising guidelines for health professionals on the care of women suffering adverse effects as a result of pelvic radiotherapy and it is anticipated that further patient information material will follow on from that.

New Hospitals (Costs)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the long-term cost of private finance of new hospitals relative to the equivalent costs through the public sector. [50378]

Mr. Milburn: The full business case (FBC) for each scheme compares the long-term costs of providing the facility using the private finance with the equivalent cost of using public funding. In order to be approved, the FBC must demonstrate that private finance initiative offers better or comparable value for money to the publicly funded alternative. Standard investment techniques are used in the FBC to determine the long-term costs of both options.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Century House

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost of the maintenance of Century House since June 1996; and what plans there are for the building. [50187]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated July 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Office of Public Service has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question concerning Century House.

The building became the responsibility of Property Advisers to the Civil Estate from 1 April 1996 and the freehold was sold on 9 December 1997.

The cost of maintenance from 1 June 1996 until the date of sale was £224,186 including fees and VAT.

As the sale was on an unconditional basis, we are unaware of the purchasers' present plans for the building but believe that residential use is proposed.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48664]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Information is not readily available in the form requested, but one of the six service standards for central government (often known as the Whitehall standards) requires all departments and agencies to set a target for answering letters from the public and to publish information on their performance against it. A report on the performance of the main department and agencies against the six standards is being prepared and will be placed in the Library of the House shortly. This will be the first time such information has been made available. It shows our commitment to open government and to reporting transparently on our performance.

Lobbyists

Sir George Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what occasions (a) he, (b) the Parliamentary Secretary and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings. [50556]

Dr. David Clark: Ministers, their special advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of special advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention, it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

CABINET OFFICE

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what target he sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49829]

Mr. Mandelson: [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1.

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) if he will list those invitations he has received to meetings organised since May 1997 by (a) GPC Market Access and (b) other lobbying firms which he has declined to attend; and in each case what was the purpose of the meeting; [50564]

(2) if he will list the occasions when he has addressed meetings set up by (a) GPC Market Access and (b) other lobbying organisations; what was the purpose of these meetings; and if the meetings were conducted under Chatham House rules. [50464]

Mr. Mandelson: I regularly receive invitations from individuals and organisations to address meetings in my Ministerial capacity. I have not addressed any meetings organised by GPC Market Access or any similar political lobbying organisations since May 1997.

Press (Vetting)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) how much time he has spent vetting articles by others prior to their publication in the press since 2 May; [50395]

(2) how many articles by journalists or other contributors to the Press he has vetted since 2 May prior to their publication. [50394]

Mr. Mandelson: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dredged Material (Licence Fees)

Mr. Syms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reasons underlay the further rise in the cost of licence fees for sea disposal of dredged material in England and Wales. [49867]

Mr. Morley: Licence fees for the sea disposal of dredged material are set to recover the costs of operating the licensing system. These costs include the monitoring of selected disposal sites. As the dumping of sewage sludge will cease at the end of 1998, the full cost of such monitoring must now be met from licence charges for the disposal of dredged material.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment the Government have made of the potential effect on the UK ports industry of the rise in the cost of licence fees for sea disposal of dredged material. [49868]

Mr. Morley: The Government have made no detailed assessment of the impact on the ports industry of the rise in the cost of disposal licence fees. Generally, licence fees represent a very small proportion of the cost of the associated dredging operation.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the contribution that closed areas could make in the future development of fisheries management. [50541]

Mr. Morley: Closures in certain areas can benefit fish stocks if they are sufficiently large and well targeted, if they can be effectively enforced and if they are not undermined by an increase in fishing effort in other areas. The possibility of introducing new closed areas is under current consideration by fishing interests and fisheries scientists in this country and internationally.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the latest National Federation of Fisheries Organisations and Scottish Fisheries Federation policy proposals for the reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. [50571]

Mr. Morley: I have warmly welcomed the joint strategy of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and Scottish Fishermen's Federation as a good basis for discussion.

Drift Nets

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance his Department gave to fishermen for investment in the tuna drift net fishery in the early 1990s. [50408]

Mr. Morley: There were no specific aids for investment in the tuna drift net fishery in the early 1990s. Some vessels may have benefited from safety grants or other structural aids which were available at that time. But it is not now possible to identify the fishing activities they were then engaged in from readily available records.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to compensate fishermen who have invested in the tuna drift net fishery in the event of the European Union wide ban. [50407]

Mr. Morley: The June 1998 Fisheries Council agreed to decide before the end of 1998 on supporting measures that may be introduced for Community fishermen affected by the phasing out of high seas drift nets. Once this is done, the Government will decide on any special measures that should be introduced in the UK.

Artificial Insemination of Cattle

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the production of the draft artificial insemination of cattle regulations. [50469]

Mr. Rooker: The Ministry received 20 replies to the formal consultation letter on the Regulations which was issued on 6 November 1997. A copy of the consultation letter and replies are available for reference in the main MAFF Library at Whitehall Place. Other letters and telephone calls on the subject have also been received.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many staff have been redeployed from drafting the artificial insemination of cattle regulations to work related to the BSE-related beef export ban; and when he expects them to resume their former role; [50471]

(2) when he expects to publish the draft artificial insemination of cattle regulations. [50472]

Mr. Rooker: One officer who had a leading role in the drafting of the proposed new Artificial Insemination of Cattle Regulations has been redeployed to BSE-related work. The aim is to have a full complement of staff working on the AI Regulations in the Autumn although this is dependent on the Government priorities at that time. When work does resume, further consideration will be given to the areas which we know remain of concern to the industry. The date on which the Regulations will be made depends on when the work resumes and how quickly remaining problems can be resolved.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when officials from his Department last met representatives of the Artificial Insemination of Cattle Operators; and what decisions were reached. [50468]

Mr. Rooker: Formal discussions with a cross-section of representatives of the artificial insemination (AI) in cattle industry took place on 20 March 1998 to discuss responses to the consultation on the new draft AI Regulations and to clarify certain aspects of the new regulations. It was agreed at the meeting that officials would give further consideration to the use and disinfection of dry shippers, the use and control of field flasks, the rules applicable to the supervision and control of inseminators and donor bull identification numbers; and that industry would be informed when the proposals were being submitted to Ministers.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to enforce the existing regulations concerning the artificial insemination of cattle. [50470]

Mr. Rooker: The Artificial Insemination of Cattle (Animal Health) (England and Wales) Regulations 1985 continue to be enforced by Ministry staff as they have been since they came into force.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 416, if he will place in the Library copies of the responses he received to his consultation on vitamin B6, other than those requesting confidentiality. [50456]

Mr. Rooker: The responses to the consultation exercise on vitamin B6 are currently being analysed and summarised. Copies of those from respondees who have not requested confidentiality will be placed in the Library in due course.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the publicity material issued by the British Cattle Movement Service. [50747]

Mr. Rooker: I have placed in the Library a leaflet introducing the computerised Cattle Tracing System together with a further leaflet advertising the British Cattle Movement Service helpline, and a letter sent to farmers following problems with the distribution of the helpline leaflet. I will add further material which is issued by the British Cattle Movement Service before the Cattle Tracing System is launched on 28 September, as this material becomes available.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Environmental Policies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the current energy consumption of her Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans there are for including energy efficiency performance figures in her Department's annual report. [50089]

Clare Short: The latest year for which figures are available is 1996–97. The total cost of delivered energy was £212,925. In kwh equivalent terms, this amounted to 5.648 million kwh of North Sea oil, 2.963 million kwh purchased from the relevant electricity utility, and 8,020 litres of gas oil. The Department is following the targets set centrally of aiming to reduce energy consumption in 2000 by 20 per cent. from the 1990–91 outturn. Our energy performance is included in the central returns on energy efficiency on the Government estate maintained by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her Department's waste is recycled; and what targets there are for increasing this figure. [50090]

Clare Short: The only form of waste on which we keep figures is paper sent for recycling. In 1997–98, we recycled 31 tonnes. This figure has been broadly the same for the past three years. We have no explicit targets. However, the Department monitors paper usage and encourages its recycling.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effects that the introduction of three-year public spending limits will have on the establishment of a funding regime for work-based youth training which enables TECs to enter into longer term contracts with training providers. [49951]

Dr. Howells: We have not yet had the opportunity to assess the effects of the three-year public spending limits on the way Government contracts with TECs. However, we will be considering this issue fully as part of the review of the role of TECs and their funding arrangements which is currently under way.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of national TEC expenditure has been allocated to (a) youth training and (b) training for the long-term unemployed. [47040]

Dr. Howells: In 1998–99, the DfEE's planned expenditure on programmes contracted with TECs in England is £1.287 billion of which 56 per cent. (£723m) is for work based training for young people and 25 per cent. (£324m) is for work based training for adults.

Youth Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to establish a clearer statutory base for local authority youth services in order to safeguard levels of these services. [50575]

Dr. Howells: The Green Paper The Learning Age reaffirmed the Government's commitment to placing the youth service on a stronger statutory footing. A consultation paper will be issued later this year which will consider the role of the youth service, in relation to wider services for young people.

New Deal

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of those called to initial interviews under the New Deal have not attended; and what the percentage was in each travel-to-work area. [47091]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 24 June 1998]: During May 1998 the number of 18–24 year olds who have ceased to claim JSA before attending their initial interview is 6 per cent. nationally. This will include young people who have found work or decided to claim another benefit.

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what analysis he has undertaken of the 18–24 year olds on the New Deal programme who are not accounted for when they finish the Gateway. [49429]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Jobseekers Act 1995 lays no obligation on people to report what they are doing once they have signed off state benefits. I asked the Employment Service to undertake follow up of the young people who have left the New Deal Gateway for unknown destinations. The outcomes of this follow-up have been published in the Department's press notices of 27 May and 25 June. I have also asked for the very thorough evaluation survey of participants that will take place later to obtain detailed evidence about what happens to this group. So far, of New Deal entrants, only 4 per cent. have left and cannot be accounted for. In the first nine months of Project Work pilots, a quarter of entrants had left for unknown destinations.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money has been spent promoting, launching and monitoring and marketing the New Deal initiative in the Christchurch constituency. [48817]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to break down this expenditure information by constituency. The provisional amount spent nationally on New Deal for 18–24 year olds for 1997–98 is £36 million. The majority of this amount represents expenditure incurred centrally in supporting the early implementation of the New Deal. A final figure will be available by the end of August. The New Deal is financed from the receipts of the Windfall Tax on the privatised utilities. Expenditure is planned over the Parliament as a whole and unspent resources in any single year are available for spending on New Deal in future years.

The estimated cost for 1998–99 is £594 million, and for 1999–2000, £675 million. New Deal is demand led and actual provision for any particular year will be decided in the light of the level of unemployment and experience gained in running New Deal.

The above figures are for Great Britain and reflect the cost of New Deal for young people to the Department for Education and Employment.

Science Students

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to improve the availability of science, engineering and technology higher and further education to women in rural areas. [47513]

Dr. Howells: Our proposals for encouraging lifelong learning for people throughout the UK, including rural communities, are set out in the consultation paper "The Learning Age". Higher education is available in England from over 100 higher education institutions, including the Open University, and from many further education colleges. The Further Education Funding Council has a duty to secure the provision of adequate and sufficient facilities for further education.

The University for Industry will break down barriers to learning by making provision more flexible and accessible. It will offer rural learners the opportunity to access information and advice, register on courses, access support from tutors and work at their own pace, using the most suitable methods at home, in the workplace or at local learning places.

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget statement, on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–1112, an extra £50 million funding for rural transport services—mainly additional bus services—which will enable more young people in rural communities to access post-16 provision.

Playgroups

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding (a) the provision of and (b) the funding of playgroups. [47858]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 1 July 1998]: The Government value the contribution pre-schools and playgroups can make to early education, day care and the continuing training and development of adults. Many playgroups receive Government funding in respect of eligible four year olds attending their groups. The Government already give an annual grant of £1.2 million to the Pre-school Learning Alliance. In addition, we announced on 6 May that £500,000 would be made available to help good-quality voluntary groups in danger of closing. Pre-school groups will also be able to benefit from the £6 million allocated for extra childcare places integrated with early education.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the maximum number of eligible parents per child who can be permitted to vote in a ballot on the status of grammar schools. [50484]

Mr. Byers: The proposals follow the procedures adopted by the previous government for ballots on the question of grant-maintained status. This means that there is not a maximum number of eligible parents.

Job Clubs

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many job clubs were operating in (a) June 1997 and (b) June 1998. [50483]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Damian Green, dated 14 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question to him about the number of Jobclubs operation in (a) June 1997 and (b) June 1998. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

There were 911 Jobclubs operating nationally in June 1997, but I am unable as yet to supply the comparable figure for June 1998. However, June figures should be available later this month for the total number of Jobclubs and other programmes we are providing in all locations and I will write to you again as soon as this information becomes available.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful at this stage.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of (a) the cost of Trident warheads, (b) their life and (c) the costs of disposal. [50392]

Mr. George Robertson: The production costs for Trident warheads in the last financial year were £20 million. Taking into account decisions made in the Strategic Defence Review, our current estimate for the total production costs is some £300 million.

We expect the Trident warhead to be kept in service for the full planned 25 to 30 year life of the Trident force. Limited life warhead components will be replaced and the warheads refurbished as required during this period.

Warhead disposal costs will depend upon future plans for the use or disposal of fissile material from the warheads.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of Trident warheads currently held; how many have been destroyed; and how many have been ordered. [50379]

Mr. George Robertson: As stated in the Strategic Defence Review White Paper published on 8 July, (Cmd 3999), the United Kingdom will maintain an operationally available stockpile of fewer than 200 Trident warheads. Changes are being implemented to our warhead production plans to maintain the operationally available stockpile at this reduced level. Some warheads will also be required to provide a necessary processing margin and for technical surveillance purposes. I am withholding details of the exact number of Trident warheads currently held and information on Trident warhead production and decommissioning plans under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Defence, Security and International Relations.

Strategic Arms Exports

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the annual report on strategic exports to be published. [50610]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) on 12 May 1998, Official Report, column 110.

Infantry Units

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) establishment and (b) actual strengths of each (i) regular and (ii) TA infantry unit. [47209]

Dr. Reid: The establishment and actual strength of each regular and TA infantry unit is detailed below. For completeness, the total establishment and strength of the Infantry Arm is also given.

Regular Infantry

The established liability of the Army, the Manpower Planning Target, is revised in April and October each year. The total requirement includes those posts filled by infantry personnel away from their units in specific infantry appointments or general appointments which may be filled by personnel from any cap badge. The total liability and strength of regular infantry personnel as at 1 May 1998 was:

Infantry

	Liability (establishment)	Strength
Soldiers	25,049	22,458
Officers	2,739	2,726
Gurkhas	2,101	2,555

The infantry deficit at soldier level is being addressed actively through the 'Manning the Army' strategy which aims to bring the Army to full strength by 2002.

The table shows the liability (establishment) and strength of soldiers by infantry unit. Owing to the nature of the cap badge system, only at soldier level can both the establishment and liability be shown in full. A similar breakdown for Infantry officers is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort. Infantry officers, like all Army officers, fill a proportion of posts that are able to be filled from any cap badge, the only qualifying criteria being suitability and relevant experience.

The figures exclude those infantry personnel currently serving in posts away from their parent units.

Services Nationality Rules

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the services nationality rules requiring parents, step-parents or guardians of applicants for employment to have been Commonwealth citizens or Irish citizens resident in the United Kingdom. [49350]

Dr. Reid: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor) on 18 February 1998, Official Report, [illegible] 665–66.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Chemical Defence Establishment field trial reports series of documents (a) started and (b) finished; how many documents were produced in this series; and how many of these documents are currently unclassified. [49490]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 14 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the Chemical Defence Establishment field trial reports series of documents.

The Chemical Defence Establishment which is now part of DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector at Porton Down published a series of field trial reports between 1969 and 1995. The series contained 114 documents of which 6 are currently unclassified.

The titles of the unclassified documents are as follows:

23 Trials of the non destructive test of air filtration units in HMS Berwick at Portsmouth, October 1971

27 CR decontamination trial

87 Noise propagation from commercial explosives

89 A report of multiple smoke plume trials designed to establish some atmospheric statistics

97 Field testing of the Canadian profire kit on CDE range

127 Trial Madona—a field experiment to measure high resolution wind fields and concentration fluctuations over complex terrain

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in investigating the alleged chemical agent detections during the Gulf war on 19 to 21 January 1991 in the eastern province of Saudi Arabia; who is carrying out this investigation; when this investigation began; and when he expects this investigation to be completed. [49491]

Dr. Reid: As part of the New Beginning statement on 14 July 1997, Official Report, columns 1–5, I announced that my Department would be carrying out three reviews of specific events during the Gulf conflict. Work on the second of these reviews, which concerns the alleged chemical agent detections in the Eastern Province of Saudi Arabia between 19–21 January 1991, began in March this year, after the results of the first review into the tank of liquid found at a school in Kuwait had been published. The work is being conducted by the Gulf Veterans' Illnesses Unit in my Department, which is seeking to identify and analyse all available documentation relevant to this matter and to interview those personnel directly involved. The results will be made public as soon as the review is complete, which is expected towards the end of this year.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of the titles of the unclassified papers produced in the Chemical Defence Establishment technical paper series since January 1996. [49493]

Mr. Spellar: The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down has produced 18 unclassified papers in the Technical Paper series since January 1996. A list of these papers has been placed in the Library.

Departmental Contacts

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the meetings held by (a) himself, (b) his ministers and (c) special advisers in his Department with people outside the Government on (i) 30 June and (ii) 2 July; [49548]

(2) on what occasions (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his special advisers have met representatives of (i) GPC Market Access, (ii) Lawson Lucas Mendelsohn and (iii) GJW Government Relations since 1 May 1997; who these representatives were; and what was discussed at the meetings [50473]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed, one of the specific functions of the Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention it is not the practice of governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special Advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans his Department is making in the event of the failure of computer systems to recognise the year 2000; when he expects them to be in place, and tested; and if he will make a statement. [48846]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence recognises the risk posed to operational capability by the Year 2000 problem. While every effort is being made to ensure that all systems are Year 2000 compliant, some work will not be completed in time. The MOD is, therefore, developing contingency plans to ensure that we continue to meet our operational commitments and that essential Defence capabilities are maintained. The target date for completion of these plans is 31 December 1998, with testing continuing throughout 1999, and regularly thereafter to ensure that the plans remain valid for any similar problems which might arise in the future.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Turkish military personnel have been involved in military training in the United Kingdom during the last 12 months; and if he will list the type of military training that was given. [49285]

Dr. Reid: Training has been provided in the UK to members of the Turkish armed forces, as is normal practice between NATO nations. Between 1 July 1997 and 1 July 1998, 41 Turkish military personnel have been involved in military training in the United Kingdom. Training has included attendance at the Royal College of Defence Studies, the Advanced Command and Staff Course, the International Sub-Lieutenants' Course, the International Principal Warfare Officers' Course, the Maritime Warfare Course, the International Imagery Interpretation Course, and courses on the Principles of Computer Based Training, Instructional Techniques, Training Design, Quality Control, and English Language Training.

Service Personnel (Parental Leave)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will grant unmarried partners in the armed forces the same rights to parental leave as married couples. [50400]

Dr. Reid: The Armed Forces offers maternity leave to which any pregnant servicewoman is entitled, whether married or unmarried, in accordance with the law. As a good employer the Services seek, whenever possible, to grant a serviceman annual leave (or compassionate leave if appropriate) to attend his partner, either during or, immediately after childbirth. Operational commitments may, on occasions, make it impossible for every serviceman to be released from his duties.

Foreign Policy Base Line

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 1080, in which paragraphs of the Strategic Defence Review the Foreign Policy Baseline is set out. [50443]

Mr. George Robertson: The foreign and security policy analysis on which the Strategic Defence Review is based is set out in Chapter Two of the White Paper, "Security Priorities in a Changing World" (paragraphs 17–43), and in the second of the Supporting Essays, "The Policy Framework".

NATO

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the impact on the United Kingdom defence budget of the proposed expansion of NATO. [50393]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO has estimated that the cost to its military common budgets of the accession of the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland will be some $1.5 billion over ten years. The United Kingdom's share of this cost will, at current exchange rates, be some £110 million over the 10 years. On present expectations, the costs to the United Kingdom's defence budget will be met from within existing and planned provision.

Large Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the cost of the two proposed large aircraft carriers separately identifying their (a) running costs and (b) disposal costs. [50391]

Mr. George Robertson: At this early stage in the project, we envisage an acquisition cost for two aircraft carriers of around £2 billion, including combat system and initial support costs but excluding the cost of aircraft. The running costs of future carriers will depend on: the ship design and the number and type of aircraft they will carry, both of which remain to be determined, but which will focus on the need to minimise through-life costs. No consideration has yet been given to the disposal of future carriers given that these vessels are likely to be in-service till around the mid-century.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many copies of the Strategic Defence

Review were sent outside the main building of his Department in sealed envelopes before Wednesday 8 July; and when they were sent; [50459]

(2) which (a) Government departments, (b) individual Ministers, (c) special advisers and (d) non-Governmental organisations received copies of the Strategic Defence Review before 12.30 pm on Wednesday 8 July. [50460]

Mr. George Robertson: It is not our practice to comment in detail on matters of this kind while a formal investigation is in progress.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what terms (a) his Department's head of public relations and (b) any of her staff discussed the contents of the Strategic Defence Review before 12.30 pm on Wednesday 8 July, with (a) members of the press and (b) other persons outside his Department. [50457]

Mr. George Robertson: In her dealings with the Press my Director of Information Strategy and News, and her staff, have responded to all inquiries about the Strategic Defence Review (which have all been from the Press) under the normal terms. Until the Press Conference held on Wednesday 8 July on an embargo, lock-in basis, they provided factual information about the background, processes, and the development of the thinking of the defence review. Such information was also set out by me in two major speeches, the BBC documentary on the processes underlying the Strategic Defence Review, and in answers to the House prior to publication of the White Paper on 8 July.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the name and position of the individual or individuals carrying out the inquiry into the leaking of the Strategic Defence Review; when he expects the inquiry to be concluded; and how he intends to report the conclusions of the inquiry to the House. [50461]

Mr. George Robertson: The individual who will conduct the inquiry, by custom, is a member of a panel of investigators which the Cabinet Office draw upon to conduct investigations. Its members are in the main distinguished and senior retired public servants. A member of the panel, who will not be named, has been selected by the Cabinet Office to investigate the leaking of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR). The inquiry will be conducted with all possible speed. Once the conclusions of the inquiry have been presented to me, I will decide how to report them to the House.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of his special advisers, and on what terms, discussed the contents of the Strategic Defence Review before 12.30 pm on Wednesday 8 July, with (a) members of the press, (b) political lobbyists and (c) special advisers to the Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer or the Foreign Secretary. [50458]

Mr. George Robertson: In the normal course of government business, both special advisers would have discussed the contents of the Strategic Defence Review with special advisers to the Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Foreign Secretary. Over the course of the Review, both special advisers would have briefed members of the Press and on occasions, political lobbyists on the background processes and emerging themes of the Review but not on its detailed conclusions in line with the requirements of propriety.

Territorial Army

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he plans to have finalised his work on the future organisation of the TA and the TA and cadet centres in time for them to be presented to the House before the defence debate. [50554]

Dr. Reid: It is our intention that the detailed planning for the future organisation of the Territorial Army should be complete by the autumn. The results of this work will be announced to the House as soon as possible.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 15 July 1998

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Lorry Drivers (Accident Insurance)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to make it a legal requirement for employers of lorry drivers working overseas to be fully insured for accident and loss of life including the costs of returning bodies to the United Kingdom. [49952]

Dr. Strang: The Employer's Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 already requires employers to insure their liability to employees for bodily injury or disease sustained during their employment. If an employee is normally based in Great Britain, their employer is required to have employer's liability insurance for them. Where the employer's liability is proved, a relevant policy will pay compensation for loss of life, and refund the expense of returning a body to the United Kingdom.

Sewage (Falmouth)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the results obtained by the Environment Agency in respect of the interim Falmouth sewage scheme. [50084]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency is carrying out a detailed assessment of the data collected during two recent surveys, which were carried out over the periods 2–5 June (Neap tides) and 23–26 June (Spring tides).

Preliminary findings show that the Falmouth Interim Sewage Treatment Scheme—which is a short-term measure pending implementation of the full scheme by 2000—has brought clear improvements to local bathing waters at Maen Porth, Swanpool and Gyllyngvase, which have been identified under the EC Bathing Water Directive. Also, there has been no deterioration in general water quality or in shellfish waters in the area. I understand that the Agency will publish the full results of their recent surveys as soon as possible.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue further guidance to local authorities on the methodology they should use to predict waste disposal needs. [50399]

Angela Eagle: We have no immediate plans to do so, although my Department plans to issue a new Planning Policy Guidance Note on "Waste disposal and management" in the Autumn. Local authorities should discuss future disposal needs with waste collection authorities, with interested parties in their area, with neighbouring authorities, and with the Environment Agency (particularly in the context of their work on life cycle analysis).

I would also add that local authorities should not be restricting their thinking to waste disposal, but should widen their consideration to the need for recycling, composting and energy recovery facilities—thoughts on this are set out in our recently published consultation paper on the national waste strategy "Less Waste: More Value".

Brown-field Sites

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the impact of the Government's proposals for regeneration by the use of brown-field sites on (a) housing demand and (b) employment opportunities in urban areas. [50329]

Angela Eagle: The Government have not received any specific representations on this issue recently. Nevertheless, in developing our policy for urban areas, we are fully aware that a balance needs to be struck between the need to promote the re-use of previously developed sites for housing, the need to ensure a continuing supply of employment sites, and the need to promote a high quality environment in our towns and cities. We will be issuing a draft revised Planning Policy Guidance note on housing (PPG3) for consultation later this summer, which will address these issues.

Railway Standards

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take measures to ensure that (a) standards of reliability, cleanliness and safety on the railways are improved and (b) period ticket holders are given an uncomplicated system allowing them to claim fair, immediate and adequate compensation when poor service is provided. [50330]

Dr. Strang: The Government are reviewing the regulation of the railway as part of our overall review of transport policy, and our proposals for its long term reform will be published in our forthcoming White Paper.

Under the existing arrangements for the railway, train operators must comply with the terms of their franchise agreement with the Franchising Director. The franchise agreement set standards for train reliability and include provision for the monitoring and enforcement of these standards; and require operators to clean stations regularly. There are no industry-wide standards for train cleanliness; however, some operators monitor train cleanliness as an element of the regular surveys of customer satisfaction that they are obliged to undertake. The Government look to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, as safety regulators for the railways, to use their advisory and enforcement powers as appropriate to see that rail safety standards are maintained and improved where necessary.

Period ticket holders are compensated for poor performance under the terms of the relevant operator's Passenger's Charter which is required by the Franchising Director to include a compensation scheme at least as favourable to passengers as that which was operated by British Rail. The Franchising Director continues to seek improvements to Charters whenever suitable opportunities arise.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment the Government have made of the (a) advantages and (b) costs of a national system of concessionary travel fares for (i) older and (ii) disabled people; [50076]

(2) if he will take steps to eliminate the differences between areas in the savings available to older and disabled people from concessionary travel passes. [50077]

Dr. Strang: These matters are being considered as part of our review of integrated transport policy. The advantages and costs of any standard scheme would depend on the level at which its benefits are set.

Local Government

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the former county boroughs in England prior to 1973–74 which are not unitary authorities; and what plans he has to extend the system of unitary authorities. [50442]

Mr. Raynsford: The following local authorities were county boroughs prior to 1973 and are not unitary authorities:

Barrow-in-Furness
Burnley
Canterbury Carlisle
Chester
East Staffordshire (Burton-on-Trent)
Eastbourne
Exeter
Gloucester
Great Yarmouth
Hastings
Ipswich
Lincoln
Northampton Norwich
Oxford
Preston
Worcester.

There are no current plans to extend the system of unitary authorities.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to local authorities of fully implementing the dog fouling regulations. [50570]

Angela Eagle: It is for local authorities to decide whether to implement the regulations in the light of local priorities and resources. No estimate has been made of the cost to those local authorities who have done so. But administrative savings are expected compared to the byelaw system which required local authorities to seek the Secretary of State's confirmation to introduce "poop scoop" areas.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities relating to the implementation of the dog fouling regulations. [50569]

Angela Eagle: Representations on a number of issues have been received from local authorities relating to the implementation of the Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996. Apart from procedural questions about implementation, the representations also address issues such as the ability of local authorities to retain the £25 fixed penalty fine, the provision of bins and the disposal of dog waste, and the designation of populated rural areas where speed limits are 40mph and above.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the draft of the Greater London Authority Bill. [50674]

Mr. Raynsford: Following the overwhelming endorsement of our proposals in the referendum on 7 May, we have made it clear that we intend to introduce legislation to establish the Greater London Authority as soon as the legislative timetable permits. We do not intend to publish a draft Bill before the legislation is introduced.

Garden Land

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the appeal decisions for 1996–97 and 1997–98 where one of the grounds for refusal was the protection of garden land. [50363]

Mr. Raynsford: I have asked the Chief Planning Inspector, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Hanchet to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 15 July 1998:

The Secretary of state has asked me to reply to your Question about appeal decisions where one of the grounds for refusal was the protection of garden land.

I enclose details of 4 appeals which were dismissed in 1996–97 and 15 which were dismissed in 1997–98. I believe this is an exhaustive list but I cannot be certain, especially as we do not have a separate refusal issue relating to protection of garden land. The details include the issues considered to be relevant to the Inspectors decision.

I am arranging for copies of the Inspector's decision letters to be sent to you. From these you will be able to see whether the Inspector agreed or disagreed with any reasons for refusal by the local authority.

Details of the appeals have been made available in the Library.

Air and Water Quality

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve the quantity and quality of public information on (a) air quality and (b) water quality. [49009]

Angela Eagle: My Department and the Environment Agency strive continuously to improve the quantity and quality of information on air and water quality made available to the public.

My Department's standard of dissemination of air pollution information is amongst the best in the world. Hourly information on a range of air pollutants, together with a forecast, is made available to the public via CEEFAX, TELETEXT, the Internet, by Freephone and the media. The National Air Quality Archive, containing all data collected in the Department's national networks, is freely available on the Internet, together with statistical summaries and a wide range of supplementary information. My Department also regularly publishes research reports on ambient concentrations and emissions of air pollutants in the UK. In addition, my Department publishes a number of leaflets for the public on air quality issues. It is my intention to continue to make as much information on air pollution available to the public as possible.

The Drinking Water Inspectorate publishes an Annual Report on drinking water quality in England and Wales; a non-technical leaflet about its role which contains key statistics on drinking water quality; and simple leaflets reporting drinking water quality for each water company. It has also produced leaflets on lead in drinking water; chlorine, smell and taste; and problems with drinking water. All leaflets are available free of charge from the Inspectorate or through the Internet. Their content and style have been reviewed and improved following market research. More detailed information on the results of all compliance tests for drinking water quality is available for inspection on public records held by water companies.

The Environment Agency recently published a report, The State of the Environment of England and Wales: Fresh Waters, and will be producing a similar report on the coastal environment. Data on water quality are made publicly available through the Agency's public registers. Information on water quality and water resources is available in the State of the Environment section on the Agency's Internet site, which is being extended. The network of 7,000 monitoring sites to monitor water quality is the most comprehensive in Europe. The Agency is currently reviewing its monitoring activities to ensure that they respond to changing needs.

Air quality and water quality data are also published in the annual Digest of Environmental Statistics and summary booklet The Environment in your Pocket, which is distributed widely to schools and others. Measures of air and water quality are likely to be included in the set of indicators that will accompany the revised sustainable development strategy.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the effect on carbon dioxide emissions of the Government's moratorium on the building of gas-fired power stations. [50212]

Angela Eagle: The preliminary conclusions of the Government's Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation reaffirm the Government's determination to meet their climate change targets and state that the proposals are consistent with a decline in carbon emissions from the electricity generating industry.

National Stadium

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes have been made to the design specification of the National Stadium at Wembley in response to the proposals for athletics facilities to be built within the Millennium Dome. [49654]

Mr. Banks: I have been asked to reply.

There are a number of proposals for the long term use for the Dome which have been put forward, including the creation of a sports arena for participation and spectator sports. However, the requirements for an athletics capability at the National Stadium have not changed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Environmental Policies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled; and what targets he has set for increasing this figure. [50103]

Mr. Fatchett: At present we estimate we are recycling about 15 per cent. of our waste paper. A further 25 per cent. is incinerated by Westminster City Council and used for power generation. At our Hanslope Park site we recycle 60 per cent. of our cardboard for packaging material.

We plan, by the year 2000, to increase the percentage of waste that is recycled to 33 per cent. in the London estate and 19 per cent. at Hanslope Park.

By 2005 we are looking to reduce our solid waste to landfill by 40 per cent. This is in line with the White Paper: A Strategy for Sustainable Waste Management.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has introduced to discourage car use by his Department's employees. [50088]

Mr. Fatchett: We operate the following measures to discourage car use:

(i) An assisted travel scheme coach service for employees at our out of town site at Hanslope Park, near Milton Keynes.

(ii) We have increased the number of cycle spaces at our Whitehall Main Building by 31 per cent.

(iii) As part of our Green Transport Plan, we expect to decrease the number of car parking spaces at our Whitehall Main Building. This is in line with the DETR initiative to reduce staff parking at Government Buildings in London.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current energy consumption of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans he has to include energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [50093]

Mr. Fatchett: Our current energy consumption is:

1997–98 figures

	kWh
Whitehall district heating system	6,084,631
Electricity	17,881,626
Gas	6,717,265
Fuel oil	4,524,791

We are striving to reduce our energy consumption in line with the DETR recommendations of a 20 per cent. improvement over 1990 levels by 31 March 2000.

We plan to include our energy efficiency performance figures in our Department's Annual Report once our accommodation strategy has been realised in 2001. Part of the aim of the strategy is to reduce our energy consumption significantly by rationalising our estate.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to raise awareness of environmental issues within his Department; and what training will be made available. [50102]

Mr. Fatchett: We operate a Monitoring and Targeting (M & T) system which reports on energy and water use throughout the estate and highlights areas of waste.

Information from the M & T system was used as the basis for a "Powerdown" poster campaign.

We encourage our Energy and Environment Officers to undertake relevant training.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what environmental activities his Green Minister has undertaken since being appointed. [50101]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK has much to contribute to international action on the environment. This is a top priority for the entire Ministerial team in the FCO, working closely with their DETR counterparts. Protection of the environment was, for example, a key theme of the UK's Presidency of the European Union.

I am the FCO's Green Minister. I have responsibility among FCO Ministers to ensure that we make the most of all opportunities to promote the UK's international environmental objectives, including in multilateral and bilateral meetings, and in the activities of UK diplomatic missions overseas. For example, the environment was a key theme of the ASEM 2 Summit in April. As Green Minister, I am also responsible for ensuring that the administration of the FCO itself takes full account of environmental considerations. I have recently committed the FCO to greater use of environmentally friendly means of transport. The FCO is now exploring the use of Liquified Petroleum Gas (LPG) vehicles.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that the United Nations and the EU instruct commercial banks to reveal the existence of accounts holding assets from the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [50350]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Bank accounts of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia remain frozen pending the resolution of succession negotiations which are continuing under the auspices of the High Representative's special negotiator. UK banks and other financial institutions holding assets which are subject to the resolution of third party claims are not required under current legislation to reveal their existence. We have no plans to ask the United Nations or the EU to intervene in this matter.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total number of legal aid applications over the past three years for (a) criminal and (b) civil cases; and how many were refused. [50362]

Mr. Hoon: Information on criminal legal aid is broken down into proceedings in the Crown Court and the magistrate's court. The number of applications made, granted and refused in the magistrate's court for representation in that court is not available. The number of applications made for representation in the Crown Court were as follows:

Year	Applications made	Applications granted	Applications refused
1995	126,897	126,658	239
1996	116,721	116,443	278
1997	124,711	124,491	220

The figures include both applications made in the magistrate's court for representation in the Crown Court and applications made direct to the Crown Court.

Civil legal aid is administered by the Legal Aid Board. The table sets out the number of legal aid applications received, granted and refused in the last three calender years.

Year	Applications made	Applications granted	Applications refused
1995	516,654	462,657	53,997
1996	484,074	426,023	58,051
1997	444,538	382,501	62,037

DEFENCE

Defence Vetting Agency

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Vetting Agency for 1998–99. [51187]

Mr. Spellar: The Defence Vetting Agency was launched on 1 April 1997 with a staff of about 350 MOD Civil Servants, located in Central London, Portsmouth, Woolwich and Corsham, Wiltshire. Its formation brought together four existing Ministry of Defence Vetting

Authorities. The Agency undertakes some 130,000 vetting checks and investigations each year. In addition, it is engaged on an ambitious programme of work to become an integrated, modern, efficient organisation, based on a single site. The Agency's first year has been characterised by planning and setting in train a series of key studies. These include:

a. A collocation investment appraisal;

b. A business process reengineering and reorganisation study;

c. An information systems strategy study; and

d. A Private Finance Initiative feasibility study.

This second year will see the beginning of the implementation of these various initiatives.

The Chief Executive has been set the following Key Targets:

Quality

Key Target 1—To maintain quality standards through at least 95 per cent. compliance with agreed procedures, and to develop quality improvement targets in the light of a Defence wide customer survey.

Timeliness

Key Target 2—To complete 85 per cent. of Security Checks within 6 weeks.

Key Target 3—To complete 71 per cent. of Counter Terrorist Checks within 6 weeks.

Key Target 4—To complete 85 per cent. of all Developed Vetting clearances within 6 months.

Key Target 5—To reduce the 1997–98 average times for Security Checks, Counter Terrorist Checks and Developed Vetting clearances by 5 per cent.

Efficiency

Key Target 6—To reduce the FY97–98 Unit Cost of Output.

I have arranged for advance copies of the Corporate Plan to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British soldiers are part of the British Army of the Rhine; and what was the total cost of their military presence in the last financial year for which figures are available. [50254]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 14 July 1998]: The British Army of the Rhine is no longer in existence. The British Army in Germany consists of the 1st (UK) Armoured Division, a Combat Service Support Group and a Support Command, with some other minor units.

As at 31 May 1998, there were some 23,800 posts directly administered or associated with the Army garrisoned in Germany. This excludes the various NATO headquarters and other posts distinct from the garrisons, but includes those troops who are based in Germany and deployed elsewhere, for example the Former Yugoslavia. The cost of these forces during 1997–98 was some £1,139 million.

The Strategic Defence Review has examined ways to achieve a better balance between forces based in Britain and Germany. We have concluded that we should remove some 2,500 troops as part of the wider restructuring of the Army. This will take some years to complete.

Russia (Joint Exercises)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Army conducted joint exercises with the Russian army during the last five years. [48575]

Mr. George Robertson: The British Army has not conducted any joint exercises with the Russian Army during the last five years.

Millennium Compliance

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken by his Department to ensure that defence systems will not be compromised by the millennium bug. [49487]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence began work to address the millennium date change problem in 1995, with a study to assess the scope of the problem within the Department. The work to fix or replace systems which are not compliant commenced early in 1996. This programme of work encompasses the full range of MOD equipment, including office equipment, and information and weapon systems. Issues that affect interoperability with our allies are being carefully considered. The MOD has actively promoted awareness of this issue internationally through briefings in NATO, and bilateral discussions with the US Department of Defense and with other international partners.

The MOD reports progress on its Year 2000 programme to the Cabinet Office. The MOD reports form part of the quarterly statement made to Parliament by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, whose last report was made on the 8 June 1998. Copies of the MOD reports are placed in the Library of the House and I would refer the hon. Member to them. These reports are also available on the Cabinet Office Year 2000 Web site.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts and agreements in universities are currently being funded by the Atomic Weapons Establishment; what is the total value of these research projects; how many of these research projects are classified; and if he will list the universities at which these research projects are being funded. [49990]

Mr. Spellar: The Atomic Weapons Establishment currently has twenty six research contracts and agreements with universities. The total value of these contracts, none of which is classified, is £2.2 million. I will write to my hon. Friend as to the actual universities involved and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Meetings

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he had with Labour hon. Members in the course of his official duties on 1 July. [50451]

Mr. George Robertson: During the course of my official duties on Wednesday 1 July, I attended meetings of the Labour Party 'Britain in the World' Policy Commission, and the Parliamentary Labour Party Defence Committee. During both of these meetings, hon. Members were present.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Casino Deregulation

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on casino deregulation. [51016]

Mr. George Howarth: I am pleased to announce our conclusions on casino deregulation.

Casino membership and advertising

We intend to bring forward proposals to allow postal applications for membership of casinos;

group membership; and limited factual advertising.

These will be the first gambling deregulation proposals to be brought forward under this Government. The previous administration consulted on similar proposals in November 1996[1]. They announced on 13 March 1997 that the proposals had broad support and were suitable for a deregulation order, but the General Election intervened before that work could be taken forward.

We will need to consult afresh because some changes are appropriate in the light of the earlier consultation. In particular, it was previously proposed to allow advertising only in non-national publications. We think this would be unduly restrictive and difficult to enforce. We propose to allow factual advertising in national publications.

The procedures for deregulation orders require consultation on specific proposals before an order can be laid. The consultation paper will give full details of the proposals. They have been agreed in principle by the Gaming Board and the British Casino Association.

We have also discussed the advertising proposals with the Advertising Association and the Advertising Standards Authority.

The consultation paper will be published in the next few weeks. Subject to the outcome, we expect to lay deregulation proposals in the autumn for scrutiny by the Deregulation Committees.

We acknowledge the comments made by the previous Deregulation Committees to the effect that the gambling law is complex and that some previous deregulation orders have increased that complexity. They called for a general overhaul and consolidation of the gambling legislation. I have discussed these concerns with the Chairmen of the current Committees. It was recognised that general gambling reform would be a large undertaking, involving three main Acts of Parliament—the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963, the Gaming Act 1968 and the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. There is a case for such an exercise, but we are not able to take it forward in the short term, and we propose meanwhile to continue to use the deregulation process to make appropriate, selective changes.

We have also considered the other casino proposals consulted on in November 1996—for slot machines and permitted areas. We have no fundamental objections to some change in these areas, but we will need to consider further the resource issues.

Slot machines

The November 1996 paper recommended the introduction of casino slot machines with unlimited prizes. We have concluded that;

In principle, there should be no objection to casinos, which are premises expressly licensed for hard gambling, having the same type of slot machines as are common in casinos in other countries;

But there should be a staged approach with a smaller number of machines initially, to allow the impact to be assessed. A maximum of 20 machines per casino would be the most suitable figure;

However, at a time of pressure on public expenditure, it is not clear how the necessary additional funding could be found for the Gaming Board to supervise a new slot machines regime;

Discussions on machines are continuing within Government and with the Gaming Board and the casino industry.

Jackpot machines

In the meantime, following a recommendation by the Gaming Board, we have agreed in principle to make regulations with effect from 1 October 1998 to increase the maximum prize for jackpot machines in casinos from £250 to £1,000 and the maximum stake from 30p to 50p. These proposals arise from the triennial review of machine stake and prize limits, full details of which I am announcing separately today.

At present, casinos are allowed up to six jackpot machines. The number was increased from two to six machines in June 1996 by deregulation order. I consider that a further modest increase would be appropriate, and will include in the consultation paper a proposal that casinos may have up to ten such machines.

Permitted areas

The previous Government also proposed allowing casinos in additional areas, to be implemented by secondary legislation. It was made clear at the time that no timetable for implementation could be set because of the resource implications for the Gaming Board and the courts.

We have carefully considered the case for additional areas. We have concluded that Great Britain is already well served with casinos and that there is not a compelling case for a large extension to that provision. The pressure for additional casinos has come mainly from the industry or individual local authorities rather than the general public. There are already 53 permitted areas. The previous proposals would have added 21. We do not consider it appropriate to designate so many additional areas, particularly those which do not have a significant resident population. Further work would need to be done on the criteria; and additional funding would need to be found for the Gaming Board and the courts. In the light of other, more pressing priorities, we have decided not to take forward any changes for the time being.

We may wish to make proposals for a small number of additional areas in the future. There would need to be a good case on population grounds, and any proposal would also need local authority and public support.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of the triennial review of gaming machine stake and prize limits. [51017]

Mr. George Howarth: The Gaming Board have reviewed machine stake and prize limits and made recommendations to the Home Office.

We have accepted their recommendations. I intend to make the necessary statutory instruments to come into force on 1 October.

The following maximum stake and prize limits will apply:

- the all-cash amusement-with-prizes (AWP) machine prize will be increased from £10 to £15;
- the prizes for the cash/token AWP machines will be left unchanged at £5 for the cash and £8 for the non monetary prizes;
- the prizes for jackpot machines will be increased from £250 to £500 in bingo clubs and £1,000 in casinos; and left unchanged at £250 in members clubs; and
- the 30p stake for AWP machines will be left unchanged and that for jackpot machines will be increased to 50p.

The Gaming Board's main underlying thinking, which we endorse, is to: keep machines to which children are allowed access at low prize levels; work with the industry to prevent children gaining access to all-cash machines, with the prospect of a more liberal future regime if that can be achieved; and recognise that higher prizes are appropriate in gambling clubs.

I have placed in the Library the Gaming Board's report of their review, which explains in detail the consultation with interested organisations and their conclusions.

Pheasants (Plastic Blinkers)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in respect of the use of plastic blinkers on pheasants; and if he will make a statement. [50213]

Mr. George Howarth: Pheasants are protected by the Protection of Animals Act 1911, which makes it an offence to cause any unnecessary suffering to any captive or domestic animal. Any person may initiate proceedings under this Act where there is reason to believe that unnecessary suffering has been caused, or may report the matter to the police who will decide whether or not to institute a prosecution.

Pheasants kept on agricultural land for the production of food are further protected by the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, which makes it an offence to cause unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress to any livestock. The Welfare of Livestock (Prohibited Operations) Regulations 1982 made under this Act prohibit the fitting of any appliance which has the object or effect of limiting vision to a bird by a method involving the penetration or other mutilation of the nasal septum, except in an emergency or by a veterinary surgeon when disease or injury is present and proper treatment requires the operation.

Asylum Detainees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were being held in detention in England and Wales, pending the hearing of their asylum appeal on 6 July. [49527]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that, as at 30 June 1998, there were 166 men and 15 women detained solely under Immigration Act powers in the United Kingdom who had sought asylum at some stage and who were awaiting the hearing or determination of an appeal.

These figures are approximate because of the delay in recording receptions into, and releases from, detention and the large numbers of persons detained for only a short period.

Asylum Officials

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of his Department's officials and at what grades are currently processing asylum applications; and what were the equivalent figures in May 1997. [49876]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table:

These figures reflect the re-deployment of staff in preparation for the computerisation and integration of the caseworking functions.

Asylum Applications

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been (a) determined and (b) left outstanding in each of the last 18 months. [49956]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Bogus Charity Collectors

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions there have been in the London and south east regions, by constabulary, for offences in connection with bogus street collections in each of the last three years for which figures are available; [50322]

(2) if he will advise television and radio broadcasters to take adequate precautions against bogus charity collectors taking part in telethons and radio appeal days; [50324]

(3) if he will take steps to warn retailers about bogus charity collectors who apply for permission to collect on retail premises and in shopping malls. [50323]

Mr. Michael: Information collected centrally on the Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not distinguish offences committed under the Police, Factories Etc. (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1916 and the House to House Collections Act 1939 from other summary offences.

The Charity Commission meets regularly with licensing authorities and seeks to co-operate with any requests for information about charities or fund-raising organisations. The Commission encourages owners of retail premises to check with them if they have any doubts about an organisation seeking permission to carry out a charitable collection. Basic details of all registered charities can also be checked on the Commission's website at htpp://www.charity-commission.gov.uk.

There are many charities connected with NHS Trusts. Checks with a number of Trusts have revealed that, generally, hospitals allow only these charities to collect on their property.

Probation Service (Derbyshire)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made to accommodate the local Probation Service and to provide its services in South Derbyshire, and at what cost, following the proposed closure of Swadlincote Magistrates Court. [49747]

Ms Quin: The Derbyshire probation service have decided to await the outcome of the appeal against the closure of the magistrates' court before making a decision about replacement accommodation in Swadlincote. Following the outcome of this and the Prisons-Probation Review, Derbyshire probation service will be reviewing their provision and accommodation needs before deciding whether to acquire or lease new accommodation in Swadlincote. The cost of such accommodation would depend on local property market conditions at the time.

Child Pornography

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been in England and Wales in each of the last three years for offences involving the use of children in the production of pornography. [50104]

Mr. Michael: Available information from the Home Office Court Proceedings database is given in the table.

Bookmaking

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what share of the turnover of the off-course bookmaking industry was constituted by bets not made at starting prices in the last year for which figures are available. [50148]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office does not have figures on ante-post or early price fixed odds betting. However, betting on horserace pools accounted for less than 2 per cent. of off-course turnover in 1997.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by local magistrates when determining applications for the opening of a licensed bookmaking office. [50155]

Mr. George Howarth: Under Schedule 1 to the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963, an applicant to run a licensed betting office must first apply for a betting permit, obtainable if the magistrates are satisfied they are a fit and proper person, and the premises must comply with statutory access requirements.

The magistrates may refuse a licence if they are not satisfied that the premises are suitable or if they consider there are already sufficient betting offices in the locality to satisfy demand for betting facilities.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48660]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Drugs

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he plans to take to tackle drug issues in rural environments. [50335]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government's drug strategy set out in the White Paper "Tackling Drugs to Build a Better Britain" gives Drug Action Teams the responsibility for drawing up action plans in the light of local circumstances and for identifying and allocating resources to match priority aims and actions for their areas. Guidance for Drug Action Teams on drawing up their action plans will be issued later this year.

Fire Service

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received and from which bodies over the apparent reduction in mains water pressures by some water companies; what assessment he has made of the extent of the problems; and what assessment he has made of the potential effect upon the Fire Service's fire fighting capability; [50082]

(2) what arrangements are in place for ensuring that fire authorities are satisfactorily discharged from obligations under Section 13 of the Fire Services Act 1947. [50081]

Mr. George Howarth: Representations have been made by the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association and the Local Government Association. The problems appear to be limited. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has established a National Liaison Group with representatives of the water industry, the Fire Service and the Home Office to improve communications at national and local levels. The Group is producing a code of practice which will provide guidance to water companies and the Fire Service on issues relating to water for firefighting. The code should help fire authorities discharge their statutory duty under section 13 and ensure the supply of water for firefighting.

Police (Boundaries)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, as part of the review of the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police area, he will review the overlapping jurisdictions of the Metropolitan Police, City of London Police and the British Transport Police; and if he will make a statement. [50574]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend has concluded his consideration of the case for changing the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District. He announced in a written answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean), 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 191, that a provision would be made in the Greater London Authority Bill to make those boundaries coterminous with those of the 32 London boroughs.

There are no plans to change the boundaries between the Metropolitan Police District and the City of London Police.

The British Transport Police has responsibility for railway policing throughout Great Britain, and its jurisdiction cuts across all force boundaries. It did not fall to be considered in the context of the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District.

Pedestrian Accidents

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) children and (b) adults were (i) killed, (ii) seriously injured and (iii) slightly injured on or near pedestrian crossings in (1) the Metropolitan Police area of London and (2) England and Wales in (A) 1994, (B) 1995, (C) 1996 and (D) 1997. [50223]

Dr. Strang [holding answer 14 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

WALES

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the potential benefits of complementary medicine in Wales. [49560]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government recognise that some people with conditions that do not respond to orthodox treatment can be helped by forms of complementary and alternative medicine, and has sponsored research into the use of complementary medicine in general practice. GPs and hospital doctors may arrange for their patients to receive any of the complementary medicine treatments if they feel it is clinically necessary, and is the most appropriate method of treating the particular health need. The doctor should also take into account the patient's wishes, evidence of the safety and effectiveness of the treatment, and its cost and availability locally.

Community Pharmacists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations he has had with community pharmacists in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [49564]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Although I have held no recent consultations with community pharmacists, departmental officials have regular meetings with them. I am prepared to meet pharmacists myself if there are particular matters of concern which they wish to raise with me.

Out-of-town Shopping Centres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of out-of-town shopping centres in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [49566]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not held centrally. Government planning policy on retailing in Wales is set out in 'Planning Guidance (Wales) Planning Policy' published in May 1996. This includes a commitment to sustain and enhance town centres, and to subject proposals for new retail development to a rigorous test designed to favour town centre sites.

"Pathway to Prosperity"

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the nineteenth century institutions alluded to by him in paragraph 8.18 of the document "Pathway to Prosperity", a new economic agenda for Wales, published recently by his Department. [50216]

Mr. Hain: I will write to my right hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49088]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The National Lottery White Paper, 'The People's Lottery' was subject to a wide ranging consultation process, which included women's organisations.

Arts Spending

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the total amount of public spending on the arts for each of the last five years in (a) London, (b) the North West and (c) Warrington. [50036]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Arts funding from my Department is channelled through the Arts Council of England. The Arts Council of England has provided the following figures:

Year	London	North West	Warrington
1993–94	10,563,560	5,093,490	21,525
1994–95	13,677,600	7,750,453	19,940
1995–96	14,270,209	8,099,977	19,500
1996–97	14,275,176	8,028,610	18,374
1997–98	14,480,886	8,441,000	25,841

From March 1995 to May 1998, 1,157 projects in London totalling £186.141m received National Lottery arts funding. In the North West Region, 647 projects totalling £51.862m received arts Lottery funding in the same period. 14 awards totalling £2,602,135 were made in the Warrington area.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much humanitarian aid the Government have given to (a) the Sudan Government, (b) charities working in the Sudan and (c) directly to the people of Sudan over the last six months. [50552]

Clare Short: Since February, we have committed over £25 million to Sudan, all of which is for the direct benefit of vulnerable people in Sudan. Of this, we have contributed £1.83 million to Non-Governmental Organisations and £1 million towards the International Committee of the Red Cross. We have contributed £16 million to World Food Programme, £0.8 million to UNICEF, £0.4 million to Operation Lifeline Sudan logistics and £0.2 million to the UN Humanitarian Co-ordination Unit in Khartoum. There is £5 million still to be allocated as new needs emerge, whether in the north or the south of the country. No British aid is channelled through Government of Sudan structures.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to raise awareness of environmental issues within her Department; and what training will be made available. [50091]

Clare Short: In addition to the White Paper, which mainstreamed environmental aspects of the sustainable development agenda, Department for International Development (DFID) has produced a range of policy and information documents covering environmental and natural resource issues which inter alia serve to raise staff awareness of environmental issues. A DFID Environmental Policy Statement is currently being drafted which will expand on policies outlined in the White Paper. We have also developed a number of documents related to specific areas of the environment in developing countries, including forests, sustainable agriculture, biodiversity, desertification and (jointly with DETR) energy efficiency and climate change. These papers are regularly revised and updated.

DFID produces its own Manual of Environmental Appraisal which provides guidance to staff so that they can appraise and manage the environmental impacts of DFID's programmes and projects. The Manual also has a role in raising general awareness of environmental issues within DFID, and it is currently undergoing revision to expand coverage of policy issues and improve user-friendliness. DFID is currently reviewing training needs in environmental issues and appraisal, in line with the revision of the Manual of Environmental Appraisal.

DFID written guidance and policy documentation is supported by the work of a team of 44 Environmental and Natural Resources Advisers, based both in the UK and overseas, who offer advice to project officers and policy administrators.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures she has put forward to discourage car use by her Department's employees. [50100]

Clare Short: We are considering possible measures in the context of the Green Transport Plan for DFID.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what environmental activities her green minister has undertaken since being appointed. [50092]

Clare Short: Since his appointment as the Department for International Development's Green Minister, my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary has undertaken a wide range of activities related to this part of his portfolio. At the "Green Ministers' Awayday" in December 1997 he gave a presentation on the Department's Manual of Environmental Appraisal, and he held a bilateral meeting with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment in February this year.

The Under-Secretary has engaged in many other activities related to environmental and broader sustainable development issues. For example, he gave a speech at the first Conference of the Parties to the Convention to Combat Desertification in Rome in December 1997. In October last year, he addressed the pre-CHOGM forum on implementing the UN Habitat Agenda in urban environments, and addressed the World Wide Fund for Nature on the role of government, aid and private investment in sustainable development. This year, he has given a keynote speech to the Indian Energy Conference at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, and addressed both the All-Party Parliamentary Water Group and the Amazonia 2000 conference. In addition to these named activities, the Under-Secretary has met a range of environmental Non-Governmental Organisations.

Further details of Green Ministerial activity and official support are available from DFID's Environmental Policy Department.

PRIME MINISTER

Far East (Recession)

Q12. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the implications for the British economy of recession in the Far East. [49059]

The Prime Minister: Developments in Asia pose considerable risks to the world economy. The March 1998 FSBR took account of these developments in Asia in its forecasts for the UK economy, incorporating a reduction in UK GDP growth of up to half a percentage point. The FSBR also emphasised the increased risks to sustained global expansion. The Treasury and the Bank of England continue to monitor the situation closely.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many applications for information from (a) his Office and (b) the Office of Public Service have been made since 1 May 1997 under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information; what areas of work the applications covered; and how many applications have been turned down. [47880]

Dr. David Clark: I have been asked to reply.

Details of all requests made under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information during the 1997 calendar year are set out in the 1997 Report on its operations which I published on 11 June. A copy is in the House Library.

The Code applies to, and informs the handling of, all requests for information to Government departments but for the purpose of monitoring, a Code request is defined as:

- a request which specifically mentions the Code; or
- a request for which a charge or standard fee is paid; or
- a request for which information is refused under one or more Code exemptions.

On this basis, the Office of Public Service received eight applications for information under the Code during the 1997 calendar year, of which two were turned down. No central record is kept of the areas of work concerned. The scope of the Code is based on the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 and although the Prime Minister's Office is not legally bound by this Act the Government have made it clear that they will treat requests for information to No. 10 as if they were covered by the Code.

SOCIAL SECURITY

UN Families Day

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what initiatives the Government took to promote the UN International Day of Families on 15 May. [47223]

Mr. Field: The Ministerial Group on the Family has been considering various measures to support families. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will make an announcement later in July.

Child Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the timescale for the introduction of child maintenance premium. [49992]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The child maintenance premium will be introduced as part of a wider package of reforms set out in the Green Paper "Children First—a new approach to child support" (Cm 3992). Where assessments are made under the new scheme, families on Income Support will be allowed to keep up to £10 a week of any maintenance which is paid for their children. Because of the scale of the legislative and operational change, these arrangements are unlikely to be introduced before 2001. The Green Paper invites views on the options for transferring existing cases to the new scheme.

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has for reassessing arrears on payments when the proposed new formula for maintenance payments takes effect. [49744]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Non-resident parents have a responsibility to support their children, including paying for their upkeep.

We are not proposing any reassessment of arrears due under the current formula on the introduction of a new child support scheme, as proposed in the Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm 3992). Non-resident parents will be expected to pay the amounts calculated under the present arrangements and appropriate collection and enforcement action will be taken if there are outstanding arrears.

Child Support Agency

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the increase in the number of absent fathers who will pay their maintenance assessment as a result of the proposed simplification of the operation of the Child Support Agency. [49648]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A simpler child support system will mean less time spent assessing maintenance and more time collecting and enforcing payment.

We estimate that the proposals in the Green Paper "Children First: a new Approach to child support" (Cm 3992) will result in an increase in cash compliance from the current level of around 66 per cent. to 80 per cent. or more.

Under the current arrangements only around 200,000 non-resident parents are paying maintenance where the parent with care is on Income Support. We expect this figure to more than double under a simpler scheme.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the number of absent parents whose maintenance assessment will increase as a result of the proposals to reform the Child Support Agency. [49649]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We estimate that around 27 per cent. of non-resident parents in work and with a maintenance assessment under the current formula (about 100,000 based on the current caseload of the Child Support Agency) would have a higher maintenance assessment under the proposals for a simpler formula set out in the Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm 3992). Changes in liability for current cases will be phased in.

The Green Paper also proposes that most of the current provisions for exemption from the minimum payment should be abolished. We estimate, in current terms, that this would result in a further 60,000 non-resident parents receiving benefit becoming liable for the minimum payment.

Children will be better-off, financially and emotionally, if non-resident parents meet their responsibilities. Our proposals for a child maintenance premium for parents with care receiving Income Support will mean that children in these families will see a direct financial gain from the payment of maintenance.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases during the past three years over 12 months has elapsed between making an appeal against a decision concerning disability living allowance, and the outcome of the appeal being decided. [49105]

Mr. Denham: The vast majority of appeals on Disability Living Allowance are heard by Disability Appeal Tribunals. The information requested is not held for these appeals.

However, the Social Security Act 1998, which received Royal Assent on 21 May, paves the way for modernising the delivery of Social Security, including the handling of appeals. A wide range of measures will streamline the administration of appeals and ensure appeals are dealt with more speedily. In particular, the Act enables my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to assume responsibility for the administration of the appeals system. She will set and publish demanding targets for the administration of appeals and report on the results.

Gender Data

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on progress in auditing official statistics to identify gaps in data on gender. [45794]

Ms Ruddock: We need relevant, reliable and timely statistics broken down by gender, comparing all aspects of women's lives and men's lives, to appraise policies for gender differential impacts and to support the process of mainstreaming.

The Government Statistical Service (GSS) aims always to collect and make available statistics disaggregated by gender, except where considerations of practicality or cost outweigh the identified need. All GSS publications contain the name and contact details of a person who can explain which, if any, of the statistics are available by gender and how they can be obtained.

The Brief Guide to Gender Statistics, published jointly by the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Office for National Statistics in March 1998, reviews the existing data, which are disaggregated by gender and identify the gaps. A copy has been placed in the Library.

The newly formed Gender and Statistics User Group will be considering this issue further and identifying what can be done to increase and improve the disaggregation of statistics by gender. This Group was launched on 31 March 1998. Until then, there had been no widely based group looking at the production and reporting of official and other statistics covering gender inequalities. The group includes, among others, representatives from women's national organisations, universities, research centres, the unions and Government Departments.

Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to receive the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority's second annual report; and if she will make a statement. [51096]

Ms Harman: I have laid the second report of Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (OPRA) before both Houses today. It covers the first 12 months of OPRA's operations following the take up of its statutory responsibilities on 6 April 1997.

I am pleased to see how quickly OPRA has established itself as an effective regulator of occupational pensions schemes and set up constructive working relationships with the pensions industry. The report raises a number of issues on which there is ongoing action between OPRA and this Department.

National Insurance

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to announce the results of the review into the position of performers for national insurance purposes; and if she will make a statement. [50749]

Mr. Denham: Performers have generally been treated as self-employed by the Inland Revenue, but as employees for National Insurance purposes. We have received legal advice that the current National Insurance treatment is not sustainable, and that entertainers should generally be regarded as self-employed.

Having considered the position we have decided to table regulations that will again require the majority of performers to be treated as employees for National Insurance purposes, whose earnings will be liable to Class 1 contributions. These regulations will be tabled in the near future.

The Government are considering the longer-term position of the entertainment industry, in the light of the plans announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget Statement concerning the alignment of tax and National Insurance and will in due course make a further announcement.

It is open to performers and engagers who consider they have incorrectly paid National Insurance Contributions in the belief that workers previously treated as employees should have been treated as self-employed to apply for a refund. This is limited to contributions made in the last 6 years.

Those who wish to do so should contact:

TREASURY

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the impact on the capital gains tax yield of the changes to the capital gains tax system set out in the Finance (No. 2) Bill in each of the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [49484]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 9 July 1998]: The available information on the effect on Exchequer revenues of the capital gains tax package of reforms is as follows:

Year	£ million (+)yield/(−)cost
1998–99	Negligible
1999–2000	−25
2000–01	+25

For later years, the exchequer effects will depend to a considerable extent upon movements in future asset prices, any behavioural changes and other factors. In the long term, the aim is for the changes to be broadly revenue neutral.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate his Department has made of the number of people who will benefit from the application of the new taper relief for capital gains tax on the sale of second homes in each of the next 10 years; [49518]

(2) what estimates his Department has made of the cost to public funds of applying capital gains tax taper relief to the sale of second homes in each of the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [49517]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 9 July 1998]: The information required to make such estimates is not readily available.

Income Tax

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost to the Exchequer of administering income tax in the last year for which figures are available; what was the cost 10 years ago; what trend is forecast for this cost; and if he will make a statement. [49476]

Mrs. Liddell: In 1997–98, the total cost of administering income tax was £1,190 million. In 1987–88, the cost was £740 million. (All figures rounded to the nearest £10m).

Future costs of administering income tax depend on a number of factors, not least government priorities and developments in tax policy. However, it is expected that, once the new system of self-assessment is fully bedded in, the administration of the income tax system will be more efficient than in the past.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to taxpayers of employing tax accountants in the last financial year in respect of income tax collection; what was the figure 10 years ago; what trend is forecast for this cost; and if he will make a statement. [49480]

Mrs. Liddell: The reasons why taxpayers employ agents to deal with their tax affairs vary, and are subject to personal choice. For this reason, the Inland Revenue does not collect information of this nature, nor has it any plans to do so.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of countering income tax evasion for the last year for which figures are available; what was the cost 10 years previously; what trend is forecast for such costs; and if he will make a statement. [49481]

Mrs. Liddell: In 1997–98, the cost of countering income tax evasion was about £160 million. In 1987–88, the cost was £80 million. (All figures are rounded to the nearest £10m).

It is expected that spending on compliance will be higher in 1998–99 than in 1997–98, as the introduction of self-assessment will mean a switch of resources from work on returns prior to making an assessment to checks made later and recorded as compliance work. However, longer-term trends are dependent on a number of factors, not least government priorities and developments in tax policy.

Inflation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of recent far eastern devaluations on the rate of inflation in the United Kingdom. [49614]

Mrs. Liddell: Developments in Asia are expected to reduce inflation and growth in the G7 economies. Allowance was made for these developments in the Budget forecast for UK inflation set out in the March 1998 Financial Statement and Budget Report (FSBR). But the FSBR also emphasised the risks.

Liquid Propane Gas

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the advantages of reducing the duty on liquid propane gas. [50480]

Mrs. Liddell: The environmental benefits of gas as a road fuel are well known and this has been reflected in the fact that the duty on road fuel gases (liquefied petroleum gas (propane) and liquefied natural gas (methane)) has been frozen for the second Budget in succession. This has increased the differential in favour of road fuel gases in recognition of their environmental benefit and more than fulfilled the pledge to maintain the duty differential with more conventional fuels for the lifetime of this Parliament.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Information)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance is given to civil servants concerning information which can properly be divulged under Chatham House rules. [50467]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 14 July 1998]: There is no specific guidance. All civil servants are under a duty not to disclose, without authority, official information which has been communicated in confidence within Government, or received in confidence from others. They must clear in advance material for publication, broadcasts or other public discussion which draws on official information or experience. Any civil servant participating in outside events—whether under the Chatham House rules or not—should confine their contribution to question of fact and explanation of Government policy and actions.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many women have been appointed from the Public Appointments List since 1 May 1997; how this compares with the number of appointments annually in the previous five years; and what is the annual percentage change in the number of appointments of women. [50152]

Dr. David Clark: Since 1 May 1997, the Public Appointments Unit has been notified of 39 appointments held by women nominated from the Central List. Comparative figures for appointments notified to the Unit in previous years are as follows:

Appointment of women from the Public Appointments Unit's Central List

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Number of successful PAU nominees during the year	128	134	180	105	96	87
Of these, number of women	67	71	87	47	41	32
Annual percentage change	+17.5	+6	+22.5	−46	−12.8	−22

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Residential Accommodation

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many officers of the House are provided with residential accommodation; and where is the accommodation that is provided. [50072]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Apart from the Speaker, four Officers of the House are required by their terms and conditions of employment to live within the parliamentary estate, and are provided with residential accommodation accordingly.

Veal

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what steps he takes to ensure that veal on sale within Refreshment Department outlets does not come from animals reared in veal crates. [49857]

Mr. Dennis Turner: The Refreshment Department has maintained a policy of purchasing only U.K. veal since 1990, when the use of crated methods of raising calves was banned in this country. This purchasing policy ensures that only veal from calves raised in group housing systems, with free access to milk and fibres, is served in the House of Commons dining rooms and cafeterias.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if he will make it his policy to ensure that no food is for sale within Refreshment Department outlets which contains or has been produced with the aid of genetically modified material. [49858]

Mr. Dennis Turner: The Refreshment Department is aware of the controversy surrounding genetically modified organisms (GMOs) in food, and contacted all its suppliers earlier this year to investigate the current situation surrounding this matter. The Department's suppliers have generally not been able to guarantee that all foods supplied to the House of Commons are free from genetically modified material. I am advised that the main cause of concern is the use of soya bean derivatives, which are used extensively throughout the food processing industry and in the production of animal feedstuffs. The uncertain response of the Department's food suppliers, which is being echoed throughout the food industry, is largely due to the fact that there is no segregation between genetically modified crops and non-genetically modified crops in the United States.

I would remind the hon. Member that all genetically modified materials currently used in the UK have been approved for use by the Government's own food safety experts. That notwithstanding, the Refreshment Department maintains a policy of not purchasing any food which is identified as containing genetically modified organisms, and will keep this issue under close review with their food suppliers.

Organic Produce

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what is his policy in respect of the availability for sale of organic produce within Refreshment Department outlets; what organic produce is currently obtained; and if he will make a statement. [49859]

Mr. Dennis Turner: This is a matter which has been kept under review by the Refreshment Department for several years. At present, the Department does not maintain a specific policy concerning the use of organic foods in its catering operations, but is always pleased to purchase such food when supplies are available in sufficient quantity, at the right quality and at a price which provides good value for money. One such example is the recent addition to the Refreshment Department's nominated supplier list of the Village Bakery at Melmerby in Cumbria, whose products are certified to be 95 per cent. organic.

There are two particular obstacles to the Refreshment Department instigating a policy of discrimination in favour of the use of organic foods. The first is the difficulty of supply: most organic producers are small organisations which primarily supply into the retail food market and not into the large scale catering market. The second is the question of economics: the cost of organic produce is generally significantly higher than the price of similar non-organic foods and, on occasions where organic produce has been tested, customers of the Refreshment Department have generally demonstrated a reluctance to pay the higher prices necessitated by the use of organic foods. However, I am advised that the Refreshment Department will continue to keep this matter under review.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what target her Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49883]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

EU Price Indications Directive

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations she has had with small business and retail organisations about the possible exemptions they may enjoy from the terms of the EU price indications directive. [50111]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 13 July 1998]: In June 1997 my Department conducted wide public consultations, including with small business and retail organisations, about the new Price Indications Directive. This specifically invited views on the exemption from unit pricing which Member States may apply to small retail businesses.

Since then my officials have met representatives of retail organisations, including those representing small retailers, to discuss the implementation of the Directive, including possible exemptions which we may introduce.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will exempt small retail businesses from the provisions of the EU directive on the indication of prices of products offered to consumers. [50117]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Subject to the result of consultations with interested parties, including retailers' organisations and small business organisations, to be carried out later this year, it is my intention to exempt small retail businesses from the requirement to display unit prices for products other than those sold loose from bulk, in accordance with Article 6 of the new Price Indications Directive (98/6/EC). The consultations will also cover other aspects of the Directive relevant to small retail businesses.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many exploration and appraisal wells were started each year on the UK continental shelf in (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998; and how many of these wells were committed through licensing agreements; and what assessment she has made of the current number of uncommitted wells. [50126]

Mr. Battle: The number of exploration and appraisal wells started on the UK Continental Shelf in 1996, 1997, and 1998 is as follows:

Year	Exploration wells	Appraisal wells
1996	73	44
1997	61	37
1998 (to 30 June)	23	16

In 1997, 35 of the exploration wells drilled were the result of licence agreements, while 12 of those drilled in 1998 fall into this category. The figures for the 1996 drilling programme are not readily available.

There has been no assessment of the current number of uncommitted wells.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the implications for the nuclear reprocessing industry in the United Kingdom of the current proposal by BNFL to acquire the nuclear assets and liabilities of Westinghouse plc. [49008]

Mr. Battle: The Westinghouse nuclear businesses which are being acquired by British Nuclear Fuels plc do not engage in reprocessing activities. Westinghouse focus mainly on production of nuclear fuel and on the decommissioning and clean-up of civil and military sites owned by the US Government.

Oil Exploration (Sudan)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which British companies are currently involved in oil exploration in Sudan. [48935]

Mr. Battle: We are not aware of any British Companies exploring for oil in Sudan at this time.

Export Licences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been issued since September 1997 for exports to Turkey by Heckler and Hock; and if she will indicate the ML or PL list number of the equipment covered. [50143]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current energy consumption of her Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level to a minimum; and what plans there are for including energy efficiency performance figures in her Department's annual report. [50062]

Mrs. Beckett: The Department's energy consumption (including Executive Agencies) in 1996–97 was 61,361,681 Kwh. The Department is committed to reducing consumption by 20 per cent. from the 1990–91 figure by 2000.

The Department's next annual report will record environmental performance, including energy efficiency performance figures.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of her Department's waste is recycled at present; and what targets there are for increasing this in the future. [50061]

Mrs. Beckett: The Department has in place schemes for recycling paper, toner cartridges, and cans. Major suppliers of IT equipment are required to take back packaging for recycling. The scope for increasing recycling is kept under review.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to discourage car use on departmental business by her Department's employees. [50063]

Mrs. Beckett: The Department will be producing a green transport policy early next year which will address this issue among others.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the amount of (a) Objective 2 funding and (b) Objective 4 funding spent in Greater London broken down by project in each year since that status was granted. [49689]

Mrs. Roche: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions Mr. Roger Kaye QC and Mr. Hugh Aldous FCA have been contracted to act as inspectors investigating alleged insider dealing. [49432]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 7 July 1998]: They have only been appointed insider dealing inspectors into the two investigations into the alleged insider dealing in the shares of Anglia Television Group plc.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many reports of investigations into insider dealing carried out under the Financial Services Act 1986 have been published. [48603]

Mrs. Beckett: None.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons have been the subject of more than (a) one and (b) two investigations by her Department into alleged insider dealing. [49568]

Mrs. Beckett: Inspectors are appointed under Section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 to investigate dealings in the shares of a particular company not the dealings of specific persons.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy to publish her Department's inspectors' reports; and if she will make a statement. [48252]

Mrs. Beckett: In relation to public companies it is already the Department's policy to publish reports prepared by Companies Act inspectors if it is in the public interest to do so. However, the reports of insider dealing inspectors are not published. There are strict legal restraints on disclosure of information obtained in such inspections.

Lord Archer

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will seek the agreement of Lady Archer and Broosk Saib to make public details of the evidence they gave to her Department's inspectors investigating the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing. [48920]

Mrs. Beckett: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will seek the agreement of Ms Morgan Thomas to make public details of the evidence she gave to the Department's inspectors investigating the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing. [49433]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 7 July 1998]: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if her Department's inspector's report into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing carried a recommendation. [49431]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The report of the inspectors is confidential.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many investigations were conducted into alleged insider dealing in Anglia TV shares; when each investigation started and finished; and how many persons were interviewed in each case; [49362]

(2) if the report by her Department's inspectors on the investigations into share dealing in Anglia TV by Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare has been made available to Ministers; [49202]

(3) if she will request Mr. Edmund Lawson QC to review the information now in the public domain concerning the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing with a view to ascertaining whether there are grounds for a fresh investigation; [48605]

(4) if she will seek the consent of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare to publish the report of the investigation into his conduct in respect of share dealing; [48606]

(5) if she will seek the permission of the former President of the Board of Trade, the Right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), to consult the inspector's report into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing; [49547]

(6) if she will pass the report of her Department's 1994 investigation into the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealings on to the Director of Public Prosecutions with a request for an opinion whether (a) the report and (b) facts disclosed subsequently constitute sufficient reason for the inquiry to be re-opened; [48249]

(7) pursuant to her answer of 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 242, if she will assess (a) the statement by Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in the Evening Standard of 9 June concerning Sir Nicholas Lloyd and (b) subsequent statements by Sir Nicholas Lloyd as possible new evidence which could justify the appointment of inspectors to investigate the alleged insider dealing in Anglia shares in 1994. [48253]

Mrs. Beckett: The investigations into dealings in the shares of Anglia Television Group plc were matters which were begun and completed under the previous Administration.

Reports on allegations of insider dealings are never published, as there are strict legal restraints on disclosure of information obtained in such investigations.

I would consider opening a further investigation only if substantial fresh information became available, and if it was considered to be in the public interest to do so.

In accordance with normal practice of neither confirming nor denying the existence of insider dealing investigations (unless there was some overriding public interest in doing so) no announcement was initially made of the appointment of inspectors on 8 February 1994 to inquire into dealings in the shares of Anglia Television Group Plc between 10 and 21 January 1994.

On 7 July 1994, however, it became apparent that the media had detailed knowledge of the inspection, and the then Secretary of State accordingly decided that acknowledgement was in the public interest and confirmed that an investigation was being undertaken into the dealings in Anglia shares and that Lord Archer was one of the persons concerned. The inspectors reported on 19 July 1994, having conducted formal interviews with 22 witnesses. The then Secretary of State's decision to take no further action was announced on 28 July 1994.

The original investigation had attracted widespread media coverage and speculation continued in the press and a number of further allegations were received in the Department about other dealings in Anglia shares. On reviewing this information in the spring of 1995 the then Secretary of State concluded that the inspectors should be re-appointed to investigate this new information. The then Secretary of State also decided, in line with normal practice, that this re-appointment should not be announced and that no further public statement should be made. The inspectors were re-appointed on 4 May 1995 to inquire into dealings in the shares of Anglia between 20 December 1993 and 21 January 1994. On 26 July 1996 the inspectors submitted their report on the second investigation, having conducted formal interviews with 32 witnesses. They concluded that there was no evidence on which a prosecution could be founded.

Although the second investigation was a matter of some discussion and speculation in the media at the time, the re-appointment of inspectors has not previously been publicly acknowledged; and answers to recent parliamentary questions refer only to the first investigation. However, in order that there should be no misconception on this matter, I now consider it right to confirm the re-appointment of the inspectors in 1995.

No papers relating to these two reports from the previous administration, and neither of the reports themselves have been seen by present Ministers. However, my officials have considered whether recent information constitutes new evidence which I ought to consider with a view to deciding whether to re-open the investigation. They have advised me that it does not, and I have accepted that advice; I have similarly accepted their advice that no useful purpose would be served by referring this case to Counsel or to the DPP.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if it is standard practice for her Department's inspectors investigating alleged insider trading to ask the subject of the investigation what factors persuaded him or her to enter the market and buy shares; and if there is a verbatim record; [48251]

(2) if she will make it her policy for interviews carried out by her Department's inspectors into allegations of insider trading to be (a) tape-recorded and (b) video-recorded; [48250]

(3) on which dates, and for what period of time, her Department's inspectors investigating the conduct of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare in respect of share dealing interviewed him. [48131]

Mrs. Beckett: Inspectors appointed under S.177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 are independent of the Department and masters of their own procedure. It is for the inspectors to determine the manner in which they conduct the inquiries.

Nuclear Material

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many aircraft were involved in the transport of nuclear material from Georgia to Scotland; at what time aircraft departed Georgia and arrived in Scotland; what was the cost of (a) transporting and (b) storing the material; and if she will indicate the section of her departmental budget from which expenditures incurred on this arrangement will be drawn. [48834]

Mr. Battle: As the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), explained in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate) on 24 April 1998, Official Report, column 721, one American military transport aircraft, a Galaxy C5, was used to fly all the nuclear material in the Georgian consignment to Kinloss.

The American authorities who were responsible for the details of the transportation of the nuclear material from Georgia, informed the relevant United Kingdom authorities that the time of departure of this aircraft from Tbilisi airport was 1404 GMT on 23 April. It arrived at Kinloss at 0206 GMT on 24 April, after following a route along the Mediterranean Sea and over part of the Atlantic Ocean. It was refuelled twice in mid-air. A second American Galaxy C5, containing specialised handling equipment to assist with unloading the containers at the Dounreay site, left Tbilisi at 0800 GMT on 25 April and arrived at Kinloss at 1547 GMT the same day. This flight was shorter because it was across mainland Europe.

Transportation costs to Kinloss were borne by the American Government. The cost of transporting the nuclear material and the associated handling equipment from Kinloss to Dounreay was £40,000. The UKAEA have estimated the storage costs as approximately £5,000 per annum. These costs will be charged under the DTI budget heading Class V Vote 1 Section A6 'Energy: Nuclear and Non-Nuclear' (b) UKAEA Grant-in-Aid.

Firearms

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 103, what discussions her Department has had with the Department for International Development concerning the illegal manufacture of, and trafficking in, firearms. [48926]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 July 1998]: None. The Department of Trade and Industry contributes to the work of the G8 Lyons firearms sub-group, but is not in the lead. The Home Office is responsible for co-ordinating the interests of the many departments involved. I understand that the Department for International Development has not been involved in the discussions relating to the G8 Lyons firearms sub-group, which focuses on control and enforcement measures such as working on the establishment in law of relevant offences relating to the illegal manufacture of firearms, the licensing regimes for imports and exports, and practical co-operation between enforcement agencies.

I understand that the Department for International Development is supporting a number of initiatives that help countries and regions deal with the problem of illicit trafficking. Earlier this year funds were provided to host a seminar in South Africa which brought together experts from Europe and Southern Africa, and drew up an action plan for tackling arms proliferation in the region. Funds have also been pledged in support of the moratorium on the import, export, and manufacture of small arms for West Africa proposed by Mali.

Billiton Plc

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has made to Billiton plc regarding the social and environmental implications of their proposed Eastern Cape Zinc Refinery Project in South Africa. [49425]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 7 July 1998]: None. Environmental issues as they affect this project are primarily a matter for the South African authorities. However, my officials have been in touch with Billiton plc and understand that the firm has completed a full environmental impact assessment of the project in consultation with local groups and public authorities, in accordance with South Africa's strict environmental controls. As regards the social implications, the project is to be financed largely by private capital and will create jobs and introduce new technology into one of South Africa's poorest provinces.

Export Credits

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount received in debt service by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in 1997 from heavily indebted poor countries. [48991]

Mrs. Beckett: Payments to ECGD during the financial year 1997/98 by Heavily Indebted Poor Countries amounted to £32,860,000.

The breakdown by country, to the nearest £1000, was:

Benin: £188,000
Bolivia: £1,175,000
Burkina Faso: £58,000
Cameroon: £1,696,000
Congo: £221,000
Cote d'Ivoire: £112,000
Ethopia: £441,000
Ghana: £1,504,000
Guinea: £169,000
Guyana: £5,079,000
Kenya: £7,959,000
Madagascar: £374,000
Mali: £275,000
Mozambique: £963,000
Mauritania: £609,000
Nicaragua: £113,000
Niger: £49,000
Senegal: £60,000
Togo: £517,000
Tanzania: £3,997,000
Uganda: £773,000
Vietnam: £406,000
Yemen: £4,282,000
Zambia: £1,841,000

Coalfield Communities

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list each (a) Government and (b) European Union initiative pertaining to the regeneration of coalfield communities, giving in each case and where appropriate the amount of money received in each of the last 10 years. [50207]

Mr. Battle: There are a number of programmes which my Department is responsible for which contribute to the regeneration of coalfield areas. In terms of Government initiatives, DTI offers grants in coalfield closure areas in the form of Regional Selective Assistance and Regional Investment Grants. The DTI also arranged for the transfer of coalfield sites to English Partnerships as part of a coalfield regeneration programme. In relation to European Union initiatives, DTI holds responsibility for European funding under the RECHAR programme.

Where coalfields are located in assisted areas, Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) is available for investment projects which create or safeguard jobs. The table provides details of RSA expenditure by DTI in local authority districts in England which contain coal closure areas.

The English Partnerships Coalfield Portfolio is as follows. In 1996, DTI arranged the transfer to English Partnerships of 56 former coalfield sites (five in the North West, twenty-four in Yorkshire, eighteen in the Midlands and nine in the North East). English Partnerships are taking forward a 10 year programme to reclaim these sites, working together with Coalfield Community groups, private developers and local authorities to improve the environment and create opportunities in these areas for the creation of jobs.

Rechar is a European Community Initiative funded from the European Structural Funds. Its aim is to support the economic conversion and regeneration of the coal mining areas of the European Community hardest hit by the decline of the coal industry. There have been two Rechar initiatives during the last ten years, covering the periods 1992–93 and 1994–99.

There were eleven individual Rechar I programmes for the 1992–93 period for the following areas: TAWSEN (North East), Durham and Cleveland, South Yorkshire, Mid Yorkshire, Lancashire, South Staffordshire, North Warwickshire, Nottinghamshire and North Derby, Western Scotland, Eastern Scotland, and South Wales.

There are eight individual Rechar II programmes for the current 1994–99 period: Eastern Scotland, Western Scotland, North East, North West, East Midlands, West Midlands, Yorkshire and the Humber, and South Wales.

Under these programmes, the following Structural Funds have been paid (cumulative totals):

Tissue Manufacturers

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of aid from Government and Government agencies given to each of the tissue enterprises (a) Proctor and Gamble, Trafford Park, (b) A and M Paper, Skelmersdale, and (c) Kimberley Clark, Barrow-in-Furness, in the past year. [50357]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 14 July 1998]: Neither A and M Paper, Skelmersdale, nor Kimberley Clark, Barrow-in-Furness, has received any aid from Government and Government Agencies in the past year. Proctor and Gamble, Trafford Park, has been offered a DTI grant but the amount is still Commercial in Confidence. English Partnerships could also provide up to £3 million, and Manchester TEC up to £1 million in assistance if specific criteria are met.

HEALTH

Community Hospitals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community hospitals have closed in each of the last five years. [32543]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, the Community Hospitals Association estimates that 35 community hospitals in England were closed between 1985 and 1997.

Community hospitals in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Public Appointments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons who applied to serve as non-executive directors or as chairpersons to NHS trusts in North East England, excluding Yorkshire, were (a) unsuccessful and (b) not appointed to any position; how many of the unsuccessful candidates were (i) female, (ii) from ethnic minorities or (iii) worked in health professions or occupations. [43820]

Mr. Milburn: A total of 350 applicants were considered for 51 non-executive director vacancies on National Health Service trust boards in the northern part of the Northern and Yorkshire Region during the autumn 1997 round of appointments, including appointments to merged trusts in April 1998. The applicants had all been interviewed by independent panels: of the 299 who were unsuccessful in obtaining an appointment, 81 are female, 7 belong to an ethnic minority and 34 worked in health professions or occupations at the time of their application.

The information requested for applicants who did not proceed beyond the initial interview stage could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he proposes to reduce the working hours of hospital doctors; and if he will make a statement. [43689]

Mr. Milburn: Action to reduce junior doctors' hours continues to make progress. The figures for March 1998 show that reported compliance with the target of a maximum average of 56 hours a week now stands at 83.3 per cent. of all junior doctors. Regional task forces will continue to work closely with trusts to tackle the remaining problem posts, which now number 4,999, or one in six of all doctors in training.

Rothbury Community Hospital

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects tenders to be invited for the new Rothbury Community Hospital. [47819]

Mr. Milburn: The new community hospital at Rothbury is part of Phase II of the redevelopment of Wansbeck General Hospital for which tenders were invited on 29 May 1996, with receipt of applications by 28 June 1996.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the contribution of the United Kingdom-based pharmaceutical industry to the United Kingdom economy. [47803]

Mr. Milburn: The pharmaceuticals industry is a significant contributor to the United Kingdom balance of trade. In 1997, the industry accounted for a £2,292 million trade surplus from £5,484 million in exports. This was a 1.9 per cent. increase over the 1996 surplus. The industry also accounts for some 75,000 UK jobs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance is given to the pharmaceutical industry for research and development on new drugs. [47818]

Mr. Milburn: The principal form of assistance is through the prices of medicines bought by the National Health Service. The pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, which controls the profits and indirectly the prices of pharmaceutical companies from the sale of medicines to the NHS, makes allowances available for research and development to encourage the development of new medicines. This support amounted to £556 million for 1994, up from £539 million for 1993.

Spinal Injuries Units

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional beds will be provided in specialist spinal injuries units in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48063]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available in the form requested.

Urban Ambulance Service

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when will he publish the emergency ambulance performance statistics for the urban ambulance service 1997–98. [48132]

Mr. Milburn: Details of the performance of ambulance services was published on 26 June 1998 in the Statistical Bulletin "Ambulance Services, England: 1997–98", copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospital Appointments

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to NHS trusts with regard to the removal of patients from waiting lists for failure to attend; what change this represents over the policy prior to 1 May 1997; and what estimate he has made of the number of patients removed from waiting lists since 1 May 1997 as a result of such changes in guidance. [49108]

Mr. Milburn: The waiting list action team has reiterated existing guidance on validating waiting lists. There has been no new guidance or change in policy on the removal of patients from National Health Service waiting lists since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital appointments were missed (a) at North Tyneside General Hospital and (b) nationally during 1997; and at what estimated cost. [49336]

Mr. Milburn: Figures for non-attendance in hospital outpatients clinics at the North Tyneside Healthcare National Health Service Trust and for England for 1996/97 are in the table. Information on the cost of non-attendance is not available, but the average cost of a hospital outpatient attendance is £61.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 June 1998, Official Report, columns 143–45, on hospital waiting lists, if he will publish the interim figures received by his Department which indicated that NHS waiting lists in England were falling. [49109]

Mr. Milburn: Early indications suggest that waiting lists began to come down in June. Validated figures will be published in due course.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of trends in hospital waiting lists between the first and second quarters of 1998; and if he will make a statement. [50476]

Mr. Milburn: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said on 30 June 1998, Official Report, columns 143–44, early indications from the National Health Service Executive show that waiting lists stopped rising in May and have been coming down in June. We expect this downward trend to continue so that, by next April, the NHS will have delivered a record reduction in waiting lists to below the 1.16 million inherited from the previous administration.

GP Appointments

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many GP appointments were missed (a) in the Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority Area and (b) nationally during 1997; and at what estimated cost. [49335]

Mr. Milburn: Data on general practitioner appointments are not collected.

In December 1997, the Department provided funding of £1 million to the Doctor Patient Partnership (DPP) which is a campaign run by the British Medical Association to encourage patients to make more appropriate use of primary care services. The DPP sponsors various national campaigns to encourage patients to think about their responsibilities as well as their rights. One of the campaigns it has run this year was entitled "Keep it or cancel it!". It focused on appointment-keeping and was targeted at those patients who fail to keep appointments.

Dementia

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will allow GPs to issue private prescriptions for Aricept (donepezil) and Exelon (rivastigmine) anti-dementia drugs for their NHS patients; [49242]

(2) what central funding is available to regional health authorities to provide for Aricept (donepezil) and Exelon (rivastigmine) anti-dementia treatment. [49243]

Mr. Milburn: Aricept and Exelon are both available on the National Health Service, and any general practitioner prescribing them to patients on their NHS list should do so in accordance with GPs' terms of service. Guidance from the Standing Medical Advisory Committee on the use of Aricept for Alzheimer's disease was issued to the NHS on 30 April.

The potential cost arising from the introduction of significant new treatments, including drugs, is taken into account when health authority funding allocations are determined. Thereafter, costs of prescribing all drugs are expected to be met from within these allocations, taking account of local priorities.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department gives to those caring for people suffering from Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia. [50230]

Ms Jowell: We value the role of carers, who are fundamental to community and health care, and recognise their valuable contribution to society, which is sometimes made at considerable personal cost. That is why, on 10 June 1998, my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister announced the national strategy for carers. This is a Government-wide review which will examine how carers can best be helped and supported.

The Department issued a Health of the Nation Handbook last year on the mental health of older people which emphasised the importance of carers in the provision of care for older people with mental health problems. The Alzheimer's Disease Society is the main voluntary organisation which supports carers of those suffering from Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. The Department enjoys a close working relationship with the society and supports two projects, through funding from its section 64 scheme, aimed at promoting quality dementia care and developing a network of dementia services development centres.

NHS Trusts (Demography)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health trusts with populations in excess of 550,000, indicating the size of population, the numbers of staff employed and their current budget. [49333]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available in the form requested.

Dental Services (North Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed dedicated vocational training scheme for dentistry in North Staffordshire. [49339]

Mr. Milburn: The Department currently funds four vocational training schemes in the West Midlands region, one in Stafford. There are no plans to fund another scheme in Staffordshire in the current financial year.

Private Treatment (Invoicing)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time which elapses between private treatment and tests being carried out in the NHS and the issuing of invoices in respect of such treatment. [49479]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Health Screening

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the advantages of extending the range of areas covered by health screening for those aged over 60 years. [50108]

Mr. Milburn: The National Screening Committee considers the effectiveness and feasibility of individual screening programmes in advising Ministers about their introduction or modification. The age-range of the target population is an integral part of the assessment.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the timescale by which health districts in the North West of England will have (a) recruited sufficient specialist staff and (b) procured the necessary equipment to meet the four week guidelines for radiotherapy treatment for urgent breast cancer referrals; what measures he is taking to recruit staff and procure equipment; and at what estimated cost. [50243]

Ms Jowell: In order fully to assess the current level of radiotherapy service provision in the North West and to ensure that deficiencies in access to radiotherapy services for all patients in the North West can be identified and addressed, the National Health Service Executive North West Region is undertaking, as a matter of urgency, a detailed analysis of the level of service currently being provided and a projection of the level of service required, which will include staffing levels, equipment requirement and costs. This work is expected to be completed in the autumn.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health districts in the North West of England where breast cancer urgent referrals cannot routinely be provided with radiotherapy treatment within the four week guideline. [50242]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, reports produced by the Royal College of Radiologists on 8 July 1998 and taken from an audit of hospital waiting times conducted during a week in February 1998 indicated that, in the North West Region, of those women requiring post operative radiotherapy, 48 per cent. started treatment in 4 weeks and 85 per cent. in 6 weeks. To ensure that deficiencies in access to radiotherapy services for all patients in the North West can be identified and addressed, the National Health Service Executive North West Region is undertaking, as a matter of urgency, a detailed analysis of the level of service currently being provided and a projection of the level of service required. This work is expected to be completed by the autumn.

Organophosphates

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if in making its recommendations about the daily consumption of fruit and vegetables his Department has taken into account the risk to pregnant women, infants and children of ingesting more than the acceptable levels of organophosphate residues. [50418]

Ms Jowell: Our advice to increase fruit and vegetable consumption is based on the nutritional benefits of a diet rich in fruit and vegetables. In general, residues of organophosphates found in fruit and vegetables are low. High residues have been detected in some individual fruit and vegetables but such residues would erode safety margins rather than cause adverse health effects. We also advise that if fruit or vegetables are to be eaten raw, they should be washed and peeled if necessary, the outside leaves removed and carrots should be topped and tailed.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received calling for financial assistance for people with haemophilia infected with hepatitis C; and if he will make a statement. [50383]

Ms Jowell: Since 2 May 1997, hon. Members have asked fourteen Parliamentary Questions (in addition to this one) and we have received 275 letters about the issue of special payments for people with haemophilia infected with hepatitis C through National Health Service treatment.

Mearwood Park Hospital

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what the income from the sale of the former Mearwood Park Hospital site in Leeds was spent. [50547]

Mr. Milburn: The income received to date from the sale of Meanwood Park has been used by the Leeds Community and Mental Health National Health Service Trust to strengthen its financial situation and facilitate the closure and reprovision of High Royds Hospital in 2001.

None of the sale proceeds have been used outside the Leeds Community and Mental Health National Health Service Trust.

Health Care Services (Tamworth)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the NHS has introduced to improve the provision of healthcare services in Tamworth since 1 May 1997. [50644]

Mr. Milburn: Healthcare services in South Staffordshire have benefited from significant extra resources since May 1997, including £1.7 million towards the cost of winter pressures and £3 million to fund waiting list initiatives. Premier Health National Health Service Trust has received a £178,000 share of the waiting list moneys, and aims to treat an extra 900 patients from Tamworth and the surrounding areas. Good Hope Hospital NHS Trust in Birmingham will receive £357,000 to treat an extra 500 South Staffordshire patients.

In addition to this, local people have benefited from the development of the Sir Robert Peel Hospital in Tamworth, improving the availability of community health services and out-patient facilities to the local population.

Bogus Charity Collectors

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will warn hospital managements about bogus charity collectors who apply for permission to collect on hospital premises and in NHS grounds. [50321]

Mr. Michael: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given him today, Official Report, column 192.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current energy consumption of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what proposals he has to include energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [50641]

Dr. Howells: The current energy consumption of the Department is approximately 2.6 million kWh per month.

We are currently developing new performance indicators to enable comparison with external independent standards of good practice.

Some energy efficiency performance figures are already included in the Department's annual report. We plan to extend information on our environmental performance to reflect more detailed monitoring, and will require agencies and NDPBs to report on their performance.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled; and what future targets he has set. [50642]

Dr. Howells: Approximately 28 per cent. of the Department's waste is recycled at present. Targets to reduce or recycle waste beyond this year are currently being reviewed as part of our overall improvement programme.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to discourage car use by his Department's employees. [50643]

Dr. Howells: The Department intends to reduce reliance on the car by encouraging people to use more environmentally friendly means of travelling to work. It is intended that the Department's Green Transport Plan will include proposals for drawing up Commuting Action Plans for each major Departmental site.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to raise awareness of environmental issues within his Department; and what specific training will be made available to staff. [50639]

Dr. Howells: We have taken a number of measures to raise awareness of environmental issues in DfEE with respect to both policy development and Greening the Department. All Divisional Managers, Non Departmental Public Body (NDPB) sponsor teams and the Employment Service have received copies of the guidance on policy appraisal and the environment. Recipients have been asked to carry out screening of all policies and programmes at an early stage of development and to undertake full environmental appraisals where appropriate. The sustainable development strategy consultation document "Opportunities for Change" has been distributed to DfEE teams which have a particular interest in environmental issues and the team have been asked to bring the document to the attention of their contacts outside the Department.

Two training videos produced by the Employment Service, will be promoted throughout the Department later in the year as part of a wider awareness campaign to raise the profile of energy efficiency and environmental issues in the workplace. Each major Departmental site will establish action groups to promote environmental awareness among staff.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what activities relating to his environmental responsibilities his Green Minister has undertaken since being appointed. [50640]

Dr. Howells: I regularly meet and hold discussions with organisations which have environmental interests and with other Green Ministers.

FE Colleges (Worcestershire)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list Worcestershire's further education colleges, indicating their operating surpluses or deficits, for (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97 and (f) 1997–98. [49473]

Dr. Howells: The table lists the further education colleges in Worcestershire and their operating surpluses or deficits for the four academic years from 1993–94 to 1996–97. Figures for 1992–93 and 1997–98 are not available.

Further Education Funding

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received about the impact on colleges of the derecognition of certain Schedule 2 qualifications for FEFC funding purposes; and if he will make a statement. [49317]

Dr. Howells: Representations have been received from a number of colleges and from the Association of Colleges. Approvals granted since the Schedule 2(a) list was first published have largely met the concerns expressed. A number of awarding bodies have applications under consideration and, where relevant criteria are satisfied, approvals will be granted in due course.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the report 'Further Education for the New Millennium', if it is his policy that there should be additional funding for students from deprived areas. [49459]

Dr. Howells: It is the Government's policy that FE funding arrangements should fairly reflect the costs of providing for disadvantaged students.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received above the FEFC's decision to limit the eligibility of Schedule 2 qualifications for the New Deal for over-25-year-olds; and if he will make a statement. [49316]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have received representations from various individuals and organisations about the design of the New Deal full-time education and training opportunities.

Ministers in this Department and the Department of Social Security decided that under the New Deal people 25 or over, unemployed two years or more, may take employment-related courses covered by Schedule 2 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 (or Section 6 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992) and retain their Jobseeker's Allowance. They may also in particular cases take higher level courses, where these are likely to lead to an early prospect of employment and alternative sources of funding are not available.

Pupil Languages

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will rank local education authorities in England according to (a) the number of languages spoken by children attending maintained schools and (b) the average number of languages per school spoken by children attending maintained schools, indicating the number of languages in each case. [49442]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Free School Meals (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of primary school children in Gloucestershire, by district, are eligible for free school meals. [49253]

Mr. Byers: Provisional figures show that 12.1 per cent. of pupils in maintained primary schools in the Gloucestershire Local Education Authority area in January 1998 were known to be eligible for free school meals.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of primary school children in Cheltenham, by school, are eligible for free school meals; [49254]

(2) what percentage of primary school children in Cheltenham, by school, were eligible for free school meals in 1987. [49255]

Mr. Byers: Information on school meals for individual schools is not published centrally.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46676]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 30 June 1998]: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, my department routinely consults the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers and more recently using the Cabinet Office

People's Panel, on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. I have therefore confined my reply to major exercises:

Excellence in Schools White Paper consultation (July-October 1997)

Excellence for All Children Green Paper consultation on Special Educational Needs (October 1997-January 1998)

The Learning Age Green Paper consultation (March-July 1998: results to be published in Autumn 1998).

It is our normal practice to make the results of such research available to the public, including placing copies in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total payments for land set aside in England in 1997. [50138]

Mr. Rooker: Total payments of £79 million have been made under the Arable Area Payments Scheme for land set aside in England in 1997.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what activities his Green Minister has undertaken and what he has achieved as regards sustainability within the Department since being appointed. [50415]

Mr. Rooker: As Green Minister, I meet regularly with colleagues within the Department to discuss its policies.

I appeared before the Environmental Audit Committee on 31 March to report on the Department's actions on greening Government and sustainability in general.

I have also attended two meetings of Green Ministers which have considered the future role of Green Ministers, the consultation papers on the review of the UK Sustainable Development Strategy, green operations and revised guidance on the environmental appraisal of policies.

I met my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment to discuss the Department's programme for ensuring the further integration of sustainable development into policies and the greening of operations. The Department has circulated guidance on carrying out environmental appraisal of policies, and published a consultation paper on the development of a set of indicators for sustainable agriculture in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to raise awareness of environmental and sustainability issues within his Department; and if specific training will be made available to staff. [50413]

Mr. Rooker: Awareness of environmental and sustainability issues is already recognised as important to the work of the Department and is integral to its training and development programme.

Drift Nets

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the planned tuna drift net ban on the livelihoods of United Kingdom fishermen. [50409]

Mr. Morley: In 1997 the value of tuna caught by the five UK vessels participating in the tuna drift net fishery was some £49,000. This represented part of a continuing downward trend.

The decision to end the fishery in December 2001 permits a gradual phasing out so minimising costs to industry, particularly gear maintenance and replacement costs. The fishermen concerned are able to continue fishing for tuna using fishing gear other than drift nets.

Animal Health Act

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend the arrangements his Department has for applying sections 40 to 49 of the Animal Health Act 1981 and any subordinate legislation made under the same sections of the Act; and if he will make a statement. [50048]

Mr. Morley: I have no current plans to amend the arrangements for applying sections 40 to 49 of the Animal Health Act 1981.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of recent proposals on the further reform of the Common Fisheries Policy by Spain's fishing minister. [50543]

Mr. Morley: I have not seen any recent proposals on the further reform of the Common Fisheries Policy by Spain's fishing Minister. However, the British Embassy in Madrid has requested a copy of recent proposals put forward by parts of the Spanish fishing industry.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on (a) the last meeting of the EU Fishing Ministers and (b) the prospects for their agreement over the reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. [50544]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend made a statement concerning the outcome of the last meeting of the EU Fisheries Council in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, South (Miss Begg) on 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 658–59.

I expect the Council to reach agreement on the future of the Common Fisheries Policy before the deadline of 31 December 2002.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Illegal Weapons and Explosives

7. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the detection and interception of illegal weapons and explosives by the police and security forces in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. [49024]

Mr. Ingram: The detection and interception of illegal weapons and explosives by the security forces are of prime importance in the fight against terrorist and criminal organisations. The RUC, supported by the Army, work tirelessly to recover terrorist weaponry and to avert those in possession of them, evidenced by the number of firearms and explosives finds reported by the Chief Constable in appendix 5 table 3 of his Annual Report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. In doing so the RUC maintain a close liaison with their counterparts, the Garda Siochana who have an excellent record in combating terrorism; indeed, so far this year they have found in the region of 5,500 lbs of Home Made Explosives. Co-operation between the RUC and the Garda Siochana is excellent.

New Deal

8. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in implementing the new deal in Northern Ireland. [49025]

Mr. Worthington: Progress has been very encouraging and compares favourably to the position in Great Britain. Almost 800 employers have signed New Deal agreements. Around 2,500 young people have entered Gateway and will progress to the available options.

The Chancellor's recent initiative will enable us to provide extensive New Deal opportunities to the over 25s from November.

29. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing the new deal in Northern Ireland. [49047]

Mr. Worthington: The New Deal for 18–24 year olds was launched on 6 April and the Government are encouraged by progress with over 700 employer agreements signed. We think this is the highest number of firms pro rata in the UK. We received applications from 84 consortiums to run the education, environment and voluntary organisation options. 26 consortiums have been chosen. Some 2,200 young people have entered the Gateway and will progress to the four available options.

The Chancellor's recent initiative means that additional New Deal provision for the 25+ age group will be available from November of this year.

Human Rights Commission

9. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards the establishment of a human rights commission in Northern Ireland. [49026]

27. Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards the establishment of a human rights commission in Northern Ireland. [49045]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Bill, which will contain provisions to establish a Human Rights Commission, will be introduced in the House later today.

Social Security Agency

10. Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff left the Social Security Agency during the 1997–98 financial year. [49027]

Mr. Worthington: A total of 144 permanent staff left the Social Security Agency during the 1997–98 year.

Security Situation

11. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the security situation. [49028]

Mr. Ingram: The stand-off at Drumcree church led to violence in many Loyalist areas in Northern Ireland. In the most serious incident on Sunday morning, 12 July, three young boys, Jason, Richard and Mark Quinn, died when their home in Ballymoney was attacked by petrol bombers. The RUC, supported by the Army, despite coming under sustained attack from gunfire, blast and petrol bombs have ensured that life continues normally for the majority of people, as well as continuing to guard against further attacks by dissident republican groups.

Peace Process

12. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on recent developments in respect of the peace process in Northern Ireland. [49029]

21. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the peace process following the election of the assembly. [49039]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon Friend to the oral answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) today, Official Report, column 395.

18. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on international involvement in the peace process in Northern Ireland. [49035]

Marjorie Mowlam: Apart from the valuable contribution of the team of international chairmen which is well recognised, there was no direct international involvement in the negotiations leading to the Good Friday Agreement. However, the Government are grateful for the international support we have received from the United States, the European Union and many others for our efforts and those of the Irish Government, and all the parties engaged in the Talks to help bring about a lasting peace in Northern Ireland.

We are also grateful for the financial contribution by the European Union and by those countries which contribute to the International Fund for Ireland.

24. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps she intends to take to promote the peace process. [49042]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Government will promote work speedily with the Irish Government and the New Northern Ireland Assembly to make arrangements for the full implementation of the Belfast Agreement which provides the best chance for lasting peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland.

Water Industry

13. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the future regulation of the water industry in Northern Ireland. [49030]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government plan shortly to publish a consultation paper on the future structural, funding and regulatory arrangements for delivery of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland. The paper is intended to stimulate a very significant debate about the provision of these services in Northern Ireland on which final decisions will be taken by the new local administration.

School Accommodation

14. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost and time scale in which substandard school accommodation will be upgraded. [49031]

Mr. Worthington: There are 130 major building projects in the top three priority categories of the schools planning list with an estimated capital value of some £550m, and the current backlog of maintenance in schools is estimated at £80m. No timescale can be put on the work programme required to meet these needs—this will be governed by the availability of resources.

Nursery Education

15. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the availability of nursery education in Northern Ireland. [49032]

19. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the availability of nursery education in Northern Ireland. [49037]

22. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the availability of nursery education in Northern Ireland. [49040]

Mr. Worthington: Pre-School Education Development Plans for each Education and Library Board area have been approved, through which 2,200 additional pre-school education places will be funded in Northern Ireland from the 1998–99 school year. This represents an increase of 20 per cent. in funded pre-school provision and will make places available for almost 60 per cent. of children in their immediate pre-school year.

Electricity Charges

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the price of electricity in Northern Ireland compares to that in the rest of the United Kingdom; and what policies Her Majesty's Government are pursuing to reduce electricity prices in Northern Ireland. [49033]

Mr. Ingram: Electricity bills for domestic and small commercial and industrial customers are, on average, around 20 per cent. higher in Northern Ireland than in the rest of the United Kingdom. The primary aim of both Government and wider European policy is to achieve lower electricity prices through the introduction of greater competition into the local energy market. Following the restructuring of the industry, responsibility for ensuring that prices paid by consumers reflect the costs of production and distribution rests with the independent Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland.

Bloomfield Report

17. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken in response to the Bloomfield report on the victims of violence in Northern Ireland. [49034]

Mr. Ingram: I announced on 30 June a number of initiatives, representing an expenditure of almost £1 million, as a first response to Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report. I have also launched a consultation exercise which will help to identify and prioritise a package of measures for victims, and inform the future allocation of funding.

Guardsmen Fisher and Wright

20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received on the case of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright in relation to the timing of the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [49038]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations about these cases. The Secretary of State formerly had a statutory power to refer a case to the Court of Appeal again if it seemed that the conviction had been the result of a miscarriage of justice. However, this power lapsed when the Criminal Cases Review Commission began work after March 1997. The Commission alone now has the statutory power to refer a case back to the court. My right hon. Friend did not retain any residual powers and the Commission is not responsible to her for its investigation of individual cases. In these circumstances, therefore, it is for the Commission to determine the priority which is assigned to specific cases.

Parades Commission

23. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the work of the Parades Commission. [49041]

Mr. Ingram: The Government are satisfied that the Parades Commission have approached their task in an even-handed and impartial manner. We support the work of the Commission, in particular acknowledging the difficult decisions they have to make, and we would urge everyone in Northern Ireland to give them similar backing.

National Health Service

25. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects NHS waiting lists in Northern Ireland to fall to the level of 1 May 1997. [49043]

Mr. Worthington: I am pleased to say that the waiting lists for hospital inpatient treatment in Northern Ireland have already fallen below the level of 1 May 1997. At that date there were about 46,000 waiting for treatment compared with just over 45,500 at the end of March 1998. The Government remain committed to reducing the lists in Northern Ireland to 39,000 by 31 March 1999.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the spending priorities for the NHS in Northern Ireland. [49018]

Mr. Worthington: We will be spending over £1.7 billion on health and social services in Northern Ireland this year. Our priorities include £13 million to reduce waiting lists; £2 million to develop cancer services, with a commitment to a new pioneering cancer centre at Belfast City hospital; £5 million for the further development of community care services; and £4 million for services for children.

Disability Living Allowance

26. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the working of the Disability Living Allowance. [49044]

Mr. Worthington: There are some difficulties associated with Disability Living Allowance which were highlighted in the Northern Ireland Audit Office Report "The Administration of Disability Living Allowance by the Social Security Agency" dated 22 January 1998. In response, the Agency has prepared a challenging Action Plan to improve quality and delivery of service on Disability Living Allowance and this is being implemented.

Beef Export Ban

28. Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the likely impact on farm incomes of the ending of the beef export ban on shipments from Northern Ireland. [49046]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The raising of the ban on the export of Northern Ireland beef should result in an improvement in beef producers' incomes in the longer term. It is difficult to be precise on the size of the impact because it is unknown how quickly and to what extent old markets will be regained and new ones developed.

DEFENCE

Departmental Environmental Policies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current energy consumption of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans he has to include energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [50087]

Mr. Spellar: Annual consumption of energy figures including those for MOD are reported by Departments to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions as part of the overall Government Energy Efficiency Campaign. A summary of the information provided by Departments is in the Library of the House.

The MOD target for energy savings is the same as that for the rest of the Government Estate and reflects current Government Policy, which is that 20 per cent. savings should be achieved by 31 March 2000 when measured against 1991 consumption as the base line. MOD has to date achieved an 18.6 per cent. reduction in Energy Expenditure 1996–97 relative to 1990–91.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has introduced to discourage car use by his Department's employees. [50085]

Mr. Spellar: The use of public transport for commuting purposes is already encouraged by the availability of interest free loans to purchase season tickets and bicycles and the provision of cycle parking facilities. Departmental Travel Regulations require the most cost effective methods of transport to be used for official business. Measures to encourage greater use of public transport for duty travel as well as commuting to and from the work place are being considered during the preparation of the department's Green Transport Plans. The plans will draw on guidance issued by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions last Autumn.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled; and what targets he has set for increasing this percentage. [50095]

Mr. Spellar: My Department is committed to the development of waste minimisation programmes which include recycling schemes. However, owing to the local nature of these schemes, statistics on recycling are not held centrally. Target setting will be considered as work is taken forward in the context of the Government's model framework for Greening Government Operations.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activities relating to his environmental responsibilities his green Minister has undertaken since being appointed. [50086]

Mr. Spellar: Since assuming responsibility for the development and promotion of Government environmental policy in my Department, I have attended the Green Ministers' fora and had bilateral discussions with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, covering a wide range of environmental issues. I have also given both oral and written evidence to the Environmental Audit Committee on my Department's management of its environmental responsibilities.

I have had several meetings with other Government Department Ministers to discuss a range of historical pollution and contamination problems at home and abroad. I have met a number of environmental groups to discuss their concerns in the context of the Strategic Defence Review.

I have chaired my Department's Ministerial Steering Group on the Environment and Energy Efficiency to consider how emerging Government policy initiatives on the environment are to be taken forward in the Ministry of Defence.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to raise awareness of environmental issues within his Department; and what training will be made available to staff. [50094]

Mr. Spellar: Environmental policy matters are cascaded throughout the Department by means of a well developed environmental committee and focal point structure. Awareness of environmental issues and policy guidance is also promoted through regular updating of my Department's Environmental Manual and through internal publications such as "Sanctuary" which is devoted to conservation issues on the defence estate. In the case of energy use, an energy warden scheme has been put in place to provide information and practical advice on energy savings measures to departmental consumers. In addition, a programme of environmental protection training courses open to both Service and civilian personnel has been established. The purpose of the programme is both to raise awareness of environmental issues and to provide staff with the necessary competence to ensure compliance with environmental regulation.

RAF Newton

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's future plans for the use of the site of RAF Newton in Nottinghamshire following the completion of the Defence Review. [50614]

Mr. Spellar: There are no current plans to change the use of RAF Newton and it is envisaged that the units currently based at the station will remain there for the foreseeable future. Disposal plans for the surplus areas of RAF Newton will be finalised as part of the detailed follow-up work to the Strategic Defence Review.

Trident

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 1076, if the figure of 48 nuclear warheads to be deployed on each Trident submarine is a minimum figure. [50617]

Mr. George Robertson: The figure of 48 is the exact number of warheads that we plan to deploy on our Trident submarines.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been (a) the maximum and (b) the average number of nuclear warheads deployed on each Trident submarine since HMS 'Vanguard' entered service. [50618]

Mr. George Robertson: Trident submarines have typically deployed on deterrent patrol with 60 warheads.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to remove Trident nuclear warheads from Coulport for dismantling in order to implement the Strategic Defence Review; and what proportion of warheads are to be removed; [50565]

(2) what plans he has to reduce the number of Trident nuclear warheads currently deployed on Vanguard class submarines in order to implement the Strategic Defence Review; and what proportion of warheads are to be removed. [50566]

Mr. George Robertson: 12 warheads are to be removed from each of the three Trident submarines currently in service during their next programmed docking in the warhead fitting facility at Coulport. This process will be completed before the end of the year. Production of warheads to meet previous plans had not been completed and we do not need to decommission any warheads to implement Strategic Defence Review changes. Adjustments are being made to future warhead production, refurbishment and decommissioning plans to maintain an operationally available stockpile of fewer than 200 warheads.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the fourth Trident submarine, Vengeance, is scheduled to carry out contractors' sea trials in Scotland. [50567]

Mr. George Robertson: Contractors' sea trials are scheduled to take place early next year.

Territorial Army

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) each TA and cadet centre in the UK, (b) the TA and cadet units based in each centre and (c) the other military and non-military organisations which use each centre. [50555]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 14 July 1998]: I will write to the hon. Member with a list of TA and Cadet centres, and the units that are based in each. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library. However, we do not hold centrally records of other military and non-military users of such centres and so the information in part (c) of the hon. Gentleman's question could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Staff College, Camberley

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation he proposes to re-site in the Staff College buildings at Camberley; and if he will make a statement. [50838]

Dr. Reid: A range of options for the future of the former Staff College Buildings at Camberley are being studied. No proposals have yet been put to Ministers, and no decisions have been taken.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rear Seat Belts

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring procedures he has put in place to evaluate the effectiveness of the current Rear Seat Belt Awareness Campaign. [50320]

Dr. Strang: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has commissioned market research both before and after the campaign to ascertain awareness and understanding of its advertising message to belt up in the back.

In addition, the biannual surveys carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory, on behalf of my Department, will continue to monitor seat belt wearing rates both in the front and rear of cars.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents of damage to sites of special scientific interest have occurred in each year since 1992. [50140]

Angela Eagle: Details of the number of incidents of damage to Sites of Special Scientific Interest are published in the annual reports produced by the respective country agencies, English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Countryside Council for Wales, all of which are held in the Library of the House.

Such figures are not presently available for areas of special scientific interest in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department (a) has issued and (b) intends to issue to the wildlife agencies responsible for monitoring and supervising sites of special scientific interest for the discharge of their duties. [50141]

Angela Eagle: The wildlife agencies have a statutory duty to notify Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs).

The Department issued a Code of Guidance for SSSIs in 1983. this explained the provisions contained in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for the protection of special sites, including the notification of sites. We will review the need for further guidance in England and Wales following consultation on improvements to the protection and management of SSSIs.

The financial relationship between the DETR and English Nature is governed by a financial memorandum. This has recently been reviewed and a revised text came into operation at the start of the current financial year. We will adopt a management statement describing the strategic relationship between the Department and English Nature as soon as we receive Treasury and Cabinet Office approval of the text.

English Nature adheres to the procedures set out in "Government Accounting", and is notified by the Department of changes to this guidance from time to time. English Nature is also notified of Ministerial priorities when the allocation of grant-in-aid for each financial year is announced.

These are matters for the territorial departments in relation to the wildlife agencies in Wales and Scotland.

Wildlife

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his proposed timetable for bringing forward new legislation to strengthen the protection of wildlife. [50139]

Angela Eagle: We are presently considering a number of means for improving the protection and management of Sites of Special Scientific Interest. There is likely to be consultation later this year. We are also examining what further measures are needed to strengthen wildlife protection. If legislation proves necessary we will look for a suitable opportunity.

Donana Pollution Incident

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what technical assistance the UK has provided to the Spanish authorities to tackle the Donana pollution incident. [50075]

Angela Eagle: A number of UK bodies have offered assistance to the Spanish authorities in the aftermath of the Donana pollution incident. The Natural Environment Research Council Institutes and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds made a joint visit to Donana soon after the incident to assess the situation and have been able to make a number of suggestions for future monitoring. English Partnerships and the Environment Agency are also arranging to visit Donana in the near future to assess what advice and assistance they may be able to offer the Spanish authorities.

Birds of Prey (Culling Licences)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what licences have been issued over the past year for the killing of (a) peregrines and (b) sparrowhawks; and for what reasons they were issued. [50455]

Angela Eagle: Details of licences issued under Section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to kill and take birds are contained in Reports by the United Kingdom to the European Community on Derogations under Article 9 of the Directive on the Conservation of Wild Birds (79/409/EEC). The latest report for which figures are available covers 1996, and a copy of this report is in the Library of the House.

Allotments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many individual allotments existed in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) the last year for which figures are available. [50656]

Angela Eagle: The information on the number of individual allotments in each of the years referred to is not available.

The English Allotments Survey published in 1997 by the National Society of Allotments and Leisure Gardeners Limited and Anglia Polytechnic University and financed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions provides the following data on allotment numbers:

1970—532,964 in England and Wales

1977—497,793 in England and Wales

1978—479,301 in England and Wales

1996—296,923 in England plus an estimated 30,000 allotments in Wales.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many acres of land were devoted to public allotments in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) the last year for which figures are available. [50657]

Angela Eagle: The information on the acreage of land devoted to public allotments in each of the years referred to is not available.

The English Allotments Survey published in 1997 by the National Society of Allotments and Leisure Gardeners Limited and Anglia Polytechnic University and financed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions provides the following data on allotment acreage:

1970—58,242 in England and Wales

1977—49,873 in England and Wales

1978—49,105 in England and Wales

1996—25,393 in England.

Road Signs

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on commercial advertising in London upon land having public highway or trunk road status; and how that policy and the factors underlying it have changed since 1990; [50562]

(2) if he will make it his policy that no private street signs will be licensed upon land having trunk road status unless provided in the interests of public safety; [50561]

(3) if he will make a statement on his policy on the granting of licences for street signs or advertising promoting commercial or sectional interests upon land having public highway or trunk road status. [50560]

Dr. Strang [holding answer 14 July 1998]: All applications for the erection of advertisements on or near public roads are considered with reference to their likely effects on public safety and amenity at their proposed location. Local planning authorities are responsible for advertisement control within the rules laid down in the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992, and the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) (Amendment) Regulation 1994. The Department's advice to local planning authorities remains as in DOE Circular 5/92. Appendix B sets out the public safety factors to be considered for advertisements on land alongside motorways, trunk roads and other roads. Highway authorities, including the Secretary of State as highway authority for trunk roads, will take similar considerations into account in deciding whether advertisements should be permitted on land and street furniture that they own.

Train Operating Companies

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount is currently paid to the train operating companies in subsidy by the Government; and what controls are exerted by the Government on how this money is spent by the train operating companies. [50668]

Dr. Strang: Support for Passengers Rail Services (SPRS) paid to and premium payments received from train operating companies by the Franchising Director are set out in the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising's Annual Report 1997–98, a copy of which is in the House Library. Where applicable, payments to train operating companies by Passenger Transport Executives are also shown, with further information on PTE support shown in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Annual Report 1998, a copy of which is also in the House Library. The franchise agreements specify the services and standards the train operating companies are contractually required to provide in return for support payments.

Railtrack

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals the Rail Regulator has to increase controls on Railtrack. [50669]

Dr. Strang: Last Autumn the Rail Regulator negotiated changes to Railtrack's network licence which strengthened the company's accountability to the Regulator and increased his enforcement powers. The Regulator has now completed his consultation exercise on Railtrack's recent Network Management Statement. He announced earlier today that, in the light of that consultation, Railtrack has given further commitments to improve network performance and track quality; to address network capacity problems; and to strengthen its processes for meeting the needs of train operators and funders.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Rail Regulator proposes to ensure that Railtrack provides value for money over the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [50670]

Dr. Strang: The Rail Regulator has made it clear that he will ring-fence Railtrack's core regulated activity of managing the domestic network and that any diversification by Railtrack Group plc should not impact on the access charges which may be levied by Railtrack plc.

Rural Affairs

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1998, Official Report, column 286, on what occasions since 1 January he has (a) issued press releases and (b) made public statements on a proposed Rural White Paper. [50765]

Mr. Meacher: We have issued no press releases and made no public statements about a proposed Rural White Paper. We are continuing to consider the best way of presenting our rural policies.

Transport Projects

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has received from local authorities covering the Maidenhead constituency on transport projects qualifying under the category of specific transport projects for which the Treasury recently allocated £500 million; [50849]

(2) when he expects to announce details of the allocation of the £500 million for specific transport projects recently announced by the Treasury. [50852]

Dr. Strang: The Budget included provision for an additional £500 million for public transport over the next three years.

The Deputy Prime Minister announced in the House on 20 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1539–42, that the Government would be providing London Transport with an additional £365 million over the next two years. At least £300 million of this is for investment in the core network, and it will boost investment over the next two years to £1 billion. London Transport announced the details of their Tube 2000 investment programme on 11 June.

New funding of £50 million per year for three years is being made available across the UK for public transport in rural areas. England's share of this is £41.7 million. A provisional allocation to local authorities of the additional support for rural bus services (£32.5m this financial year) was announced on 28 April. Detailed proposals in this connection were laid before the House on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 206, including the allocation of £50,584 to Windsor and Maidenhead and £77,436 to Wokingham. As announced in my answer on 3 July 1998, Official Report, columns 285–86, we are now consulting on the arrangements for the £5 million Rural Bus Challenge competition which also forms part of this new money. Within the £50 million, £5 million has been set aside for community-based transport initiatives. In England, resources will be channelled through the Rural Development Commission. We are discussing with the Rural Development Commission how best to make use of these resources and have consulted the Local Government Association. An announcement will follow shortly.

No representations have been received from the local authorities covering the Maidenhead constituency on transport projects encompassed by the £500m provision.

Road Use Revenue

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will express the total revenue raised by the Treasury from road-user taxation, including vehicle excise duty, fuel tax and new vehicle tax as a proportion of the total amount spent on maintaining the road network in the most recent year for which figures are available. [50885]

Dr. Strang: In 1996–97 £2.28 billion was spent on maintaining both the trunk and local authority road networks. In the same financial year £21.1 billion (some 925%) was raised in road-user taxation.

Radioactive Waste Management

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the conclusions of the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement. [51257]

Mr. Meacher: I have today published the report of the Steering Committee guiding the Financial Management and Policy Review of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee (RWMAC). Copies of the report which was completed in March 1997, including a list of those who responded to the consultation exercise, have been placed in the Library of the House.

The conclusion of the prior options stage of the Review were announced by my predecessor on 28 November 1996. This was that RWMAC should continue to operate for at least the next five years. It was also announced at that time that the Steering Committee would go on to consider the structure and operation of RWMAC. The report being published today sets out the considerations leading to the decision that RWMAC should continue, and the Steering Committee's proposals for modifying the structure and operation of the Committee to suit current requirements.

The Government welcome the majority of the Steering Committee's recommendations but have given further consideration to two of the recommendations; the membership template and the deletion of 'civil' from RWMAC's terms of reference to reflect its practice, now well established under invitation, of also considering the management of radioactive waste from defence establishments.

The membership template has been amended to place a greater emphasis on environmental and social perspectives and lay perspectives. The new membership template printed below will become an attachment to all copies of the Steering Committee's report.

Consideration of the proposed amendment to RWMAC's terms of reference will be deferred until the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology has reported on nuclear waste management.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have accepted all the other recommendations made by the Steering Committee.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Building Europe Together

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the publications printed under the Building Europe Together project and released in the United Kingdom. [46068]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following publications were produced under the Building Europe Together programme: fact sheets on some of the areas covered by the Amsterdam Treaty; booklets entitled, "The Citizen's guide to the Treaty of Amsterdam" and "The Treaty of Amsterdam: Questions and Answers". The factsheets were made available on the internet. The booklets were available from the Commission Representation in the UK.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48669]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1997, FCO replied to 84.7 per cent. (17,997) of the 21,248 letters received from members of the public within 20 working days of receipt.

FCO Departments record the dates of receipt of letters from members of the public and issue of replies, and the proportion of their replies issued within the 20 day target.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49803]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1998]: This Department is able to receive electronic correspondence from hon. Members and members of the public via an interactive form on its website (www.fco.gov.uk). Where possible, we are happy to reply electronically.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's role in discussions relating to the future of the European structural funds for the period 2000 to 2006. [48775]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 2 July 1998 Official Report column 240.

Centre for Citizens and the Media

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the (a) mandate and (b) budget of the Centre for Citizens and the Media in DGX. [49646]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The centre for citizens and the media and DGX aims to increase dialogue between the Commission and the general public and journalists. It is responsible for organising programmes for groups visiting the Commission (over 34,000 people in 1997); selecting sponsored visitors from third countries (with the EP); managing the public inquiries service "Europe Direct"; setting up a Commission call centre to respond to telephone inquiries; managing the Commission's internal databases; training speakers available to give talks on the EU and the euro; supporting training on European affairs for journalists; developing links between twinned towns. The centre's budget for 1998 is 4.9 mecu (£3.26 million at current prices). It manages an additional 10 mecu (£6.66 million) for town-twinning projects.

EU Funds

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of the (a) organisations and (b) projects which received funding under budget line A-3024 and A-3104 for 1997. [49643]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 67.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 13 and 14 July. [51259]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information is as follows.

A General Affairs Council was held in Brussels on 13 July. The Council agreed the 37 A Points listed in document 10255/98 and noted the European Parliament's Resolutions, Decisions and Opinions taken at its part sessions in Strasbourg on 15–19 June and 1–2 July, and listed in documents 9471/98 and 9533/98. Copies of both these documents will be placed in the House Library as soon as they become available.

The Council endorsed the Austrian Presidency's handling plan and timetable for the Agenda 2000 package. Over lunch Ministers discussed the working methods of the General Affairs Council.

The mandates for negotiations with Norway and Iceland over their continued involvement with Schengen after entry into force of Amsterdam were briefly discussed. A few points remain to be settled; but the Presidency made clear that it would aim for the adoption of the mandates before the summer.

Ministers condemned the violation by Belarus of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations in its actions against Ambassadors' residences in Drozdy. As a signal of the seriousness with which it took the situation, the EU had already adopted a Common Position imposing an entry visa ban on all members of the Government and senior officials of the Republic of Belarus. The Council expressed its determination to adopt further measures should further violations of the Vienna Convention occur. It will continue to monitor the situation in Minsk and demanded concrete proposals from the Belarus authorities. The EU hoped that early action by the Belarusian Government to respect fully the Vienna Convention would enable a return to the status quo ante and facilitate the development of the more constructive EU/Belarus relationship which the EU wished.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the continuing violence and loss of life in Kosovo, particularly among the civilian population. The danger of a rapid widening of the crisis remains. The Council reiterated its call for an immediate cessation of all hostilities and the restart of a political process, with direct international involvement, between the parties. The Kosovo Albanian team for these talks must be able to speak authoritatively and therefore be fully representative of their community. The Council accordingly called on the leaders with the Kosovo Albanian community to unite and to make common cause to this end.

The Council recalled that a solution for Kosovo can be found neither through the maintenance of the status quo nor through independence, but through a special status, including a large degree of autonomy within the FRY. The Council welcomed the intention of the Contact Group to set in hand work, to which the EU is actively contributing, to define possible further elements for the future status of Kosovo with a view to making them available to the parties. It emphasised that international involvement in the dialogue remains an essential element of credible negotiations.

The Council discussed the situation in Albania. It strongly encouraged the Government of Prime Minister Nano to follow a policy of restraint and moderation in the Kosovo crisis, which is now more necessary than ever. It expressed its concern about the flow of arms from northern Albania to Kosovo Albanian armed groups. It called on all political organisations in Albania to support the policy of the Albanian government and to associate themselves with the line taken by the European Union on the Kosovo issue. At the same time it called upon the Albanian Government to increase its efforts to stop the flow of weapons from Albania to Kosovo.

The Council was encouraged by General Abubakar's commitment to national reconciliation leading to the restoration of democratic civilian rule and his decision to release a significant number of detainees. The Council urged General Abubakar to release all the remaining detainees and to announce his plans for the electoral process. They reiterated EU's readiness to support an inclusive political process.

The Council heard a report on the EU troika Ambassadors' visit to East Timor from 27–30 June. It paid tribute to the way the members of the troika handled the difficult situation which arose and agreed that their report and conclusions should continue to be followed up by the competent Council bodies.

The Council discussed the situation in Guinea Bissau and agreed that there was a need for humanitarian assistance and the opening of corridors for it to be delivered. It stressed the need for political and diplomatic solution to the problems and agreed that the EU should commit itself to a reconstruction programme on the basis of democratic conditions and the maintenance of the elections planned for this year and the next.

The Council adopted conclusions inviting COREPER and the Commission to solve rapidly the problems emerging from the ECJ's recent judgment on spending without a legal base.

The Council expressed the hope that the Conference nearing its conclusion in Rome would result in agreement to establish a credible International Criminal Court.

The UK and seven EU partners drew the Council's attention to a joint statement deploring the Commission's decision to impose provisional anti-dumping duties on imports of unbleached cotton fabric from six non-EU countries.

The first EU-Tunisia Association Council was held on 14 July, following the entry into force of the EU/Tunisia Association Agreement earlier this year. A dinner with the Tunisian Foreign Minister was held on 13 July. Ministers welcomed the new agreement, as part of wider moves towards a Euro-Mediterranean Free Trade Area by 2010, and discussed issues of common interest including developments in the middle east peace process, human rights, and inward investment.

The inaugural Co-operation Council under the terms of the Partnership and Co-operation Agreement (PCA), between the EU and Moldova took place on 14 July. Over a working breakfast, Ministers had an exchange of views on foreign policy issues of mutual interest (including the situation in Transdniestra) and EU/Moldova relations. The Council itself exchanged views on the implementation of the PCA and adopted the Rules of Procedure establishing the foundations for the future work of the Co-operation Council and Committee, as well as the Joint Work Programme for 1998–99.

The first EU/Mexico Joint Council was held on 14 July. It renewed the EU and Mexico's shared commitment to closer ties, including through the substantial and reciprocal liberalisation of trade in goods and services.

Nazi Persecution Victims

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will benefit from the United Kingdom's contribution to the International Fund for Needy Victims of Nazi Persecution. [51260]

Mr. Robin Cook: I have announced that the UK's £1 million contribution to the Fund will be divided in the following way: two thirds will go through the World Jewish Restitution Organisation to the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee for projects providing medical care to needy survivors of Nazi persecution in the Ukraine, Russia, Belarus and Moldova. The remaining third will go to the Board of Deputies of British Jews for needy survivors in the UK. Non-Jewish survivors will also be able to apply to these organisations for assistance.

Nigeria

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning changes to the timetable for a handover to civilian rule in Nigeria. [50719]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have heard nothing further since my answer to the right hon. and learned Member's previous question of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 580.

North Korea

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to North Korea following the latest incidents involving infiltration into South Korean territory. [50717]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK does not have diplomatic relations with North Korea and no talks between officials have been held since these incidents.

In his capacity as a member of the United Nations Command, our Defence Attaché in Seoul has taken part in the investigations into these events. He is also participating in the General Officer talks between the US-led United Nations Command and the North Korean People's Army, to discuss the 1953 armistice agreement and related issues arising from the latest incidents.

North Korea has recently expressed an interest in political dialogue with the EU. Any such dialogue would need to include the subject of the recent incursions by the North.

Iraq

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in inspecting Iraqi missile warheads alleged to contain traces of VX. [50721]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 24 June, UNSCOM Chairman Richard Butler informed the UN Security Council that results of tests on missile warhead fragments removed from Iraq earlier this year had uncovered evidence that Iraq put VX and VX stabiliser into the warheads. These tests were carried out at a Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) accredited laboratory in the US.

UNSCOM is now arranging for further tests to be made on fresh samples at other accredited laboratories in France and Switzerland.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in negotiations on the development of an international agreement on biological weapons. [50718]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since 1994 an ad hoc group of states parties has been meeting in Geneva to consider measures to strengthen the 1972 Biological Weapons Convention. UK officials chair the key sessions on compliance measures at these negotiations. The ad hoc group has made good progress and is now working on the rolling text of a draft Protocol to the Convention. 1998 has seen a significant intensification of the negotiations. Much detailed work remains to be done but the United Kingdom, together with its EU partners, believes that an effective package of measures could be agreed during 1999.

West Bank

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what developments there have been in discussions on the future status of land in the West Bank; and if he will make a statement. [50720]

Mr. Fatchett: Discussions on the second Israeli redeployment continue between the parties and the US. We await an Israeli response to the latest US proposals. The talks have been made more difficult by the recent announcement of the Israeli Government, proposing an extension to the municipal boundaries of Jerusalem to include certain territory on the West Bank. We regard this development as serious and damaging to the prospects for peace in the middle east. We supported a UN Security Council Presidential Statement to this effect on 13 July 1998.

Cyprus

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with Britain's EU partners concerning the proposed deployment of missiles in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [50722]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The intention of the Cyprus Government to deploy S300 missiles to Cyprus has been discussed with EU partners on a number of occasions. The overwhelming majority share UK concern that deployment would exacerbate tension in the region. We have expressed this concern to the Government of Cyprus and shall continue to do so.

Our views are widely shared internationally. In May this year, the G8 expressed concern that new developments in the military sphere, including any increase in force levels and the upgrading of sophisticated weaponry, would risk further raising tension in the region. The UN Security Council last month called on all parties to avoid any actions which might increase tension, including through the further expansion of military forces and armaments on Cyprus.

We continue to believe that there are better ways to assure the prosperity and security of Cyprus than an increase in armaments. Measures to reduce military tension have a role to play, but the best way is by means of a comprehensive political settlement. We continue to work actively in support of the UN-led peace process and we look to others, in particular the leaders of both Cypriot communities, to do the same.

Sierra Leone

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill) of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 580, to whom indemnities relative to the Sierra Leone arms investigation have been given. [50858]

Mr. Robin Cook: As is normal practice in investigations of this kind, indemnities have been granted in relation to any legal action taken against Sir Thomas Legg, Sir Robin Ibbs and the secretariat of the investigation.

British Overseas Territories

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to grant British citizenship to citizens of British Overseas Territories. [50886]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The possibility of granting citizenship to citizens of the Overseas Territories is under active discussion between all Departments involved. We are looking at the issue sympathetically, but more work needs to be done before any announcement can be made. The result of this review will be made public in the forthcoming White Paper on the Overseas Territories.

UNITA

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken in respect of the chief UNITA representative in the United Kingdom, Mr. Anibal Kandeya, to comply with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1127 (1997); and what knowledge his Department has of his whereabouts. [50447]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

An application from Mr. Kandeya for further leave to remain in the United Kingdom is currently under consideration. No action may be taken to deport or otherwise remove him until this application has been resolved. I understand that Mr. Kandeya remains in the United Kingdom and is in contact with my Department.

PRIME MINISTER

EU Cardiff Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what environmental issues were considered when planning and implementing the EU Cardiff Summit, in respect of (a) energy use, (b) transport arrangements and (c) use of recyclable materials for catering; and what actions were taken. [47882]

The Prime Minister: We tried wherever possible to take environmental issues into account when planning and implementing the European Council Meeting in Cardiff. Large multilateral meetings inevitably involve high energy consumption, because of the number of people involved (around 4,000 in this case), the equipment they use and the technical facilities involved. These included a media centre for the use of up to 2,500 people, interpretation facilities, extra lighting in the meeting rooms and in press briefing rooms for the use of the television crews. By using a self contained island site for the meeting and associated activities, we were able to keep use of cars to the minimum consistent with the normal courtesy to visiting Head of Governments and their security. The catering contractor used routinely has all paper, glass, steel and other metals collected for recycling.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what matters relating to radioactive releases from Sellafield were discussed with his Norwegian counterpart on 6 July; and what conclusions were reached. [49748]

The Prime Minister: During our meeting on 6 July, I reassured Prime Minister Bondevik that all discharges of radioactive material from Sellafield into European coastal waters were subject to licensing by the Environment Agency, that present levels were being reviewed and that levels were always set well within the threshold of what might pose a threat to public health. We agreed that our Environment Ministers should discuss the issue when they meet later this year.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks, (Mr. Hague) of 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 1066, what potential sources of the leak of the Strategic Defence Review will be considered by the leak inquiry. [50536]

The Prime Minister: The independent investigator appointed by the Cabinet Office to conduct the inquiry into the leak of the Strategic Defence Review will determine what sources should be considered by the leak inquiry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister when copies of the Strategic Defence Review were first provided to (a) Opposition parties and (b) the media. [50537]

The Prime Minister: Copies of the Strategic Defence Review were first given by the Government under the usual embargo terms to the Defence spokesmen for the Conservative and Liberal Democrat parties, the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) and the hon. and learned member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) at a meeting with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence at 11.00am on 8 July.

The media received their first copies from the Government at a Press Conference held at the Ministry of Defence Main Building at 1.15pm on 8 July. Attendance was restricted to those who had agreed to be locked in until sometime after my right hon. Friend had started his statement to the House of Commons.

These procedures are fully in line with the usual arrangements.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will amend the Ministerial Code to place a requirement on Ministers to correct significant factual inaccuracies. [50532]

The Prime Minister: Paragraph 1 of the Ministerial Code requires Ministers to give accurate and truthful information to Parliament, correcting any inadvertent error at the earliest possible opportunity.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what target his Office sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49820]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1.

Government Buildings (Passes)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) occasions on which and (b) reasons for which passes to Government buildings have been issued to persons not employed by or under contract to a Government Department. [50613]

The Prime Minister: Most Government Departments operate a system of entry control to their buildings based on an assessment of the risk to their assets, the sole or shared ownership and occupancy of the site, and whether the public have right of entry to it. Practice can vary considerably, therefore, between Government sites, but entry control requiring registration and the use of visitors' passes is commonplace. Such passes are normally issued on a daily basis and must be surrendered on departure from the premises. Holders of these passes may require escorting. Of course details of the thousands of such passes issued daily at all Government buildings throughout the country is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Car Parking Charges

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations members of the No. 10 Policy Unit have had with supermarket owners, their representatives or advisers concerning the possibility of taxes or charges on car parking spaces at out-of-town shopping centres and at supermarkets. [50158]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 94.

We have carried out an extensive consultation as part of the fundamental review of transport policy. My Ministers and I, and our special advisers, have met a large number of individuals and organisations and have attended a number of seminars to discuss a wide range of transport issues. The discussions and the written representations we received have played an important role in informing the development of our integrated transport policy, following our consultation document "Developing an Integrated Transport Policy: an Invitation to Contribute".

Roger Liddle

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what factors led him to appoint Mr. Liddle as his special adviser; and what are his responsibilities. [50347]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I considered a variety of factors when appointing the members of my Policy Unit, the most important of which was their ability to carry out the duties required of them effectively and well. His responsibilities include European policy and defence policy.

Derek Draper

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's current policy in respect of ministerial contact with Mr. Draper. [50348]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 94.

Legal Drugs Tsar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint a tsar to reduce the deaths and addictions caused by the mis-use of medicinal and other legal drugs. [50485]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 July 1998]: Misuse should occur only when prescribers or patients use medicines outside the authorised conditions. Doctors and other healthcare professionals are individually responsible for the products they prescribe and must be able to justify, if necessary, their prescribing decisions. In particular, prescribing over large quantities or for excessive periods could be taken up as a terms of service issue or by the General Medical Council as professional disciplinary matter.

Medicines are authorised for the United Kingdom market only after thorough and expert evaluation by the Medicines Control Agency, advised by the Committee on Safety of Medicines. The MCA continues to monitor the safety of medicines after they have been placed on the market and exposed to a greater population than in pre-authorisation tests. Medicines are authorised for use in very specific circumstances and any contraindications and warnings are shown clearly both to prescribers in the summary of product characteristics and to patients in information leaflets. We are satisfied that regulatory control, together with information and guidance to healthcare and patients, provides the necessary safeguards.

Civil Servants (Information)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance is given to members of his Policy Unit concerning participation in events held under Chatham House rules. [50465]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 July 1998]: Members of my Policy Unit are covered by the same rules as other civil servants, which are set out in the answer given to my hon. Friend by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 15 July 1998, Official Report, column 205.

CABINET OFFICE

Derek Draper

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 679, on how many occasions his office received draft articles written by Mr. Derek Draper for scrutiny prior to their publication in the press since 1 May 1997. [50837]

Mr. Mandelson: None.

Lobbyists

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the lobbying firms to which he routinely faxes (a) press releases and (b) other information about his ministerial activities. [50733]

Mr. Mandelson: None.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio on what occasions he has met (a) Mr. Derek Draper, (b) GPC Market Access representatives, (c) Mr. Roger Liddle and (d) Lawson, Lucas Mendelsohn representatives in respect of his ministerial responsibilities. [50734]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) on 10 July 1998, Official Report, columns 678–79. I meet Mr. Liddle and other members of the No. 10 Policy Unit on a regular basis during the course of my official duties.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Small Businesses

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to reduce the level of bureaucracy affecting small business; and if he will make a statement. [49375]

Dr. David Clark: I am committed to publishing new guidance, produced by the Better Regulation Unit, which will require Government Departments to make an assessment of risk, cost and benefits of any new regulations affecting business, charities, consumers and, in particular, small business. I hope to publish this guidance by the end of the summer.

In addition, the Access Business Group, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, (which includes representatives of central Government, business and local government) is continuing its work to make the regulatory system more transparent, accessible and helpful.

At the European level, I am working with the European Commission to establish a new mechanism for consulting business direct on new regulatory proposals. A pilot test panel of European businesses, agreed under the UK Presidency, will enable the voice of British business, including small firms, to be heard in Brussels and help reduce unnecessary bureaucracy.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Olympic Bid 2012

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment the Government have made of London's capability to host the Olympic Games in 2012. [50234]

Mr. Banks: The British Olympic Association has decided that the next bid for the Olympic Games should be London-based. Like the BOA, the Government is determined that any bid should be of the highest possible quality. My Department is already working closely with the BOA who are conducting comprehensive studies on what is already in place and what needs to be in place to mount a winnable bid, which might well be for the 2012 Games. The BOA makes the nomination in respect of this country and ultimately the decision is entirely a matter for the International Olympic Committee.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what target he sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49832]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of the Public Service on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the e-mail address of his Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49834]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Department's Support Unit can be contacted at the following e-mail address: msu@culture.gov.uk.

However, all DCMS Ministers can be contacted at their own e-mail addresses which are published on my Department's website (www.culture.gov.uk) as follows:

chris.smith@culture.gov.uk mark.fisher@culture.gov.uk tony.banks@culture.gov.uk
tom.clarke@culture.gov.uk.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will attend the 1998 Commonwealth Games in Malaysia; and if he will make a statement. [49964]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Government will be represented by a Minister from DCMS. I know the games will be a great success, and I extend my very best wishes to all the British competitors.

NESTA

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the process whereby Lord Puttnam was appointed chairman of NESTA; who made the decision; what consultations were carried out; what are his terms of employment and salary; and what is his budget for staff and expenses. [50737]

Mr. Chris Smith: The process for the appointment of the Chairman of NESTA was based on the principles set down by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. Potential candidates were generated from several sources, including a widespread consultation exercise in which over 250 bodies were asked to suggest names, advertisements in national newspapers and suggestions from within Government. All candidates were considered objectively against the same criteria. Lord Puttnam was one of a number who were interviewed by a panel with independent membership. On the basis of its consideration of written applications and of its interviews, the panel recommended to me that Lord Puttnam was eminently suitable for appointment and, in the light of this he was appointed by me after further consultation with colleagues in Government.

Lord Puttnam has been appointed for a period of three years from 13 July 1998, at a salary of £22,000 per annum for two days' work per week. The budget for NESTA's staff and expenses will be a matter for NESTA's Board, within the resources available to them. The National Lottery Act 1998 allows me to place a limit or limits on NESTA's running costs expenditure, including staffing costs. I have not currently set any such limit. I and my Ministerial colleagues have however repeatedly made clear that we see NESTA and a slimline, unbureaucratic body employing no more than thirty staff.

British Holidaymakers

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the latest statistics on the numbers of British people taking holidays (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) abroad; and what is his estimate of the current spending difference. [50744]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The British Tourist Authority (BTA) collects statistics on the number of British people taking holidays in the United Kingdom and abroad in its annual British National Travel Survey.

The BTA has published the figures for 1997, the latest year for which information is available, in the April 1998 edition of "Tourism Intelligence Quarterly": these figures show that the British spent £17,220m on holidays abroad of four or more nights, £12,410m more than the £4,810m they spent on holidays of four or more nights in Britain.

Information on short break holidays of less than four nights will be available later in the Summer when the national tourist boards publish their annual United Kingdom Tourism Survey.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Learning Disabilities

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she proposes to take to improve the standards of health services for people with learning disabilities in Northern Ireland. [49978]

Mr. Worthington: People with a learning disability have access to the full range of health services in Northern Ireland, in keeping with the Government's social inclusion policy. We are committed to continuous improvement of the standards of these services. Our agenda for improvement is set out in "Well Into 2000", published by the Department of Health and Social Services in 1997.

Railways

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if her Department will conduct an investigation into the number and thoroughness of safety checks made by Northern Ireland Railways; and if she will make a statement. [49980]

Mr. Paul Murphy: On 7 July 1998 my noble Friend Lord Dubs, Minister for the Environment in Northern Ireland, announced the appointment of Mr. Christopher Hall, one of Her Majesty's Principal Inspector of Railways to review the conduct and outcome of the current NIR inquiries into 3 recent railways accidents in Northern Ireland and to make recommendation on the further steps, if any, which may need to be taken to address identified safety deficiencies.

The Minister also announced that Northern Ireland Railways would be commissioning a wider safety scrutiny of NIR operations under terms of reference to be agreed with HM Railway Inspectorate. A senior Railways Inspector will help oversee the wider scrutiny which will include NIR's safety procedures and checks. The main findings and recommendations of the inquiry and the NIR audit will be made public.

I have arranged for a copy of the terms of reference of the inquiry to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what actions the Department of Environment is taking to acquire additional funding for Northern Ireland Railways under the Private Finance Initiative. [49979]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Department of the Environment is examining with Northern Ireland Railways, the Department of Finance and Personnel and HM Treasury the desirability and practicability of a Private Finance Initiative solution for the replacement of suburban rolling stock and for the provision of integrated bus and rail ticketing and related services.

This consideration is ongoing.

Selective Education

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 15 June 1998, Official Report, columns 4–5, what is the exact remit of the major research project on the effects of the selective system on secondary education in Northern Ireland. [49997]

Mr. Worthington: The terms of reference for the major research project on the effects of the selective system of secondary education in Northern Ireland are as follows:

1. To investigate the effects on pupils and their families, teachers, schools and the community of the existing selective structure of secondary education in Northern Ireland, in order to provide a better basis for informed debate on the future structure of secondary education. Particular attention needs to be given to the identification of any differences in opportunity and performance in respect of different socio-economic groups, and especially between the constituent parts of the Northern Ireland community, which may result from the present system and structures. The study should also examine the inter-related effects of selection and open enrolment.
2. To prepare a Final Report setting out the key findings, supported by quantitative and qualitative evidence, and highlighting the main issues emerging for consideration in light of the research. This report should draw together all the relevant aspects, but may be supported by more detailed papers as necessary. Interim Reports on specific aspects of the project should be prepared and presented to the Department on a schedule to be agreed at the outset of the assignment. The main focus should be on the effects of the selective structure of the secondary sector, though attention should also be given to the effects of the Transfer Procedure. The study should consider how well the present structure serves to promote learning through fostering values and attitudes; raising standards of learning, and providing opportunities for personal development and fulfilment.

The research team should consult with the DENI Inspectorate where appropriate. The following points should be covered in the investigation and the report:

I Pupils

a. effects of selection on achievement at GCSE level for all groups, including comparison of patterns of achievement by those of similar ability who attend selective and non-selective secondary schools;

b. effect on patterns of school leavers' destinations, including routes into employment, FE, HE and training and

c. effects on motivation, self-esteem and social attitudes.

II Teachers:

a. effects on teachers' perceptions and expectations of pupils; and

b. effects on teacher motivation and performance.

III Secondary Schools:

a. for both selective and non-selective secondary schools:

opportunities and constraints in the curriculum, and in particular an assessment of the extent of which selective and non-selective schools provide alternative pathways which meet the different needs of pupils, and the extent to which academic, vocational and pastoral provision are appropriate to the capabilities and needs of all pupils;

an analysis of the extent and impact of transfer of pupils between selective and non-selective schools; and the extent to which NI has more small secondary schools than would be necessary in a non-selective system, and the implications, if any;

b. For non-selective schools:

trends in enrolment, and especially the implications of a reduced proportion of higher achieving pupils attending these schools as a result of the increased intakes to selective schools consequent on open enrolment;

the extent to which the performance of non-selective schools reflects the quality of their intake; analysis of the changes in the pattern of ability levels on intake over the last ten years, and the resulting effects on performance; and the restoration of pupil self-confidence and motivation in Key Stage 3.

c. for selective schools:

the extent to which the performance of selective schools reflects the quality of their intake;

the extent to which selective schools have adapted their curricular provision to address the wider range of abilities attending these schools as a result of open enrolment; and sustaining performance of lower, achieving pupils.

IV Primary Schools

a. the researchers should consult with the DENI Inspectorate and CCEA on their findings on the effects of the Transfer Procedure on the implementation of the curriculum, and the nature and content of learning in Key Stage 2.

b. the extent of coaching, the reasons why it is sought, and the costs and other implications for pupils, parents and schools; and

c. the consequences of perceptions of transfer procedure performance for enrolment patterns of primary schools.

V Society

a. the effects on attitudes to education in both young people and adults;

b. an analysis of the reasons why some parents choose not to enter their children for the transfer tests; and

c. the effects of selection on how individuals are perceived by parents, employers, and tertiary education and training providers.

Assembly

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to transfer responsibility for decisions regarding the future of hospitals in Northern Ireland to the Northern Ireland Assembly. [49983]

Mr. Paul Murphy: As envisaged by the Belfast Agreement [Cd 3883], the Government intend to bring forward legislation shortly which will provide for the transfer to the Northern Ireland Assembly of full legislative and executive authority in respect of those matters currently within the responsibility of the six Northern Ireland Government Departments. This will include the transfer of responsibility for decisions regarding the future of hospitals in Northern Ireland.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if students from Northern Ireland holding British-Irish dual nationality will have their fourth-year fees waived if they attend a Scottish institution of higher education. [49984]

Mr. Worthington: No. Eligibility for support towards tuition fees is based on a residence requirement, not nationality.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures the Department of Health and Social Services is taking to ensure that equipment in general practitioner surgeries will be millennium compliant by 31 December. [49981]

Mr. Worthington: The Department has written to all GP practices to raise awareness of the Year 2000 issues. It has also facilitated the establishment by the 4 Health and Social Services boards of a special inter-Board Year 2000 Primary Care Group to co-ordinate action and advice necessary to ensure a proper response to the Year 2000 problem across the whole of primary care.

Guidance on Year 2000 has already been issued to all GP practices and further guidance specified to embedded systems in GP practices is currently being prepared for issue.

The inter-Board group is arranging for a detailed Year 2000 audit of selected exemplar practices. Results from this audit will be used to inform other practices and will provide a basis for awareness-training for practice staff during Autumn 1998.

A detailed questionnaire has been issued by HSS Boards to each GP practice seeking information by end-July 1998 on Year 2000 compliance progress.

The Department will continue to monitor Boards' progress in respect of GP practice Year 2000 compliance.

[50191]

Irish Language

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the number of people in Northern Ireland who speak Irish. [50225]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 14 July 1998]: The most reliable information is from the last Census in 1991 when a total of 142,003 people in Northern Ireland claimed some degree of ability in the Irish language with 131,974 indicating an ability to speak Irish. Revised figures will be available after the next Census in 2001.

Narey Report

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress the Northern Ireland Prison Service has made in implementing the recommendation of the Narey report which was laid before this House on 2 April. [51261]

Mr. Ingram: The Narey Report contained 59 recommendations mainly concerned with improving security at HMP Maze. Management of Maze has made considerable progress in taking forward those recommendations.

Forty recommendations relate specifically to procedural and operational matters. Of these, 23 either have been, or are about to be, implemented. These include revised procedures for children's parties which will be applied to the annual summer children's parties over the coming weeks. Twelve require further work and five have been referred to Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons for advice.

Fifteen recommendations, some of which will involve the provision of additional physical security measures, relate to staff-search procedures, the staffing and security arrangements for visits and the protection of the Block-roofs. A considerable amount of work has already been done by the three working groups and further work is in hand. In particular enhanced searching and training has been introduced and a new system of roof protection has been devised and is being piloted.

Four recommendations dealt mainly with matters which the Northern Ireland Prison Service was required to consider. Two have been implemented and a third awaits greater clarity on the future of the prison in the medium term. The post of Governor has been advertised but as yet a suitable candidate has not been found, and other options are being pursued.

The Narey Report pointed the way forward for improving security at HMP Maze. A good deal of progress has been made. The prison is now a safer and more secure environment but we are determined to ensure that momentum for improvement will be maintained. To this end, and going beyond the Narey recommendations, we have introduced a Security Audit Unit to continuously monitor and report on security standards in all establishments.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what key performance targets have been set for the Industrial Research and Technology Unit for the financial year 1998–99. [51263]

Marjorie Mowlam: IRTU's key strategic targets are to raise the level of industrial R&D in Northern Ireland and to operate efficiently and effectively. In that context, the following key targets have been set for the agency for 1998–99.

1. To achieve new user participation in the Compete Programme of 10 per cent.
2. To increase the average industry contribution to projects funded under the Compete Programme by 1 per cent.
3. To achieve an increase in R&D projects under the pre-competitive Start Programme of 20 per cent.
4. To achieve full cost recovery for scientific services.
5. To maintain UKAS Accreditation for Scientific Services.

Business Development Service

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what key performance targets have been set for the Business Development Service to be achieved by April 1999. [51264]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Business Development Service is an executive agency of the Department of Finance and Personnel. I have set a number of key performance targets for the Agency to achieve by April 1999, as follows:

- at least 90 per cent. of customers to be satisfied with the services that they have received;
- at least 90 per cent. of customers to be satisfied with the way in which services were provided to them;
- to achieve levels of efficiency savings in total running costs of 3 per cent. over the allocation for 1997–1998;
- to demonstrate, on a national basis and within the context of service level agreements (where these apply), that the Agency would recover the full cost of its operations from its customers; and
- to achieve the Investors in People (IIP) standard by 31 March 1998.

Copies of the Agency's Corporate and Business Plans for 1998 to 2001 have been placed in the Library.

WALES

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49827]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 13 July 1998]: My Department has no plans at present to communicate routinely with Members of Parliament and the public by electronic means, although external e-mail facilities will be available later this year. The Department will use whatever form of communication is appropriate to suit particular circumstances.

Carmarthenshire NHS Trust

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 504, on the proposed location of the headquarters for the Carmarthenshire NHS trust, if he will publish the policy guidelines referred to. [50538]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The policy guidelines are those detailed in the Capital Investment Manual. The manual provides detailed guidance for each of the main stages of capital schemes. A copy is in the Library.

Dyfed Powys Health Authority

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 503, if he will provide a breakdown of the recurring additional cost of £285,000; and if this figure is an annual recurring figure. [50531]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The additional costs subject to management arrangements confirmed by the new Trust Board, if approved, will be:

Locality management	200,000
Standardisation	*75,000
Protected staff costs (eg travel costs)	10,000

The first two items will be annual recurring costs, while the third will be phased out in line with changing staff conditions.

Outdoor Education Centres

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on outdoor education centres in Wales; and what financial provision he has made for them in the current financial year. [50482]

Mr. Hain: Outdoor education centres are the responsibility of the operator, usually a local authority or an independent provider. No direct Welsh Office funding is provided for such centres.

Llanllyfni Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce (a) the results of the public inquiry and (b) his decision on Llanllyfni bypass. [50830]

Mr. Hain: The A487 Llanwnda-Llanllyfni scheme is subject to the current review of the Welsh trunk road programme. A report on the review will be published later this month.

Inward Investment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for further inward investment in Wales. [51212]

Mr. Hain: Our track record on inward investment is excellent. Over 300 overseas-owned manufacturing companies employing over 75,000 people in a range of industries including aerospace, consumer and office electronics, automotive components, chemicals and pharmaceuticals. These companies have been attracted by a number of factors, not least the quality of the workforce, high levels of productivity, a sound infrastructure and the assistance offered by the organisations involved.

The establishment of the National Assembly will strengthen Wales' ability to provide the right environment in which companies can succeed and prosper. Despite increasing competition for inward investment, the prospects for Wales remain good.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49094]

Ms Quin: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available within the Home Office since 1989, with revised guidance issued in August 1997.

Within this Department, where appropriate and possible, we are making use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women. For example, we have conducted research aimed at understanding the sentencing of women. Examples of bodies with which I have had correspondence include the Maternity Alliance, Women in Prison and the Mother's Union. Furthermore, the Cabinet Sub Committee on Women's Issues, on which I am the Home Office representative, reviews and develops the Government's policy and strategy on issues of special concern to women and oversees their implementation. The importance of seeing the implications for women of all policies is discussed.

Lobbyists

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the meetings (a) Ministers and (b) special advisers in his Department have had with lobbying companies since 1 May 1997. [49668]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Ministers, their Special Advisers and other civil servants meet many people in the course of their work. This properly includes meetings with interest groups outside Government; indeed one of the specific functions of Special Advisers is to liaise with such interest groups. This liaison is intended to help Ministers draw upon outside contributions—from academics, think-tanks, trade and industry associations, trade unions, lobby groups and others, as well as relevant experience from other countries—during the process of policy analysis and development. By convention, it is not the practice of Governments to make information on such meetings or their content publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997. Special Advisers and other civil servants must observe the requirements of propriety: for instance, they must not provide confidential information without authorisation or allow improper influence on policy. Any breach of these requirements could be a disciplinary offence.

CS Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 173–74, on CS spray, if he will place in the Library a copy of the report arising out of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency's literature review on possible alternative solvents at the end of 1997; [49998]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, columns 173–74, on CS spray, if he will place in the Library a copy of the specification issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers on the purchase of CS sprays; and on what date this specification was issued. [49999]

Mr. Michael: The specification issued jointly by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Police Scientific Development Branch was issued to chief police officers in March 1997. Copies of the specification and of the report arising out of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency's literature review of possible alternative solvents are available in the Library.

Non-criminal Prisoners

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost to the public purse of keeping non-criminal offenders (excluding fine defaulters) in prison for each year from 1992 to 1997. [50328]

Ms Quin: The information is not available in the form requested, as the Prison Service does not record costs by type of prisoner or offence. However, the average cost per uncrowded prison place, defined as current expenditure per baseline Certified Normal Accommodation, is one of the Prison Service's Key Performance Indicators. The figures for the years 1992 to 1997, in cash terms, are:

1992–93: £22,723

1993–94: £23,080

1994–95: £23,391

1995–96: £24,178

1996–97: £24,271.

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) men and (b) women convicted of (i) defaulting on a fine and (ii) non-criminal offences, excluding fine defaulting, were given custodial sentences in each year from 1992 to 1997. [50397]

Ms Quin: The available information is for the number of fine defaulters and non-criminal prisoners received into prisons. The table shows information for the years 1992 to 1997. Information on the total number of persons who default on the payment of a fine, and hence the proportion of those who are imprisoned, is not recorded centrally. It is also not recorded centrally what other orders are made in the circumstances in which persons are committed to prison as civil prisoners.

Receptions into prison: fine defaulters and non-criminals, by gender, 1992–97

	Fine defaulters		Non-criminals
	Males	Females	Males	Females

1995	18,787	1,370	3,611	178

[1] Provisional

Youth Justice Board

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) of 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 142, regarding the Chairman of the Youth Justice Board, if he will list the (a) legal qualifications and (b) experience of working with victims of crime of the successful candidate for Chairman of the Youth Justice Board; [50416]

(2) what assessment he made of the advantages and disadvantages of requiring political independence on the part of the Chairman of the Youth Justice Board. [50380]

Mr. Straw: The competition for Chair of the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales was conducted in line with guidance from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments ('Nolan' procedures).

The Information for Applicants for the Chair and Board Members of the Youth Justice Board describes the role of the Chair and sets out the following essential experience:

Knowledge of the youth justice system;

Senior management experience, including strategic and/or resource management at senior level; and Experience of working with Government.

It also states:

'Members of the board must include individuals who appear to the Home Secretary to have knowledge of the youth justice system. It will be desirable for Members of the Board between them to have experience of the following services: business; child and adolescent mental health services; courts dealing with young offenders; education services; legal services; police; probation; secure facilities for young people; social services; services for victims and young people.'

'Members will need to be objective and open-minded, able to act in an independent capacity and to deal with gender and race issues in a criminal justice context. They will need to be able to work effectively with providers of services for young people in the youth justice system. They will not be expected to represent particular professional associations or viewpoints.'

I am glad to say that the selection panels for the Youth Justice Board are at pains to ensure that all qualified candidates for appointment as Member (including the Chair) have the necessary impartiality for their task and fully meet the requirements for their posts specified above.

The Chair-designate is not a qualified lawyer, and has not worked directly with victims of crime (although he has played a significant role advising on the Government's policies for supporting victims).

Harassment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been prosecuted under section 4 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997; how many prosecutions have resulted in a conviction; and if he will make a statement. [50429]

Mr. Michael: Section 4 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997—Putting people in fear of violence—came into force on 16 June 1997.

Provisional court proceedings data for 1997 show 243 prosecutions under section 4 of the Act, which resulted in 76 convictions. In addition, 51 cautions have been recorded provisionally for the offence.

Non-custodial Sentences

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' statement to the Home Affairs Committee concerning the proportion of women prisoners and of young and adult prisoners who could be better dealt with through non-custodial sentences; and if he will make a statement. [50619]

Mr. Michael: We are aware of no evidence to support the contention that 30 per cent. of prisoners should "self-evidently not be in prison".

Evidence could only be obtained by detailed case by case analysis by experienced sentencers. Statistically, it would require over half of the offenders convicted of non-sexual or violent offences currently in prison to be given non-custodial sentences instead (including burglars, drug offenders and persistent offenders).

The Government are anxious to ensure that prison is used only when necessary and appropriate, so we are taking a range of measures to ensure that this is the case. In the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], we are introducing tough new community penalties for drug misusers and juvenile offenders, including the drug treatment and testing order, the action plan order and the reparation order. We are also keen to make greater use of modern technology and we have recently extended the areas where curfew orders can be enforced by electronic monitoring. Provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill will also enable short-term prisoners to be released early on home detention curfew.

Similarly, the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 contains provisions allowing courts to impose community service orders or curfew orders on fine defaulters and persistent petty offenders and to impose driving disqualifications for non-motoring offences and fine default. These provisions are being introduced initially through pilot schemes in Norfolk and Manchester which began in January. The Act also widens the power to impose attendance centre orders on fine defaulters to include 21–24 year olds.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics his Department collates on re-offending rates among offenders sentenced to fines; and if he will make a statement. [50598]

Mr. Michael: Reconviction rates within two years of sentence are calculated from time to time for all court disposals relating to standard list offences (all indictable and some more serious summary offences). This is done by extracting sample criminal career information from data held on the Home Office Offenders Index. Two figures are usually produced: the actual reconviction rates; and those predicted by taking into account a range of offender characteristics (such as age, gender, criminal history and current offence). These rates are not routinely published, but estimated figures for those fined are given in the table:

Reconviction rates within two years of sentence for offenders fined for standard list offences

	1987	1991	1993	1994
Reconviction rate[1]	30	37	47	45
Predicted rate	40	42	49	46
Number sampled	2,698	7,605	7,218	6,275

[1] A change in coverage slightly increased the reconviction rate for those sentenced in 1994

There are difficulties in comparing reconviction rates for 1993 and 1994 with those for earlier years, in that the sentencing structure was altered by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 (implemented on 1 October 1992). A unit fine scheme operated up until 20 September 1993. A large part of the increase in the reconviction rate between 1991 and 1993 can be accounted for by changes in predicted rates (the reconviction rate increases by 10 percentage points and the predicted rate increases by 7 percentage points).

It should be borne in mind that the figures quoted relate only to those fined for standard list offences. They do not necessarily reflect the reoffending behaviour of the many offenders who are fined for offences not on the standard list.

Police Staffing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the extra funding from his Department for the police in each of the last three years was allocated to police recruitment and staff expenditure in each police force; and if he will make a statement; [50600]

(2) if validated figures for the number of police officers per police force in England and Wales on 31 March are available. [50603]

Mr. Michael: Information on the number of police officers per police force on 31 March 1998 is contained in the table. It is not known what proportion of the additional £100 million provided by the Government to police forces over the years 1996/97 to 1998/99 has been used for police recruitment and staff expenditure. It is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force area, within the total resources available to them. The table shows the changes in police numbers since 31 March 1996.

One of the mistakes of the last Government was to promise increases in police numbers. In the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994, they handed to chief constables the freedom to decide whether to use available resources on employing police officers or on other expenditure, such as information technology. We attached no condition to the extra £40 million we provided to the police in England and Wales in 1998/99.

The population figures are those provided by the Office for National Statistics. For 1997–98, the population figures used are the same as for 1996–97 (mid 1996); mid 1997 population figures will not be available until later this year.

Street Robberies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure better co-operation between the Metropolitan Police and the British Transport Police to reduce the number of robberies occurring in the vicinity of underground and railway stations and to reduce the means of escape they offer to criminals. [50578]

Mr. Michael: The deployment of staff and use of resources are operational decisions for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police and the Chief Constable of the British Transport Police. The Commissioner has confirmed to me that the Metropolitan Police and British Transport Police have a close working relationship. They co-operate and share information, and in relation to street robbery they work together in partnership under the banner of Operation "Eagle Eye".

Operation "Eagle Eye" is an initiative set up specifically to tackle street robbery through the collection and analysis of information about crimes and known offenders, together with sophisticated policing techniques to arrest street robbers. The Commissioner tells me that this initiative has led to a 5 per cent. fall in the number of robbery offences recorded in the year to March 1998.

Firearms

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the international bodies or groups as members of which the Government have taken part in discussions on firearms matters since May 1997; and if he will indicate the topics discussed; [50540]

(2) if he will list the non-Governmental organisations invited by him to take part in international discussions on firearms matters. [50539]

Mr. Michael: On 26 June 1997, the Council of Ministers of the European Union adopted the European Union programme for Preventing and Combating Illicit Trafficking in Conventional Arms. The Government have also taken part in discussions within the United Nations Crime Commission, which adopted a Resolution in April entitled: "Measures to regulate firearms for the purpose of combating illicit trafficking in firearms". Additionally, a statement of principles and action plan to combat illegal manufacturing and trafficking of firearms was drawn up by a Sub-Group of the G8 Lyon Group on Transnational Organised Crime and endorsed at the Birmingham Summit in May. The United Nations Small Arms Panel has considered ways to prevent and combat the accumulation of small arms to help avoid the destabilisation of countries engaged in conflict.

No non-governmental organisations have been invited to take part in these discussions.

Charities

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter of 11 May 1998 from the hon. Member for Aylesbury concerning the status of charities. [50616]

Mr. Michael: I replied to the hon. Member on 26 June. I will send the hon. Member a copy of my reply.

Magistrates

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the training of lay magistrates prior to their sitting on the bench. [49875]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

By statute the responsibility for organising and delivering training to meet these requirements rests with individual Magistrates' Courts Committees.

Under the present training arrangements magistrates are required to attend prescribed induction training for a total of 12 hours and undertake visits of observation to their own and another magistrates' court before they commence sitting.

New training arrangements are to be introduced over a twelve month period commencing in September 1998. Under these new arrangements magistrates will have to acquire and demonstrate through a process of appraisal, a range of identified competencies appropriate to the areas of work of the magistrates' court they are engaged in. Appraisal will be conducted by an experienced magistrate colleague, specially selected and suitably trained.

Newly appointed magistrates will receive some training in basic competencies and undertake visits of observation to their own and another magistrates' court before they commence sitting.

Training and development to achieve the competencies required for the adult court will continue through a process of attending courses and experience gained through sitting in court.

On appointment, new magistrates will be assigned an experienced magistrate colleague, specially selected and suitably trained, who will act as a mentor to them, to provide information, advice, support and guidance and help them identify and apply the learning related to the required competencies derived from the experience of sitting and to apply the learning obtained from attending courses to sitting in court.

A magistrate who fails to demonstrate the acquisition of the required competencies and, despite further training and development opportunities, shows no further progress towards attaining the competencies will be referred to the Local Advisory Committee who may then recommend to the Lord Chancellor that the magistrate be removed from sitting on the bench.

TREASURY

Personal Pensions

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress being made by firms in resolving their reviews of personal pensions. [51262]

Mrs. Liddell: On 17 June 1998, Official Report, columns 208–10, I published figures showing the progress being made in the period ending 31 May by the 41 firms I have been monitoring for the last year. The table shows the progress made in the period up to the end of June by 29 of the 41 firms. Most of these firms have continued to make good progress, and only 3 firms have resolved under 50 per cent. of their cases. These are networks of independent financial advisers, and were among the firms I met on 7 July.

When I met senior representatives of the 41 firms last summer, I challenged them to meet or to better the targets set for them by the regulators, and made clear to them that I would publish progress statistics collected from them monthly. In my oral statement to the House on 18 November 1997, Official Report, columns 155–63, I said that I would remove from this list the name of any firm once it had achieved its target for resolving priority cases.

The Personal Investment Authority (PIA) have informed me that information provided to them indicates that, consistent with the deadlines they were set, 12 firms appear to have made every proper effort to obtain investors' acceptance of offers of redress. The names of these 12 firms have therefore been removed from the list. The firms are AXA Equity & Law, Barclays Life, Britannic Assurance, Commercial Union, Godwins, Guardian, Lloyds TSB, Midland Bank, Norwich Union, Prudential, Royal and Sun Alliance and United Assurance.

I should emphasise, however, that this does not mean that their work is over. The regulators will continue to monitor firms to see that they follow through on offers of redress in a timely manner and establish the arrangements necessary to honour guarantees of pensions rights. Looking to the future, firms must also tackle the next phase of the review of personal pensions, which in general terms concerns the cases of people whose need for redress is less urgent. This second phase of the review was the subject of a consultation by the regulators ending in May this year, and they will shortly be announcing the way forward. I hope all firms will respond constructively.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Transcripts

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to allow members of the public to view court transcripts without charge. [49754]

Mr. Hoon: Members of the public can, with the permission of the court, obtain from private contractors transcripts of hearings held in open court provided they do not involve sensitive issues, such as child abuse. However, transcribers are entitled to charge for this, or for copying the transcript if one has already been made. There are no plans to provide transcripts free of charge.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to ensure that copies of court transcripts are made available free of charge. [49753]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans to provide copies of transcripts free of charge. The Court Service pays for transcripts required for appeal purposes. Only between 5–10 per cent. of cases are transcribed for the Court of Appeal at a cost of approximately £700,000 pa. The increased demand, if transcripts were made freely available, would not, in my judgment make the best use of taxpayers' money.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48670]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department has a 20 working day target for responding to correspondence from members of the public and monitors performance against this target. The average response time in 1997–98 was 15.7 working days for the Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters and 13 working days for the Court Service Headquarters. Information on average response time for the courts and the Public Trust Office is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49836]

Mr. Hoon: The information is as follows:

(a) Hon. Members can e-mail the Lord Chancellor's Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit at: mcu.lcd@gtnet.gov.uk

The Lord Chancellor's Department website (http//www.open.gov.uk/lcd) also provides a number of other e-mail addresses for more specific contacts, such as for responses to consultation papers. In addition, it is expected that the Lord Chancellor's Department will be linked to the Government Secure Intranet by the end of this year.

Magistrates

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the (i) ethnic and (ii) religious background of (a) lay magistrates, (b) stipendiary magistrates and (c) Recorders in (1) numerical and (2) percentage terms. [49953]

Mr. Hoon: The table sets out the figures for the number and percentage of lay magistrates, stipendiary magistrates, acting stipendiary magistrates and recorders of ethnic minority origin. The figures for lay magistrates are based on a survey (excluding the Duchy of Lancaster) conducted in 1997 to which 94% of lay magistrates responded. The figures for the other judicial office holders are believed to be correct but because candidates for judicial appointments were not asked for information about their ethnic origin before October 1991, the data may be incomplete. Candidates are not asked to provide details of their religious background.

Post	Total	Of ethnic minority origin	Percentage
Lay magistrates	25,124	1,026	4.1
Stipendiary magistrates	88	2	2.3
Acting Stipendiary magistrates	114	4	3.5
Recorders	836	13	1.5

Court Waiting Times

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the average length of time between charge and verdict for (a) all offenders and (b) young offenders, in each of the most recent five years for which records are available. [50065]

Mr. Hoon: The exact information requested is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. The nearest information available is given in the table.

The majority of criminal cases are completed in magistrates' courts. From a survey of approximately 4,000 defendants (450 youth defendants) each year the average time from charge/summons to completion in the magistrates' courts is as follows:

	Sample size	Average time from charge/ summons to completion (weeks)

Conditional Fees

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the responses to the consultation paper, "Access to Justice with Conditional Fees", and on the measures the Government proposes to take. [51371]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has today placed in the Libraries of both Houses a summary of the responses to the Consultation Paper. The Government remain committed to achieving the aims set out in the consultation paper of extending access to justice and beginning the process of refocusing legal aid to where it can do most good. The Lord Chancellor is grateful to all those who responded, all of whose comments have been carefully considered.

The Government have received wide support to extend conditional fees to all civil proceedings other than family cases and we are keen to proceed as quickly as possible. I have today laid a draft Order for the approval of the House to extend conditional fees to all proceedings not excluded by statute. The draft Order will be debated as soon as time can be found. For the longer term, the Government continue to believe the operation and fairness of conditional fees would be enhanced by making the success fee and insurance premium recoverable. We wish to consider this further before reaching any final decision but the Lord Chancellor is minded to seek the legislation to allow the success fees and insurance premiums to be recoverable as soon as possible.

Legal aid is in urgent need of reform and we shall begin the process of reform in a number of ways. First, we will ensure that assisted persons have access to suitably competent lawyers in medical negligence cases by using existing powers to direct clients towards specialist lawyers who hold franchise contracts with the Legal Aid Board. It will be a condition of holding a contract that the lawyers have shown themselves to be competent in this area of law. The Lord Chancellor has asked the Legal Aid Board to press ahead with putting in place the necessary contracts. The Lord Chancellor wishes to see these contracts in place by January 1999. The Lord Chancellor has also directed them to establish a panel of lawyers of proven experience and expertise to whom preference would be given in awarding contracts for group actions and other related changes, as canvassed in the Board's consultation paper When the Price is High published in June 1997.

In addition, the Lord Chancellor has asked the Board to complete, by the end of 1999, not only the provision of civil advice and assistance exclusively through contracts, but also all family legal aid, including representation.

Finally, to achieve the maximum benefit from the money available, the Government are determined to ensure that legal aid is not spent in purchasing legal services where a suitable alternative exists. They believe that conditional fees provide a suitable alternative, particularly in a range of money claims. They recognise, however, that this alternative would be more attractive if the success fee and insurance premium were recoverable. For that reason the Government are considering how quickly to move to a position where the kinds of money claims described in the Consultation Paper, in particular personal injury claims, and financed principally by conditional fee agreements. The Government would like to be able to move this position by October 1999.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Sales

13. Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for greater transparency regarding arms sales; and if she will make a statement. [49384]

Mrs. Roche: The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), said in a written reply on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 149, that the Government are preparing a report on UK strategic export controls which will include an account of the moves we have made since 2 May 1997 towards a responsible UK and European arms export policy; which will list by country of destination the numbers of export licences issued in each equipment category and give details of the military equipment for which licences have been granted; and which will set out the value of defence exports to each country.

This reflects HMG's commitment to increase the transparency and accountability of the decisions on export licences for arms.

Millennium Compliance

14. Mr. White: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further measures her Department is taking to help businesses tackle the millennium bug. [49385]

Mrs. Beckett: An extra £18 million has been provided by the Government for the work of Action 2000 to help businesses deal with the Millennium Bug. Action 2000 has recently finalised its business plan for the new funding which will be published shortly. A major communication and public relations campaign was announced by Action 2000 yesterday and at the same time the current Action 2000 Campaign material which has been updated was relaunched. Action 2000 will undertake further and more detailed monitoring of the state of readiness of small and medium sized companies.

Insolvency Service

15. Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Insolvency Service. [49386]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Insolvency Service was created as an Executive Agency of the Department of Trade and Industry on 21 March 1990. Its Framework Document defines its status, role, responsibilities and accountability; and the structure within which its work is to be determined, its resources established and its performance assessed. It was last revised and laid before Parliament on 16 March 1998. Its annual report and audited accounts for 1997–98 are due to be laid before Parliament shortly. In February 1996, after an evaluation of The Service's performance against the private sector, it was decided not to contract out the case administration work of Official Receivers.

Post Office

16. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on her review of the Post Office. [49388]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have met a wide range of interested parties, including the management and unions of the Post Office, leading private sector carriers and representative organisations. The review process is an inclusive one and since the announcement of the second stage of the Review on 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 63, my officials have received written views and met interested parties.

23. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the future of the Post Office. [49395]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government plan to give the Post Office greater commercial freedom so that it can meet the challenges of domestic and international markets. The Government have commissioned a review of the public sector options for achieving this and we plan to present our proposals to Parliament in the Autumn.

Energy Review

17. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about progress in respect of the proposals in the Government's review of energy. [49389]

Mr. Battle: On 25 June the Government published a consultation document setting out their proposals. The consultation period ends on 20 July 1998.

20. Mr. Skinner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to receive a report on the consultations regarding energy markets. [49392]

Mr. Battle: The consultation period on the Government's consultation document on their Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation finishes on 20 July. We expect to reach conclusions shortly thereafter.

Young Entrepreneurs

19. Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about her Department's role in assisting young entrepreneurs. [49391]

Mrs. Roche: The Department is keen to encourage young entrepreneurs. One of the Department's key aims is to foster an enterprising nation. The Department, and other Government departments, assists entrepreneurs through a wide range of activities and schemes, including locally delivered business advisory services.

Employment Rights and Trade Union Recognition

21. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to bring forward the proposed legislation on employment rights and trade union recognition. [49393]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I cannot, of course, anticipate the content of the Queen's Speech, but it is the Government's intention to introduce legislation on employment rights and trade union recognition as soon as possible.

Higher Technology Industries

22. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to address the shortfall of investment in innovation in higher technology industries. [49394]

Mr. Battle: The Government recognise that investment in innovation is key to our overall competitiveness. We have already taken steps to improve the regulatory climate for investors, to help high technology companies to improve their management and marketing skills, to improve the quality and quantity of financing opportunities and to encourage industry to draw on our excellent science and engineering base. For example, we have recently launched the University Challenge Fund to assist in the transformation of good research into good business. A copy of the scheme guidelines has been placed in the Library.

Foresight Programme

24. Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to raise the profile of the foresight programme. [49396]

Mr. Battle: The progress report I published last month outlined the steps which are being taken to raise the profile of the Foresight Programme within Government under the overall direction of the Ministerial Foresight Group. Copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses. A range of initiatives are in hand to raise its profile with business and academia. These include the current consultation on the next round which has produced a very positive response and expressions of interest in participation from organisations which have not been involved in Foresight to date.

EU Structural Funds

25. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what her objectives are for the reform of EU structural funds. [49397]

Mrs. Roche: We welcome the publication of the draft regulations for Structural and Cohesion Funds—which are part of the wider Agenda 2000 reform package.

Our overriding concern in the long negotiation ahead is to ensure that these draft regulations are affordable, durable and fair overall, particularly to the UK.

Energy Policy

26. Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the role of state intervention in industry following her statement on energy policy. [49398]

Mr. Battle: The Government are committed to consumer protection promoting fair competition in open markets and putting consumers first. We will take action to the extent necessary to secure properly functioning markets and to protect consumers, as set out in our energy statement and in our Green Paper, A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation.

Plutonium

27. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the relative costs of eliminating Britain's plutonium stockpile through (a) the production of mixed oxide fuel and (b) vitrification. [49399]

Mr. Battle: It is for the owners of spent fuel and plutonium to assess the relative costs of MOX fuel production and vitrification. Subject to meeting the stringent safety, security and international safeguard requirements, it is for them to choose their preferred management options, including whether or not their spent fuel should be reprocessed and whether their plutonium is stored, manufactured into MOX fuel or vitrified.

30. Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what her policy is in respect of the creation of plutonium from energy sources in the UK. [49402]

Mr. Battle: Nuclear generating stations in this country currently meet nearly 30 per cent. of our electricity needs. It is an inescapable fact that plutonium is produced when uranium is burnt in conventional nuclear reactors.

All civil plutonium in the UK is stored safely and securely under relevant national and international regulations.

University Research

28. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to improve the infrastructure and equipment for research at Britain's universities. [49400]

Mr. Battle: Earlier this week, on 13 July 1998, Official Report, columns 47–48, my right hon. Friend announced the establishment of a £600 million capital fund for building new and refurbishing existing university laboratories, equipment and other essential infrastructure, funded equally by the Government and the Wellcome Trust. £400 million has also been provided over the next three years for the Research Councils to meet the current and capital costs of new project funds in priority areas. Additional funding for research of £300 million over the next three years has been announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, and a further £100 million by the Wellcome Trust towards the cost of a high intensity x-ray source for use mainly by university researchers.

The size of this package for research, which amounts in total to £1.4 billion over the life of this Parliament, will ensure that our universities have the facilities they require to remain at the forefront of research into the next millennium.

Science

29. Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she has taken to promote the interests of UK science in Europe. [49401]

Mr. Battle: UK researchers are active in a wide range of scientific activities in Europe, through the European Union's framework programmes, through major European collaborations such as CERN and the European Space Agency, and through bilateral and multilateral collaborations between institutes, universities and individual researchers. At the level of the European Union, the Government have played a leading role in encouraging UK scientists to participate in the current, fourth, framework programme and in negotiating the fifth framework programme, currently under discussion.

UK scientists perform very strongly in these programmes, and are expected to continue to do so in the future. The Government also play a proactive role in respect of our membership of the major European collaborations, with a view to ensuring high quality, cost effective opportunities for UK scientists to work with others in these areas. And we are active, through maintaining close and constructive bilateral relations with other European countries, in ensuring that the UK is seen to be keen to create opportunities for mutually beneficial collaborative research partnerships at all levels.

We also consider that useful work can be done at the European level to promote the role of women in science. The UK actively supports the Commission's development of measures to encourage action on the under-representation of women in science. This parallels the activity of the Office of Science and Technology's Development Unit on women in science, engineering and technology. As part of the UK Presidency, I chaired the round table discussions during the European Commission Conference on Women and Science in April.

We have also been keen to encourage discussion at European level of key issues surrounding the development of new technologies, such as biotechnology. Among measures to encourage this the UK Presidency and European Commission jointly organised a Biotechnology Round Table in June which brought together representatives from the EU institutions, industry, research, consumer, environmental and other interest groups.

Science, Engineering and Technology

31. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the impact of the fifth framework research programme on the UK science, engineering and technology sectors. [49403]

Mr. Battle: The fifth framework programme is currently the subject of negotiation with other member States and with the European Parliament. The Council's common position, agreed unanimously during the UK Presidency in February 1998, envisages a programme which will be clearly focused on areas where research at a European level can be expected to make a contribution to increased competitiveness and improvements in quality of life. The aim is to agree the programme, which will run until the end of 2002, by the end of this year. I expect the UK science, engineering and technology sectors to participate strongly in this programme, as they have done in previous programmes.

EU Industry Council

32. Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the work of the EU Industry Council during the UK presidency. [49404]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North and Fleetwood (Mrs. Humble) on 21 May 1998, Official Report, columns 357–58.

Human Genome Sequencing

33. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what share of the world's effort in human genome sequencing is being undertaken in the UK. [49405]

Mr. Battle: The UK is undertaking around one third of the world's effort in sequencing the human genome. The UK contribution is made primarily through the work of the Wellcome Trust and the Medical Research Council.

The mapping programme is currently scheduled to be completed by 2005.

Loan Companies

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new proposals she has to restrict the activities of loan companies charging excessive rates of interest. [49406]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently consulting on the extortionate credit provisions of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. Before taking further action I will study the evidence this exercise produces and his proposals.

Minimum Wage

35. Mrs. Heal: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received about the implementation of the Government's proposals for a national minimum wage. [49407]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government have received a number of recent representations about the implementation of our proposals for a national minimum wage, which we expect to be implemented by April 1999.

Business Practices

36. Mr. Quinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department is taking to promote innovation in business practices. [49408]

Mrs. Roche: The Department continues to work with a wide range of partners to help companies innovate by adopting better business practices.

As part of the Competitiveness UK programme, my hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs has been chairing the Best Practice Working Party to discuss what further activities the Department should be supporting in this area.

Euro

37. Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to raise business awareness of the introduction of the euro. [49409]

Mrs. Beckett: The Euro Preparations Unit was set up in Treasury at the beginning of this year to raise awareness of the implications of EMU for UK businesses and to help them prepare for the strategic and practical changes that the introduction of the single currency on 1 January will bring.

My officials will continue to work closely with the EPU to ensure that the many business contacts that my Department has are used to best effect.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department is taking to help small to medium-sized enterprises prepare for the introduction of a single currency. [49387]

Mrs. Roche: The Euro Preparations Unit was set up in H.M. Treasury, with secondees from DTI, at the beginning of this year to raise awareness of the implications of EMU for UK businesses and to help them prepare for the strategic and practical changes that the introduction of the single currency on 1 January will bring.

DTI officials will continue to work closely with the EPU to ensure that the many business contacts that the Department has are used to best effect. For instance, I recently discussed the implications of the euro with the Business Link Chief Executives and considered with them how they could help SMEs prepare.

Inward Investment

Mr. Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many new jobs she estimates were created by inward investment into England in 1997–98. [49792]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 10 July 1998]: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau announced yesterday that in 1997/98 the UK has had another successful year, attracting 618 inward investment decisions with 124,622 associated jobs, of which 45,937 were new jobs. Of these decisions 464 were to invest in England with 98,699 associated jobs, of which 29,778 were new jobs.

Ladbroke-Coral Merger

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has received about the proposed merger between Ladbroke and Coral; and if she will make a statement. [50149]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has received a large number of representations about the acquisition by Ladbroke of the Coral betting business, and I have asked the Chairman of the MMC to reply to my hon. Friend direct.

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will direct the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to consider the adverse effects of the proposed merger between Ladbroke and Coral on national competition in the bookmaking industry. [50153]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: In announcing her decision to refer the acquisition by Ladbroke of the Coral betting business to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC), my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade stated that she considered that the acquisition raised competition concerns in relation to the off-course betting market.

It is for the MMC to consider whether a merger operates, or may be expected to operate, against the public interest. The Fair Trading Act 1973 requires the MMC, in considering whether any particular matter operates, or may be expected to operate, against the public interest, to take into account all matters which appear to them in the particular circumstances to be relevant, although they are required to have regard to certain specified public interest issues.

Mr. Meale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to receive the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the proposed merger between Ladbroke and Coral; and if she will make a statement. [50154]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: On 1 July, I announced that I had agreed to a request by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) for an extension to the time allowed for their inquiry into the acquisition by Ladbrokes of the Coral betting business. The MMC's report, which was originally due to be made by 7 July, is now due to be made within the period ending on 31 July.

Redundancy Payments (Scotland)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost in each of the last 10 years of (a) redundancy payments and (b) lump sum redundancy payments to people who were employed in the public sector in Scotland. [50652]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Retailers' Loyalty Cards

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of retailers' loyalty cards on consumer spending patterns and on prices. [50209]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 14 July 1998]: No research has been commissioned and no evaluations made by the Department on the impact of retailers' loyalty cards.

Telephone Services (Charges)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the costs incurred by consumers through the use of call-queueing and automated telephone-answering systems. [50208]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 14 July 1998]: Call-queueing and telephone-answering equipment has been introduced by companies and other organisations since the 1980s, with the aim of making their telephone-answering operations more efficient for themselves and their callers. Companies have a wide choice of switchboard equipment to choose from, and have responsibility for choosing equipment and setting it up so that their consumers' needs are met. Calls are legitimately charged to the calling party, but companies can set up their inquiry lines to run on Lo-call or even Freephone numbers, which will reduce or remove the cost to the consumer. No research has been commissioned or evaluated into the costs incurred by consumers through the use of call-queueing and automated telephone-answering machines, but the Office of Telecommunications (Oftel) is working with the telecommunications industry to ensure that switchboard recorded messages inform members of the public who ring that they are being held in a queue, where this is the case. Once informed of this, callers have the choice of continuing to wait in the queue, which may incur a cost, or of hanging up and trying again later.

Employment Tribunals Service

Dr. Starkey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the Employment Tribunals Service to publish its annual report for 1997–98. [51370]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Employment Tribunals Service became an executive agency on 1 April 1997. Its annual report, covering its first year of operation, has been published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the range of maturity values at two years and 10 years after commencement of the pension plans of each approved personal pension plan provider; and what assessment she has made of variations of maturity values, and the reasons for them, under the pensions review. [47728]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Pension fund	Maturity value with 2 years contributions	Maturity value with 10 years contributions
Scheme 1	5,800	28,400
Scheme 2	5,200	26,200
Scheme 3	5,000	25,400
Scheme 4	4,400	22,300
Scheme 5	4,300	22,400
Scheme 6	4,100	21,000
Scheme 7	3,800	22,700
Scheme 8	3,600	23,400
Scheme 9	3,300	27,600
Scheme 10	2,800	20,300

Notes:

1. Amounts have been rounded to the nearest £100
2. The table shows maturity values upon retirement at age 65 of ten modelled Appropriate Personal Pension (APP) funds and are based on the characteristics of actual providers
3. They are based on an individual who contracts-out of SERPS at the age of 30 at the beginning of the 1997/98 financial year for 2 and 10 years with all National Insurance rebates accrued during this time being paid into the APP
4. Fund values are expressed in constant 1997 prices
5. The following assumptions have been made:

(a) that the National Insurance rebates, and associated tax relief, paid over the 2 and 10 year periods are the only contributions ever made;

(b) that the individual was earning the national average level of full-time earnings in Great Britain at the time the APP commenced in April 1997;

(c) that earnings increase at a rate of 1.5 per cent. a year above inflation;

(d) that the rate of return on the pension fund assets (before charges are deducted) is 4.5 per cent. a year above inflation;

(e) that National Insurance rebates are paid into the pension fund halfway through the following tax year in which the earnings to which they relate were accrued;

(f) that the retirement age of 65 is also the retirement age specified in the personal pension policy (penalties may be incurred if an individual retires before a specified scheme retirement age); and

(g) that the sample funds accrue the same rate of return on fund assets before charges are deducted

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the present weekly value of the basic pension for a single person and a married couple had it been increased in line with earnings since 1980. [50863]

Mr. Denham: If the basic State Retirement Pension had been increased by the higher of earnings or prices since 1980, the weekly rate would now be £89.60 for a single pensioner and £143.40 for a married couple.

Notes:

1. The Retail Price Index (RPI) (All items) and the Average Earnings Index (Whole Economy) as supplied by The Office for National Statistics were used in this calculation.
2. The figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 pence at each uprating.
3. The rate of basic Retirement Pension was increased in the April 1994 uprating by 50 pence for a single pensioner and 70 pence for a couple on account of VAT on fuel. This increase has not been added in to these illustrative figures.
4. For the calculation where State Retirement Pension was linked to the higher of RPI and earnings, the earnings index was the higher figure except in 1982, 1984, 1991 and 1996, when the RPI was used.

Housing Benefit Overpayments

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish for each Scottish local authority, a breakdown for 1996–97, of housing benefit overpayments, in terms of (a) numbers, (b) amounts for DSS, local authority and claimant errors and (c) (b) expressed as a percentage of total expenditure. [48500]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information available is set out in the table.

Overpayments of Housing Benefit Expenditure, Scotland—1996–97

Benefits Agency (Complaints)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 625, what was the ratio of complaints in the period 1 October 1997 to 31 March 1998 received by the Benefits Agency districts with London offices to (a) the total claimant count at each office and (b) the total population within each district. [49728]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 15 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question pursuant to her Answer of 25th June, Official Report, column 625, what is the ratio of complaints in the period 1st October 1997 to 31st March 1998 received by the Benefits Agency (BA) districts with London offices to (a) the total claimant count at each office and (b) the total population within each district.

The information requested is not available.

It is not possible to provide a total customer count. The customer load figures collated by each BA office represent the number of people receiving a particular benefit. These figures do not reflect that one customer may be receiving more than one benefit and therefore may be counted more than once. There are also customers in receipt of benefits who will not be captured in the load figures, for example those in receipt of Retirement Pension are only counted on a national basis.

The total population count for each BA district is not available.

I am sorry that I have been unable to provide more specific information.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to equalise the rate of housing benefit for all tenures. [50053]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no plans to introduce a single rate of Housing Benefit across all tenures. The current system is based on tenants' actual rents. Housing Benefit can cover up to the full reasonable rent for tenants on low incomes in every tenure.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will assess the advantages of extending the period in which the NHB-1-EP form has to be completed and returned for the applicant to qualify for the extended payment to be awarded. [50381]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As the Welfare Reform Green Paper makes clear, we are currently looking at a range of proposals for improving the work incentives offered by Housing Benefit. We are examining a number of ways of improving the way in which people receive support with their housing both during the transition into work and once in work. Working families tax credit and Housing Benefit together will improve the financial position of many people in work. It is vital that all welfare support, including Housing Benefit for people in work, is accessible, understandable and delivered in an efficient manner.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for a housing benefit extended payment were made in the last year; and how many were successful. [50373]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Housing benefit extended payments—Great Britain 1997

Provisional	Number
Total extended payment applications	163,000
Total successful applications	140,000
Percentage of successful applications	85

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand
2. Figures refer to a benefit unit which may be a single person or a couple

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what monitoring her Department conducts to establish the degree of slippage between the number of NHB-1-EP application forms (a) issued and (b) returned. [50382]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There are no records kept of the numbers of extended payment application forms (NHB1EP) issued to potential applicants. The forms are readily available at local Benefits Agency offices, Employment Services' Jobcentres and some local authority offices.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Cheltenham have been affected by the restriction of council tax benefit on properties in Band F and above. [50052]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Rented Housing Debt

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the level of debt owed to landlords whose rent is (a) paid direct by district council housing benefit departments and (b) paid by housing benefit claimants. [50410]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Information is not available in the format requested.

Housing Benefit is paid to the landlord only in specified circumstances that are prescribed by regulations. For example, benefit must normally be paid direct to the landlord where the claimant is in arrears of an amount equivalent to eight weeks or more of the amount he is liable to pay his landlord as rent. Local authorities can also choose to make direct payments where they consider it would be in the best interests of the claimant to do so.

The present regulations, give consideration to the personal responsibility of the tenant and the legitimate interests of landlords and the taxpayers in keeping rent arrears in check. However, it is the landlord's own responsibility to ensure that he obtains whatever payments are properly due to him, irrespective of the tenant's source of income.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the activities undertaken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), in his capacity as the Green Minister for Social Security since his appointment; [50032]

(2) what measures are being taken to raise awareness of sustainable environmental issues within her Department; and what specific training is available to staff; [50030]

(3) what percentage of her Department's waste is recycled at present; and what targets she has set for increasing recycling in the future. [50031]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 10 July 1998]: In my capacity as Green Minister I have attended meetings of Green Ministers and encouraged the initiative when many staff cycled to work on 10 June 1998. My priority this year has been the development of Green Commuting Plans within the Department. I launched this initiative on 17 February 1998 at a Departmental conference on Sustainable Development and "Greening the DSS". 21 senior representatives of the various Departmental Business Units attended that meeting.

Their commitment to the Green Agenda has led to further Departmental conferences for policy and operational senior and middle managers in all Departmental business units. Following these conferences the Department is committed to producing a minimum of 20 "Green Commuting Plans" to be introduced by March 1999 with the appointment of a similar number of local co-ordinators to ensure success.

In addition there is the commitment to education, training and motivating staff and contractors to work in an environmentally responsible manner and to play a full part in developing new ideas and initiatives. This includes communicating openly about environmental policies and best practice (including best available scientific advice) and co-operating with others in the public and private sectors at home and abroad to develop and promote environmentally sound policies.

A portfolio of relevant training courses is currently being compiled and as the Government's new sustainable development strategy is developed Green Ministers will be considering staff awareness alongside options for more formal training.

The setting of targets for recycled waste in the Department was not previously an option because of the fragmented nature of its estate management. The appointment of PPM, the private sector consortium who provide building services including waste management, to the entire Departmental estate has now made this possible.

The Department's current guide "Green Guide", used locally throughout the estate, includes guidance on the recycling of paper, drinks cans, glass, plastic, print toner cartridges and batteries. There are contacts in each Business Unit/Agency for the promotion of green issues.

A benchmarking exercise to baseline current volumes and costs was completed earlier this year and the results are being used in the revision of the Departments "Green Guide" which is currently underway. PPM will work with the Department to implement its "Green" policies.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate she has made of the number of winter fuel payments sent to local post offices for distribution and returned as unclaimed to the department; [50011]

(2) what estimate she has made of the number of winter fuel payments remaining outstanding and unpaid at 30 June. [50010]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners living in the United Kingdom who receive a retirement pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this year's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data. This involved 15 million computer records, covering 15 qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost ten million pensioners, in over seven million households, have received a payment.

The administration of Winter Fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Roger Gale, dated 14 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what estimate she has made of the number of winter fuel payments sent to local Post Offices for distribution and returned as unclaimed to the Department and how many remain outstanding and unpaid at 30th June 1998.

Around 5 million pensioners paid by order book had to collect their winter fuel payment girocheque at the Post Office when they called to collect their normal weekly pension payment. We have estimated that around 107,000 (2 per cent. of the volume issued) were not collected and were returned to the nearest Benefits Agency (BA) office.

The vast majority of all eligible pensioners should now have received their winter fuel payments, with the exception of a small number where BA is having difficulties ascertaining the reason for non-collection at the Post Office. Where someone has not received a payment, but is expecting one, they should contact the office which normally deals with their pension or benefit.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Public Appointments (Women)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the representations made by the Minister for Women to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on women in public appointments prior to publication of his recent report, "Quangos: Opening the Doors". [50856]

Ms Ruddock: It is not practice to disclose internal discussions between Ministerial colleagues.

One of the main priorities of the Ministers for Women is to increase the representation of women at all levels and in all areas. The Government have agreed in principle a ratio of 50:50 women and men for public appointments and a pro-rata representation of the ethnic minorities. This commitment was made public in 'Quangos: Opening Up Public Appointments', published 29 June.

This is a great step forward and we look forward to working with colleagues to ensure that the goal of 50:50 representation is reached.

Part-time Working Directive

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment the Women's Unit has made of the impact of the implementation of the Part-Time Working Directive on the number of part-time jobs in the UK. [50859]

Ms Ruddock: The Government are keen to promote family-friendly employment policies and the implementation of the Part-time Work Directive will be an important step forward. Many women choose to work part-time in order to balance their work and family responsibilities and this Directive will be particularly important to them as it will remove discrimination and increase the status of part-time work.

We do not consider that implementation of the Directive will result in a loss of jobs; on the contrary, the view of the Government, employers and workers themselves is that it will eliminate obstacles to part-time work and increase opportunities for those wishing to work part-time.

We will be carrying out detailed research into the impact of the proposals and expect to receive the findings later in the year.

Women's Unit

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials work in the women's unit of her Department. [50875]

Ms Ruddock: As at 13 July 1998, 35 officials work in the Women's Unit of the Department of Social Security. Seven of these staff are part-time workers. The total hours worked are equivalent to 33.4 full time staff.

Maintenance Disregard

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of increasing the amount of maintenance disregarded for family credit, disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit purposes to (a) £20 and (b) £25 per week. [50887]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Benefit cost of increasing the maintenance disregard

£m per annum

Benefit	£20 disregard	£25 disregard
Family Credit	15	35
Housing Benefit	5	5
Council Tax Benefit	*	5
Disability Working Allowance	*	*
Total	25	45

Notes:

1. Modelled on the benefit rules and benefit rates as in November 1998
2. Modelled using data taken from the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey and November 1997 Family Credit 5 per cent. sample, uprated to 1998–99 prices, benefits and earnings levels
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest £5 million and may not sum to the total because of rounding. * denotes a cost of less than £2.5 million
4. Assumes that the recorded maintenance payments on the Family Credit datasets are paid at the same level each week
5. Excludes the financial impact of behavioural changes caused by the new disregard levels

SCOTLAND

Mathematics

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement the recommendations concerning better contact between schools, examining bodies, the inspectorate and professional mathematicians contained in the 1995 report, "Tackling the Mathematics Problem". [48836]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 9 July 1998]: The report to which the hon. Member refers concerns England and Wales only. It was not submitted to the Scottish Office Education and Industry Department for a formal response.

In Scotland there are already good relations encompassing higher education involvement in educational decision making at school level.

My department is already taking action to respond to general concerns raised by this report where relevant in Scotland—for example the numerical and algebraic competence of university entrants. HM Inspectors of Schools published in 1997 the report "Improving Mathematics Education 5–14" which proposed earlier introduction of algebra in schools and advised that more attention should be paid to mental calculation and that non-calculator papers be introduced into national examinations—a proposal now out for consultation by the SQA. Scottish Certificate of Education examinations have, as a result, been putting more emphasis on algebraic manipulation so as to encourage schools to improve pupils' skills. The development of new Higher Still courses has taken these points into account and numeracy is a core skill in all proposed Scottish Group Awards.

Chemistry and Biochemistry Curriculum

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effectiveness of the higher chemistry curriculum and exam in preparing students for degree courses in chemistry and biochemistry. [48743]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 9 July 1998]: No such research has been commissioned or evaluated by The Scottish Office Education and Industry Department. The content of the Higher Chemistry course was, however, reviewed during the development of the new Higher Still courses in Chemistry, which will be introduced into schools and colleges in Scotland in 1999.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48642]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 9 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the savings from abolishing the assisted places scheme in the years (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [48466]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The estimated savings from phasing out the assisted places scheme are not less than £3.84 million in 1998–99 financial year and £4.23 million in 1999–2000 financial year.

Language Examinations

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which languages other than English may be offered for examination in Standard Grade, Highers and Advanced Highers as proposed. [49870]

Mr. Wilson: Examinations in French, German, Italian, Russian, Spanish, Latin and Classical Greek are currently available at Standard Grade, Higher Grade and Certificate of Sixth Year Studies (CSYS). Separate examinations in Gaelic for native speakers (Gàidhlig) and learners are currently available at Standard Grade and Higher Grade. Gàidhlig is also offered at CSYS. A Standard Grade examination in Urdu was set for the first time this year.

Following the introduction of Higher Still in 1999, examinations in French, German, Italian, Russian, Spanish, Latin, Classical Greek, Gaelic and Gàidhlig will be available at Standard Grade and at Intermediate 1, Intermediate 2, Higher and Advanced Higher. A coherent group of units at Access 3 will also be available in all of these languages with the exceptions of Latin and Classical Greek.

Tourism

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will ensure that the Scottish Tourist Board helps to promote sustainable development and biodiversity in Scotland; [49742]

(2) what plans he has to include environmental duties and a commitment to sustainable development in the remit of the Scottish Tourist Board. [49743]

Mr. Wilson: The Government are committed to the principle of environmentally sustainable tourism. Our policy is to promote Scotland as an environmentally sound destination. The Scottish Tourist Board (STB), on the Government's behalf, is a major player in the Tourism and the Environment Task Force. The Board supports all of the Task Force's activities which are designed to increase environmental awareness throughout the tourism industry and to promote environmentally sensitive tourism development. STB has recently developed and launched a "Green Tourism Business Scheme" which aims to enable businesses working in the hospitality sector to address their environmental responsibilities.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what licences have been issued over the past year for the killing of (a) peregrines and (b) sparrowhawks; and for what reasons they were issued. [50454]

Mr. Macdonald: No licences have been issued.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

World Citizenship

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding his Department has given to the Council for Education in World Citizenship in each of the last five years. [48765]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has provided funding of £360,000 over the period 1993–94 to 1997–98 as follows:

1993–94	92,000
1994–95	84,000
1995–96	85,000
1996–97	60,000
1997–98	39,000

We are currently developing proposals for new funding arrangements to support organisations working in the field of education for citizenship which move away from core funding individual organisations to a more flexible approach which supports overall policy development in this area.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48668]

Dr. Howells: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department's monitoring systems record the proportion of replies that meet the DfEE correspondence standard, which is that replies will be made within 15 working days of receipt. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation he had with women's organisations; and if he will make a statement. [49084]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available since 1992. Application of the guidance has been the responsibility of individual Departments.

We consult a wide range of organisations on the gender impact of our policies. We have also published, and make use of, disaggregated statistics which show gender differences across the whole spectrum of education, training and employment.

As an example of this, the Equal Opportunities Commission and Women's National Commission were included in the wide ranging consultation on the White Paper, "Excellence in Schools" which has formed the basis for much of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill and the Schools Standards and Framework Bill. Further consultation is planned on the regulations which will flow from the Bills and, where appropriate, women's groups will be included.

Childminders

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many childminders are registered with (a) Barnsley and (b) Doncaster local authorities; how many children aged (i) under five and (ii) five to 11 years are cared for by registered childminders in these authorities; and what was the average charge for each place. [49617]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) on 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 617.

Ayaz Sheikh

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his Department's letter of 19 March 1997, if he will make a statement on the case of Ayaz Sheikh of 4 Thorpewell, Leicester, date of birth 11 April 1986. [49949]

Ms Estelle Morris: Ayaz Sheikh's case was considered by the Social Educational Needs Tribunal on 18 June 1998. The Tribunal upheld Mr. and Mrs. Sheikh's appeal against the provision specified in Ayaz's statement, including the school names in Part IV. They ordered that the statement should be amended to name Sutherland

House School, Nottingham. This is an independent special school for pupils with autism. Leicester City Local Education Authority will make arrangements to Ayaz to be admitted to Sutherland House School starting in the spring term of 1999.

Autistic Children

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards autistic children; and what guidelines his Department issues on the placing of autistic children in schools. [49950]

Ms Estelle Morris: Schools and local education authorities have statutory duties to identify, assess and provide for children's special educational needs, including the individual needs of children with autistic spectrum disorders. In doing so they must have regard to the guidance contained in the Department's "Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs". Decisions by LEAs on the placement of autistic children with statements of SEN will reflect the profile of the particular child's autism and may be in autism specific schools, other special schools, units in mainstream schools or in mainstream classes with support. The Department will publish shortly the report of a study by the University of Birmingham, assessing the current research evidence about the educational interventions for children with autism.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) head teachers, (b) deputy head teachers and (c) teachers, have taken early retirement in Gloucestershire Local Education Authority in the financial year 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [50066]

Ms Estelle Morris: Early retirements[1] from the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sectors in Gloucestershire in the financial year 1997–98 are as shown.

Retirements	Head teachers	Deputy head teachers	Classroom teachers[2]
Premature retirement	19	14	89
Ill-health retirement	3	3	21
Total	22	17	110

[1] Provisional data

[2] Includes one unqualified teacher

Note:

Changes in the statutory regulations governing early retirement came into force during 1997–98. The changes made teachers' employers responsible for the extra cost of premature retirement and clarified the definition of ill-health in the case of applications for ill-health retirement benefits

Education Funding

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress towards achieving the harmonisation of funding of the education of 16 to 19 year olds in full-time education. [50150]

Dr. Howells: A group of local authorities has been looking at alternative approaches to the principles on which school sixth forms are funded, including the scope for introducing those used in further education (funding for recruitment, programme delivery and achievement). We expect to receive a progress report later this month which will help to inform them on how they wish to proceed.

The levels of funding available to school sixth forms and FE colleges for their 16–19 students will be affected by the outcome of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review and by local authority decisions on the level of spending they devote to schools from their overall spending settlement.

Internet

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department takes to publicise the educational benefits of the Internet. [50649]

Dr. Howells: The Government have announced a major initiative to connect schools to the Internet through the National Grid for Learning. Plans were set out in "Connecting the Learning Society", which was published last Autumn and circulated widely within the education service, industry and other interested parties. The Government are supporting in 1998–99 through the Standards Fund and other means over £100 million for the development of the National Grid for Learning.

The educational benefits of networking and the Internet were established and disseminated widely through the outcomes of the Education Departments' Superhighways Initiative, "Preparing for the Information Age", published last year.

Further advice on the educational benefits of the Internet is contained in "Connecting Schools, Networking People", published by the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency. This contains procurement, planning and good practice guidance in the use of information and communications technologies in schools.

Copies of all the above documents are available in the Library.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many nursery places within the Hereford and Worcester Local Education Authority were available for four year olds in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in January 1998; and how many are forecast to be available for January 1999. [50452]

Ms Estelle Morris: Provisional figures show that in the Hereford and Worcester Local Education Authority area there were 1,014 four-year-olds in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools, as at January 1998.

From September 1998, Herefordshire and Worcestershire LEAs have guaranteed that they will be able to secure a free, good quality place for every four-year-old whose parents want one in the maintained, private or voluntary sectors.

Further Education, Hampshire

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of further education colleges in Hampshire had their funding reduced for 1997–98. [46003]

Dr. Howells: Some 60 per cent. of colleges in Hampshire received lower funding allocations for the academic year 1997/98 than for the previous academic year. Colleges in Hampshire will benefit from the additional £100 million that has been made available for the sector in 1998/99.

Child Care

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the cost to local authorities of carrying out the audit of the supply of and demand for child care set out in the Green Paper, Meeting the Childcare Challenge. [50854]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is not possible to assess with precision the cost to partnerships of conducting local audits. In preparing their audits Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships will be able to draw upon information about child care that local authorities are already obliged by law to collect or make available, for example day care reviews and Children's Services Plans required by the Children and Young Persons Acts. Research carried out for my Department has shown that the extent and quality of information held by local authorities varies widely. We are making available £12 million pounds to help local partnerships conduct audits and draw up local child care plans.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the regional conferences and workshops for partnership members and others which have been held as a follow-up to the Green Paper, "Meeting the Childcare Challenge". [50853]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Regional conferences have been held in Sheffield, Gateshead, Bristol and London to follow up the Green Paper. They were attended by a range of organisations including local authorities, Training and Enterprise Councils, private and voluntary providers, child care organisations and employers.

A workshop on child care information services has also been held, and workshops on training and qualifications, child care audits, guidance for child care partnerships and involving employers in child care and family friendly employment will be held from July through to the autumn.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of the Green Paper, "Meeting the Childcare Challenge", were (a) published and (b) distributed. [50850]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Stationery Office produced 10,000 copies of the Green Paper, of which the Department for Education and Employment bought 4,500. Of these some 2,500 were distributed to interested organisations and individuals, 1,200 copies were distributed within Government and the remaining copies were kept for use during the consultation period. We have also produced a leaflet summarising the Green Paper, of which 1.1 million copies were printed. Most of these have now been distributed to parents, child care providers and others.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish responses to the Green Paper, "Meeting the Childcare Challenge". [50855]

Mr. Alan Howarth: All responses to the Green Paper received by the Government are available for public inspection, unless the respondent has requested that they remain confidential. The Government will take account of these responses when it produces guidance for the new child care partnerships in October. We will consider what other Government response to the consultation is needed in the light of the comments we receive.

Assisted Places Scheme

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the uprating of the parental contribution scales for the Assisted Places Scheme for the 1998–99 school year. [51258]

Mr. Byers: Revised scales have been incorporated in the 1998 Amendment Regulations which have been laid before Parliament today. The scales and allowances have been uprated by 2.7 per cent. Where relevant income does not exceed £10,414, the tuition fee will be wholly remitted so that the child receives a free place. The new provisions are set out in the following table.

Education (Grammar School Ballots) Regulations

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to publish final statutory instruments on the Education (Grammar School Ballots) Regulations. [50860]

Mr. Byers: Subject to the School Standards and Framework Bill receiving Royal Assent and to affirmative resolution debates in both Houses, I expect the Regulations to be published before the end of the Parliamentary Session.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hunt Kennels

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1998, Official Report, columns 20–26, if he will list the reasons for the unsatisfactory audit finding for each hunt kennel listed. [46571]

Mr. Rooker: It is not possible to list the individual failures found during State Veterinary Service specified risk material (SRM) audit visits during 1998 to the hunt kennels listed in my reply of 15 June as this could prejudice any legal action being considered by the local authority concerned. It is the local authority, rather than Government Departments, which has enforcement responsibility under the relevant legislation.

For those visits carried out during 1997, release of the information requested has raised a number of legal issues which are being urgently considered. Once this has been completed, I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 1998, Official Report, columns 20–26, if he will list the potential (a) animal and (b) human health risks in circumstances where hunt kennels fail to achieve a satisfactory SRM audit. [46573]

Mr. Rooker: Government measures to combat BSE have greatly reduced the number of cases of preclinical BSE in bovines, and there are relatively few now found in the field. Any animals suspected of suffering from BSE are destroyed in designated incinerators and not taken to hunt kennels. The main throughput of hunt kennels is therefore casualty animals and dead stock from which specified risk material has to be removed and disposed of in accordance with the Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997. Meat from such carcases is not eligible for the human food chain.

The potential human health risks arise from the possible illegal diversion of material into the human food chain. For animal health, the potential risks arise from the possible diversion of SRM into animal by products, and the direct feeding of SRM to hounds, even though no case of a transmissible spongiform encephalopathy (TSE) developing in dogs has ever been recorded. In all cases, the controls applied on the handling and disposal of SRM in hunt kennels are intended to prevent such risks arising, reinforced by the compliance audit carried out by the State Veterinary Service, the results of which are reported monthly in the BSE Enforcement Bulletin.

In all cases where unsatisfactory audit visits have been reported and investigated, unannounced follow up visits have also been carried out to ensure that any necessary remedial action has been taken.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the failures that were discovered in the surveillance visits in 1997 and 1998 to the (a) Llangibby Foxhounds, (b) Pentyrow Hunt Kennels, (c) Tegryn Farmers Hunt, (d) Carmarthen Hunt, (e) Llandeilo Hunt, (f) Garne Foxhounds Hunt Kennels, (g) Amman Valley Hunt and (h) Carmarthenshire Hunt Kennels. [46586]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 June 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to our hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) today 16 July 1998, Official Report, column 303.

Samaritans

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Samaritans on farming-related issues. [49111]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: We recognise the issue of stress within rural communities and the role the Samaritans play in helping to relieve it. The Ministry participates in the work of the Rural Stress Information Network, provides assistance towards establishing local support networks and makes certain specialist advice available free of charge on referral from agencies such as the Samaritans. My hon. Friend the Minister of State visited the Samaritans' stand at the Three Counties Show to discuss the issues raised with the Samaritans within the rural communities. The Samaritans in Hereford have kindly provided a copy of the video which they have produced and widely distributed. We will be giving further consideration to the issues related to rural stress which have been raised with MAFF Ministers during their regional visits.

Royal Agricultural Benevolent Fund

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has had with representatives of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Fund. [49112]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Ministerial team at MAFF is aware of the good work of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution (RABI), who provide financial help and advice through a confidential helpline for members of the farming community suffering hardship.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State has met representatives of the RABI during his visits to the regions, and paid a visit to the RABI stand at the Royal Show. As a result of these contacts, arrangements are in hand for posters and literature explaining the work of the RABI to be displayed in the Department's nine Regional Service Centres. The RABI has already announced it is to extend its work to include farm workers, and Ministers in this Department are keen to see that as wide a section of the farming industry as possible is aware of the RABI.

Environmental Issues

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations (a) from which he has received representations and (b) which he has consulted which have as part or all of their remit the promotion of (i) biodiversity at the level of the farm, (ii) integrated crop management schemes and (iii) organic farming. [50041]

Dr. John Cunningham: This Department carries out many consultations concerning the areas mentioned. Among the organisations which MAFF regularly consults on one or more of the issues mentioned by the right hon. Member are:

BioDynamic Agriculture Association
Butterfly Conservation
Country Landowners Association
Countryside Commission
Elm Farm Research Centre
English Heritage
English Nature
Environment Agency
Farm and Food Society
Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group
Henry Doubleday Research Association
Irish Organic Farmers and Growers Association
Linking Farming and the Environment
National Farmers Union
Organic Farmers and Growers
Organic Food Federation
Organic Trust
Plant Life
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds
SAFE Alliance
Scottish Organic Producers Association
Soil Association
Sustainable Agriculture Development Group
The Wildlife Trusts
The Integrated Arable Crop Protection Alliance
Ulster Organic Association
World Wide Fund for Nature UK.

Animal Health Act 1981

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the instructions to his staff responsible for applying sections 40 to 49 of the Animal Health Act 1981 and any subordinate legislation made under the same sections of the Act. [50047]

Mr. Morley: I am placing in the Library today a copy of the relevant Guidance Notes for Exporters, which give an explanation of the procedures followed.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current energy consumption of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans he has for including energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [50411]

Mr. Morley: The latest energy consumption figures available for the Ministry's main estate and its Laboratory Agencies is for 1996–97. It is:

kWh

Electricity	Gas	Oil	Total
37,786,876	59,623,879	9,093,363	106,504,112

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) has set a Government-wide target to reduce energy consumption levels by 20 per cent. up to 31 March 2000 when compared with the base year of 1990–91. By 1996–97, the Ministry's main estate had achieved reductions in energy consumption of 14 per cent. and its Laboratory Agencies had achieved a 6 per cent. reduction. The Ministry will be submitting the annual returns for 1997–98 to DETR when asked to do so, which is expected to be around September.

The energy efficiency performance figures for 1996–97 were included in Chapter 7 of the Ministry's 1998 annual report which was published in April. MAFF's energy efficiency performance will be included in future annual reports.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled at present; and what targets have been set for increasing this. [50412]

Mr. Morley: Under the Department's action plan for green operations, there is a requirement on all our sites to minimise the generation of waste by encouraging recycling schemes and reusing materials. For example, many of our sites operate paper and other recycling schemes. So far we have not measured waste streams and set targets for waste reduction and recycling because of the practicalities of physically measuring the quantities of waste produced and the extent to which waste is recycled. However, this remains under consideration.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to discourage unnecessary car use by his Department's employees. [50414]

Mr. Morley: The Department has strict rules to ensure that travel on official business is authorised only when it is absolutely necessary and that cars are used only when they are the most cost effective method of travel.

Fishing Regulations

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vessels have been advised of contraventions of European Union fishing regulations in United Kingdom fishing protection operations in the last three years; and on how many occasions these contraventions have led to prosecutions. [50401]

Mr. Morley: During the period 1995–97, the UK enforcement authorities detected 5,401 infringements of European Union fishing regulations in respect of 2,514 vessels. This has resulted in the masters and/or owners of some 324 vessels being prosecuted in respect of 612 of the infringements detected. There are some cases which are still being processed and the number of prosecutions may therefore rise.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the written parliamentary questions tabled by the right hon. Member for Fylde which remain to be answered. [50248]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 13 July 1998]: As of today, 16 July, the only written parliamentary questions tabled by the right hon. Member which remain to be answered are two parliamentary questions for which the right hon. Member has named Tuesday 21 and Thursday 23 July for answer and three parliamentary questions for ordinary written answer which appeared in the Order Paper today for the first time.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the fishing industry on his Department's latest proposals for alterations to (a) fishing licences generally and (b) external water licences. [50546]

Mr. Morley: We have invited the fishing industry to comment on the following proposals for changes in licensing arrangements: the introduction of new licensing arrangements to limit access to the UK's scallop fisheries (consultation letter issued on 11 June and comments invited by 14 August 1998); the aggregation of whitefish licences with pelagic licences for the purposes of introducing pelagic freezer trawlers into the UK fishing fleet (consultation letter issued on 2 July and comments invited by 31 August 1998); more flexible and transparent arrangements for external waters licensing (consultation letter issued on 15 June and comments invited by 17 August 1998).

Representations on each of these proposals are being submitted to the Ministry and copies will be available to the public through the MAFF Library at 3 Whitehall Place (West Block) London SW1A 2AH after the consultation process has been completed.

Additionally, and as announced on 17 December 1997, Official Report, columns 336–49, Fisheries Departments are holding a series of meetings with representatives of the principal fishermen's organisations to review the operation of the current licensing arrangements for fishing vessels.

Meat Imports

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures to control MBM-fed (a) pork and (b) bacon imports which do not meet British traceability requirements to take account of BSE outbreaks in continental Europe. [50700]

Mr. Rooker: No. The ban on meat and bone meal in pig feed in the United Kingdom is to prevent cross contamination of ruminant feed with meat and bone meal incorporated into feed for other farm animals. There is, therefore, no basis on which it would be reasonable to restrict imports of pig meat.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what testing of badgers in TB affected areas is currently taking place. [50667]

Mr. Rooker: Although new badger removal operations have now ceased, we are still testing some of the badger carcases which have been removed. Additionally, in areas of TB incidents, where it is felt that this would provide valuable epidemiological evidence, some carcases of badgers which are found dead are tested.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by area the number of herd breakdowns caused by bovine TB since January 1997. [50666]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 3 July 1998, Official Report, columns 318–20. I will write to my hon. Friend with the information relating to the first six months of 1998 when I have it.

Sturgeon and Caviar Imports

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons imports of sturgeon from Iran and caviar from the United Arab Emirates have been banned; what steps have been taken by his Department to have the bans lifted; and what compensation is available to United Kingdom fish merchants who have lost business as a result of the bans. [50723]

Mr. Rooker: The United Arab Emirates is unable to export fishery products to the EU because it is not included in the list of countries authorised to do so under current EU hygiene measures. Transitional arrangements which allowed imports from unlisted countries ended on 1 July 1998. The United Arab Emirates did not provide sufficient guarantees to the Commission by this date and has therefore not been added to the list. It is a matter for the competent authority in the United Arab Emirates to provide such guarantees. Iran is included in a list of countries allowed to continue existing export trade of fishery products to individual Member States until 31 January 1999. There is no compensation available to fish merchants who have lost business as a result of EU hygiene measures.

HEALTH

Salford and Trafford Health Authority

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date his Department first requested the Salford and Trafford Health Authority to withdraw its public consultation document on the future of children's health services; and on what grounds; [49359]

(2) on what grounds the Salford and Trafford Health Authority refused to withdraw its consultation paper on children's services when first requested to do so by his Department; [49360]

(3) on what date his Department indicated to the Salford and Trafford Health Authority that a legal direction would be issued requiring the authority to withdraw its consultation on the future of children's services; [49361]

(4) what representations he has received from health authorities which adjoin the Salford and Trafford Health Authority relating to the public consultation on the future of children's health services in Salford and Trafford; and on what dates the representations were received; [49357]

(5) what representations he has received from members of the Salford and Trafford Health Authority in relation to the consultation on the future of children's health services; and on what dates; [49358]

(6) what discussions took place between his Department and the Salford and Trafford Health Authority between the date when the authority refused the Department's request to withdraw its consultation on the future of children's services and the date when a legal direction was issued by the Secretary of State requiring the withdrawal of that document. [49356]

Mr. Dobson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: We have received no such representations on this matter. The legal direction was issued to, and received by, Salford and Trafford Health Authority on 30 June 1998.

I did not ask the health authority to withdraw its consultation; discussions took place between officials of the Department and representatives of Salford and Trafford Health Authority, to explore the issues and consider the options for withdrawing the proposals.

I am not aware of any representations from health authority members in relation to the consultation on the future of children's health services.

The legal direction was effective immediately and its receipt was acknowledged on 1 July 1998. The purpose of this action was to allow wider consideration of a more systematic improvement of children's services which build on our efforts over the last year to ensure that changes in health services in Manchester, Salford and Trafford are arrived at quickly and as part of an integrated approach across the Health Action Zone.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all requests which his Department has made since 2 May 1997 for health authorities to withdraw public consultation documents which have been issued in accordance with normal procedures; and in which of those cases (a) he has issued a legal direction and (b) he is considering issuing a legal direction. [49365]

Mr. Dobson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The only such request made by the Department since 2 May 1997 related to the consultation document "Future Hospital Care For the Children and Young People of Salford and Trafford". This was in the form of a legal direction issued by North West Regional Office on my behalf to Salford and Trafford Health Authority. No other such direction is under consideration at the present time.

Public Consultations

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the occasions on which his Department has asked health authorities to withdraw properly conducted public consultations during the 20 years prior to 1 July 1997; and on how many of those occasions the Department subsequently required compliance through the use of a legal direction. [49355]

Mr. Dobson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tonsillectomy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) by health authority or trust and (b) nationally the average waiting time for a tonsillectomy after referral to a consultant. [50079]

Mr. Milburn: Information is available only at specialty level for waiting times for an outpatient appointment to see a consultant following referral by a general practitioner. The latest information for surgical waiting times, following a decision by a consultant to admit for excision of tonsil, is available in Hospital Episode Statistics Volume 2 Finished consultant episodes: waiting time for elective admissions by diagnosis and operation; England: Financial year 1995–96, copies of which are available in the Library.

Dementia

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the causes of and treatment for (i) Alzheimer's disease and (ii) other forms of dementia; and what proposals he has to support future research. [50229]

Ms Jowell: The Department directly funds research covering a whole range of issues relating to mental health. There are two programmes—the policy research programme (PRP), which is designed to underpin the development of health and personal social services policy, and the National Health Service research and development programme, which commissions research in and for the NHS.

The PRP is contributing £1 million to the Medical Research Council Study of Cognitive Function and Ageing. This is a multicentre study to examine dementia, its natural history and risks, including Alzheimer's Disease.

The NHS Executive is supporting, through its regionally led research and development programme, a project on mobility and dementia—"Is physiotherapy during respite care admission effective?"—at a cost of approximately £140,000. Also, West Midlands regional research and development directorate are directly funding a project which is considering the cost and clinical effectiveness of Aricept for treating mild to moderate dementia at a cost of approximately £600,000.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what treatment is available to people with haemophilia infected with hepatitis C through the NHS; what is the success rate; and what are the side effects; [50384]

(2) if he will make a statement on the (a) treatment available, (b) success rate of treatment and (c) side effects of treatment for people with haemophilia with hepatitis C infection. [50437]

Ms Jowell: People infected with the hepatitis C virus may remain symptom free for many years but a proportion will eventually develop chronic hepatitis, cirrhosis or even liver cancer. At present the only drug licensed in the United Kingdom for the treatment of any patient with hepatitis C is alpha interferon. Some haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C may benefit from treatment and should be offered it when appropriate. However, current experience shows that alpha interferon will only produce a sustained response, that is clear the virus on testing, in 20–25 per cent. of patients. Current research is examining how best to use alpha interferon and testing other antiviral drugs that either alone or in combination with alpha interferon, could give better results.

Alpha interferon is not well tolerated by some people. Most will have a mild reaction including influenza-like symptoms; in others the side effects will be more severe ranging from nausea, influenza-like symptoms and lethargy to depression, cardiovascular problems and hypersensitive reactions. Some will be unable to continue with the treatment. A history of certain types of health problems, for example depression, may be a contra-indication for treatment with the drug.

The Department has commissioned £1 million research into hepatitis C, and a further £0.5 million will be commissioned shortly. It is also supporting the Royal College of Physicians and other professional bodies in the preparation of clinical guidelines on the treatment of hepatitis C with alpha interferon. The guidelines should be ready later this year.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received calling for financial assistance on behalf of people with haemophilia infected with the hepatitis C virus; and if he will make a statement. [50435]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell) on 15 July 1998, Official Report, column 222.

Home Care Services

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 16 June 1998, Official Report, column 162, on home care services, what factors underlie the changes in each year in the numbers and percentage of adult households in England receiving home help/home care services in each category. [50438]

Ms Jowell: Trends in the provision of domiciliary care reflect the provisions of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. One of the objectives of the Act was to focus services on those most in need.

Figures published in Statistical Bulletin "Community Care Statistics 1997 Day and domiciliary personal social services for Adults, England"(ref 1998/13), and summarised in the table, reflect the increased targeting. The table shows that the total number of contact hours has risen, as has the average number of hours spent with each household receiving the service, and the proportion of contact hours spent on more intensive packages of care has increased from 11 per cent. of total hours in 1992 to 28 per cent. in 1997.

Home help/care contact hours, households receiving service, average contact hours per household, and "intensive" packages of service during the survey week in September/October each year 1992 to 1997, England

Argentine Health Authorities

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on general practice co-operation systems with Argentine health authorities. [48678]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 13 July 1998]: There are no formal agreements between the United Kingdom and Argentina at Government level covering this area.

The Argentine authorities wish to develop their arrangements for primary health care. The Royal College of General Practitioners met Argentine healthcare experts in the UK in February and took part in a UK healthcare mission to Argentina, supported by the Department of Trade and Industry earlier this month.

Edgware Community Hospital

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the data on the use of Edgware Community Hospital Urgent Treatment Centre will be made available to the Independent Evaluation Team; [50740]

(2) to what medical and nursing protocols the Urgent Treatment Centre, Edgware Community Hospital, is currently operating. [50739]

Mr. Milburn: This is a local matter for the Wellhouse National Health Service Trust. My hon. Friend may, therefore, wish to contact Mr. David Phillips, Chairman of the Trust, for this information.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General what arrangements are in place to provide media training to Crown Prosecution staff; and if he will make a statement. [50144]

The Attorney-General: Media training is available for Chief Crown Prosecutors, Branch Crown Prosecutors and other senior staff. The courses are run by the Crown Prosecution Service's Communications Division and up to six people are trained at a time.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49839]

The Attorney-General: An examination of the methods available within my Department is being undertaken as part of the government-wide exercise.

Furthermore, the annual report of the Serious Fraud Office for 1997/98, which was published today, will also be available to hon. Members and members of the public on the SFO World Wide Web site at http://www.sfo.gov.uk. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the Houses.

Mrs. Ann Taylor [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Under plans for the development of the Government Secure Intranet (GSI), my office expects to be in a position to correspond electronically with hon. Members and the general public by the Autumn. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave today, Official Report, column 315.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Notarial Services

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received concerning the Scriveners Company and the provision of notarial services in central London. [50131]

Mr. Hoon: My Department wrote to interested parties on 29 May to ask for their views on whether the Government should seek to abolish the current statutory requirement that public notaries can practise in the City of London and the surrounding three miles only if they are members of the Scriveners Company. Representations on this subject have been received from a number of individuals and from:

Messrs. Hartwig;

Messrs. John Venn & Sons;

The Association of Solicitor Notaries in Greater London;

The Faculty Office of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury;

The Law Society of England and Wales;

The Notaries' Society;

The Office of Fair Trading;

The Scriveners Company;

The Society of Public Notaries of London.

The Lord Chancellor hopes to announce the Government's decision in due course.

Magistrates

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to modify his Department's restrictions on deaf people serving as magistrates. [50073]

Mr. Hoon: There is no absolute prohibition on deaf people serving as magistrates. The Lord Chancellor welcomes applications for the magistracy from deaf people who have the capacity, whether with technical aids or otherwise, to follow court proceedings and carry out the range of magisterial duties.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what meetings he has held with individuals, companies or other organisations regarding sponsorship of zones within the Millennium Dome; if he will list them; and who was responsible for taking the notes at each meeting. [51276]

Mr. Mandelson: I attend meetings with individuals, companies and other organisations on sponsorship of the Millennium Experience on a regular basis in the course of my Ministerial duties.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Vulnerable Road Users

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to reduce the injury rate amongst (a) cyclists, (b) pedestrians and (c) motorcyclists in London; and if he will list his Department's advisers on accident reduction. [48191]

Dr. Strang: The emphasis in London, as for the rest of the country, will be on a continuing programme of initiatives co-ordinating education, enforcement and engineering.

The Government are funding the London boroughs, the Highways Agency and the Traffic Director for London, to implement safety schemes. In addition, they are seeking ways to achieve further understanding of the causes, and co-ordinate that knowledge to promote good practice for the reduction of accidents among vulnerable road users, by working with the Association of London Government and the London Accident Analysis Unit. We will be bringing forward further measures to improve the safety of vulnerable road users as part of our new road safety strategy.

The Department has the following external advisers on road accident research:

Eur.Ing Robert Watson, Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders

Ms Clare Holman, Environmental Consultant

Professor Margaret Galer-Flyte, Loughborough University of Technology

Professor Richard Allsop, University College London

Mr. Geoff Maycock, Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Geoff Day, Freight Transport Association

Mr. Edward Chorlton, Devon County Council

Professor Mike McDonald, University of Southampton

Professor Derek Elsom, Oxford Brookes University

Mr. M. Sadeghi, Cranfield Impact Centre Limited

Professor James Reason, University of Manchester.

In addition, in drawing up our new road safety strategy, we are taking advice from a wide range of representatives of local government, the police, voluntary organisations and individual experts. The following external advisers and road safety research are members of the Road Safety Targets and Strategy Steering Group or Sub-Groups:

Hugh Alford, Association of Chief Police Officers

Correspondence

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Salisbury, dated 22 May, about delays on the A316 in Twickenham. [49873]

Dr. Strang: The Chief Executive of the Highways Agency replied on 6 July. I apologise for the length of the delay in replying to the hon. Member's letter.

Vehicle Fuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many £500 grants have been made for the conversion of vehicles to cleaner fuels. [50332]

Dr. Strang: As announced in the Budget, on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–1112, the Government intend to introduce from 1 January 1999, concessionary rates of vehicle excise duty (VED)—worth up to £500—for lorries and buses meeting stringent emissions standards. Thus no vehicles have yet benefited from this concession.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what grants the Government propose to make available for the conversion of taxi cabs to use road fuel gas. [50965]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are funding the Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme which provides grants towards the conversion of vehicles to run on alternative fuels. The duty on road fuel gases has been frozen for two successive Budgets with a commitment in the July 1997 Budget to maintain the differential that existed at that time between the duty on road fuel gases and the duty on diesel.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a pilot scheme to monitor the benefits of taxi cabs running on road fuel gas. [50966]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has already been involved in research on the environmental benefits of running a taxi on road fuel gases and we will continue to monitor developments in this area. In addition, the Public Carriage Office is working with manufacturers to encourage the development of alternative greener engines and fuels. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force has also set up a sub-group to consider the merits of the potential for wider use of alternative fuels. The Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme, funded by Government, provides grants towards alternatively fuelled vehicles, and the costs and performance of vehicles purchased under the scheme will be monitored and evaluated.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to assist the conversion of buses to use road fuel gases. [51034]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are funding the Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme which provides grants towards the conversion of vehicles to run on alternative fuels. Operators of eligible bus services also receive 100 per cent. rebate on the duty they pay on road fuel gases. The Chancellor announced at the last Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–1112, that operators of buses and HGVs, meeting stringent emission standards, would receive a rebate of up to £500 on VED.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce pilot schemes to monitor the advantages and disadvantages of converting buses to use road fuel gases. [51035]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has kept closely in touch with the work that some operators have done on the advantages and disadvantages of converting buses to use road fuel gases, including a number of tests carried out by London Transport Buses.

Brown-field Sites

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial incentives exist to encourage the development of urban brownfield and derelict sites. [50333]

Mr. Raynsford: English Partnerships, the Government's regeneration agency, supports physical regeneration projects across England. An important part of their programme is the reclamation and development of brownfield and derelict sites. Applications to English Partnerships are handled within the framework of its single Investment Fund. The operation of this Fund emphasises flexible partnerships and funding mechanisms and seeks to maximise private investment. The Challenge Fund, which is part of the Single Regeneration Budget, is also available for local regeneration partnerships and operates in a similar manner to English Partnerships.

In addition, The Government are committed to exploring the scope for using economic instruments to achieve our planning objectives, including modifications to VAT on housing, a greenfield tax, and reform of planning obligations. A key objective of all these options would be to discourage greenfield development and promote brownfield development.

Refrigerant Gases

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to ensure that the fire risk posed by hydrocarbon refrigerant gases is minimised and that these gases are properly and safely disposed of after use. [50577]

Angela Eagle: The use of hydrocarbons as refrigerants is covered by the standards BS EN 60335–2-24 and BS4434. When hydrocarbons are used in refrigerators appropriate safety precautions must be taken, encompassing design, operational and maintenance procedures. The Health and Safety Executive also produce guidance on the safe handling of liquefied petroleum gases (LPG) including hydrocarbon gases used as refrigerants. The guidance, which can be applied to a wide variety of circumstances, gives practical advice on the safe storage and use of LPG and also offers advice on basic fire precautions to be taken when handling such gases.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that HFCs used in refrigerators are recycled or disposed of properly so that they are not released into the atmosphere. [50576]

Angela Eagle: Sections 33(1)(c) and 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 oblige the producers and holders of waste to prevent its release to atmosphere. The application of these controls to CFC refrigerants is explained in DOE Circular 11/94 paragraphs 4.95–4.103, but the guidance is also applicable to other waste refrigerants.

The Government have also agreed a Declaration of intent with the refrigeration and air conditioning industry with the aim of reducing emissions of HFCs, which are global warming gases. The Declaration recommends that the servicing, maintenance and decommissioning of equipment containing HFCs are carried out only by competent persons. It also encourages all reasonably practicable precautionary measures to minimise refrigerant leakage, and recommends that refrigerants are recovered for re-use, reclamation or disposal during servicing and prior to equipment decommissioning. The Government will be issuing a consultation paper later in the summer on policy options for meeting their commitments to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, including HFCs.

Allotments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what encouragement he is giving to local authorities to (a) maintain and preserve allotments and (b) provide replacement land where land formerly used for allotments has been subject to development. [50655]

Angela Eagle: The Government are currently considering the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's report into 'The Future for Allotments', and will produce a formal response in due course. Section 8 of the Allotments Act 1925 provides that the Secretary of State must consent to the disposal of statutory allotment land by a local authority.

(a) Since 25 March 1998, statutory allotment land has been given increased protection by placing a requirement on authorities to demonstrate the steps they have taken to promote allotments in their area before they can dispose of such land.

(b) Consent under section 8 of the 1925 Act may not be given unless the Secretary of State is satisfied either that adequate provision will be made for displaced plotholders, or that such provision is not necessary or is impracticable.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage the use of allotments with particular reference to their potential for growing organic vegetables. [50651]

Angela Eagle: The Government are currently considering the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's report into the 'The Future for Allotments', and will produce a formal response in due course.

Occupational Illness or Injury

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many working days were lost in the last year for which figures are available as a result of occupational illness or injury, separately identifying self-certificated absences; and if he will make a statement. [50631]

Angela Eagle: In 1995 an estimated 19.5 million days were lost due to a work-related illness in Great Britain based on a five day week. There were an estimated 9.8 million days when workers were unavailable for work as a result of occupational injury in 1994–95, the latest year for which figures are available. This figure will include weekends and other days which are not workdays for some workers. The number of self-certified absences due to occupational illness or injury cannot be separately identified.

East London Line

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has evaluated for the re-opening of the East London Line between Dalston and Shoreditch. [50713]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At the request of the Deputy Prime Minister, London Underground prepared a report on the options for extending the East London Line and submitted it to the Deputy Prime Minister in December 1997. The Government are considering with London Transport how best to take the project forward.

London Government

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date the official figures from London's local government elections and referendum held on 7 May were disseminated to libraries in London; and by whom this task was carried out. [50822]

Mr. Raynsford: I understand that the London Research Centre will publish "London Borough Council Elections 7 May 1998" (ISBN 1 85261 271 2), a publication containing details of voting figures in London local elections and the referendum, on 27 July, and that copies will be sent to, among others, the Chief Librarian in each London Borough.

Endangered Species

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the species of (i) flora and (ii) fauna identified as being in danger of extinction within the United Kingdom in (a) 1986, (b) 1991 and (c) 1996. [50931]

Mr. Meacher: I will ensure that the information requested—which is of a complex nature—is made available to the hon. Member shortly. It will be placed in the House Library next week.

Foodstuffs (Seal Oil)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of foodstuffs containing oil derived from seals; and if he will make a statement. [50934]

Angela Eagle: The Department of Health report that there is no evidence that foodstuffs containing oil derived from seals are widely consumed in the United Kingdom.

Monk seals (Monachus spp.), Fur seals (Artocephalus spp.) and the Southern elephant-seal (Mirounga leonina) are protected under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) to which the UK is a Party. Under Council Regulation EC 338/97 which implements CITES in the EU, imports and exports of specimens of protected species and their parts and derivatives, including foodstuffs, are controlled under a licensing system. The most endangered species (ie Monk seals, and the Juan Fernandez (Arctocephalus philippii) and Guadelupe (Artocephalus townsendi) fur seals) are banned from international trade. Within the EU this extends to any commercial use, including buying, selling and display.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve the legal protection of sites of special scientific interest. [50929]

Mr. Meacher: We are presently considering a number of means for improving the protection and management of Sites of Special Scientific Interest. Officials are preparing a consultative paper which we hope to publish later this year. If legislation proves necessary we will look for a suitable opportunity.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the rate of damage to SSSIs over the last five years. [50930]

Mr. Meacher: The annual reports produced by English Nature summarise the key factors underlying damage to SSSIs. The number of incidents of damage has now decreased to well below 1 per cent. of SSSIs by area per year compared to 3 per cent. in the early 1990s. The main cause of damage is agricultural activities such as under and overgrazing, high levels of fertiliser application and the pollution of water courses. Other impacts include over-abstraction of water and 3rd party damage, such as the use of off-road vehicles. Occasional losses occur for housing, roads, and industrial development, although this has decreased considerably over the last five years.

River Levels (Wildlife)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the impact on wildlife of the present abstraction levels from rivers; and if he will make a statement. [50933]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency is responsible for licensing water abstraction in England and Wales, a function it exercises in conjunction with its other statutory duties which include the conservation of flora and fauna which are dependent on an aquatic environment. In its May 1998 submission to the Government entitled A Price Worth Paying, which is in the Library of the House, the Agency, in consultation with English Nature and the Countryside Council of Wales, has listed sites which are considered to be affected by abstractions. A number of these sites are designated for their international importance for birds or other wildlife. We shall take the Agency's advice on these sites into account in determining the guidance we give to the Director General of Water Services on the environmental obligations which water companies will be expected to meet through the Periodic Review of water prices.

Recycled Land

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1998, Official Report, columns 9–10, concerning recycled land, what completion date he has set for local authorities undertaking the identification work. [50935]

Mr. Raynsford: Data collection from local authorities for phase one of the National Land Use Database, which covers vacant previously developed land which may be available for redevelopment, is scheduled to take place between August and October. This should enable English Partnerships to publish information on an initial set of sites suitable for redevelopment by the end of the year, and DETR to publish summary statistics based on information on all sites by March 1999.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the recommendations of the Electoral Reform Society, contained in the report Predictable and Unaccountable, with reference to the electoral arrangements for the Greater London Authority. [50941]

Mr. Raynsford: Following extensive consultation, which included representations made by the Electoral Reform Society, we set our proposals for electoral arrangements for the Greater London Authority in the White Paper, "A Mayor and Assembly for London". The proposals were endorsed by the people of London in the Referendum held on 7 May. We intend to bring forward legislation to implement our proposals as soon as the legislative timetable permits.

NHS Staff (Accidents)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many NHS employees in Wales were killed or injured at work in each year since 1991. [51236]

Angela Eagle: The information is as follows:

Injuries in Wales to employees in the NHS as reported to HSE 1991–92 to 1997–98

Year	Fatal	Major	Over 3 day	Total
1991–92	0	24	234	258

Roads Review

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the forthcoming Roads Review will announce the completion of the dualling of the A11. [50959]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We shall be announcing the conclusions of the Roads Review shortly.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the number of registered British fishing vessels (a) under 12 metres and (b) over 12 metres in length and the number of fishermen's lives lost from each in each of the last five years. [46477]

Ms Glenda Jackson [pursuant to her reply, 23 June 1998, c. 434]: The number of vessels on the UK fishing vessel register at 31 December in each of the last 5 years, both under 12 metres and 12 metres and over in length, and the numbers of fishermen's lives lost from vessels in those length ranges in each year are as follows:

	Fishing vessels under 12 metres		Fishing vessels 12 metres and over
Year	Vessels on register	Lives lost	Vessels on Register	Lives lost
1993	9,219	10	1,871	8
1994	8,470	12	1,729	14
1995[1]	7,499	8	1,652	11
1996	6,583	9	1,493	11
1997	6,354	8	1,425	21

OSPAR Convention

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his objectives at the forthcoming Oslo-Paris convention in Lisbon. [49322]

Mr. Meacher: The main purposes of this first Ministerial Meeting of the Commission established by the 1992 OSPAR Convention for the protection of the marine environment of the North East Atlantic are to round off certain aspects left unresolved by the 1992 Convention and to set the strategies for the Commission over the next generation.

When the OSPAR Convention was negotiated in 1992, the then French and UK Governments insisted that the Convention should preserve a potential future option for France and the UK to re-start the dumping at sea of low-and intermediate-level radioactive waste. Last September the UK and France announced that they would give up that option. The Ministerial Meeting is expected to approve a formal instrument to terminate the option. There will thus be a complete ban on dumping radioactive waste.

In 1992, there was insufficient support for extending the competence of the OSPAR Commission beyond land-based discharges, dumping, the offshore oil and gas industry and the monitoring and assessment of the marine environment. Largely as a result of UK initiatives, the Ministerial meeting is expected to approve a new Annexe to the Convention on the protection of marine wildlife and habitats. This will fill an important lacuna.

The Ministerial Meeting will also aim to adopt new rules on the disposal of disused offshore installations. The UK is committed to returning all disused offshore installations to land wherever it is safe and practicable to do so. The problem is to settle how to deal with the exceptions.

There is substantial agreement to a regime which would provide for a general ban on dumping such installations or leaving them in place, subject to:

a. derogations for some large steel installations, all existing concrete installations and exceptional and unforseen circumstances; and

b. an assessment framework and consultation procedures before such derogations can be allowed.

The definition of the category of large steel installations where derogations are to be allowed remains to be agreed. There is also a question about future concrete installations.

The UK is making a new proposal on large steel installations. We have already accepted that it will generally be safe and practicable to return all topsides to land. Discussion of large steel installations has therefore been about the substructures. So far, all parties have considered these substructures as a whole. We now think that it would be helpful to distinguish between the footings of the substructures and the rest of them.

In order to help achieve consensus, the UK is now prepared to accept a general obligation to return all the parts of all large steel structures above the footings to land for recycling or final disposal. My hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry has played a large part in developing this idea. This would mean that there would be a complete ban on dumping steel installations, which is what many have sought. Such a ban would also prohibit the toppling of all steel installations. Footings will be considered on a case by case basis but with a presumption that they will be removed wherever practicable and safe to do so.

With the new Convention, Ministers from the Contracting Parties need to agree the basis on which the officials will work internationally over the next decades. We want to agree strategies that are demanding but achievable and which will guide the work of the OSPAR Commission over the next twenty years or more. These strategies need to be acceptable to all the Contracting Parties, and we shall therefore be considering with our colleagues the various proposals on the table. We must be satisfied of our ability to deliver on any commitments we enter into. The strategies under consideration are.

a. Hazardous substances: The proposed strategy on hazardous substances represents a major new initiative. The strategy should make a clear commitment to ultimate goals of reducing concentrations of hazardous substances in the marine environment to background levels for naturally occurring substances and close to zero for man-made synthetic substances, and to a time frame of moving towards the cessation of discharges of hazardous substances by 2020. There should also be a mechanism to identify the hazardous substances that we should be tackling as priorities. This strategy would be a major new step, working in parallel with the EC Framework Directive on Water. The strategy should also provide for new efforts to identify and tackle endocrine disruptors.

b. Radioactive substances: At the September 1997 meeting of the OSPAR Commission, we restated our wish to make progress on reducing radioactive discharges to sea and we will fulfil this commitment. To ensure that we are able to foresee and avoid problems related to radioactive discharges in future, we shall be asking nuclear operators to prepare forward looking strategies for the next twenty years.

c. Nutrients: The main action to reduce the substances that cause eutrophication comes from the EC Nitrates and Urban Waste Water Directives. The proposed strategy would complement these by setting up a mechanism to identify eutrophication problem areas and potential problem areas, and to develop further actions to deal with these where existing programmes are not good enough.

d. Wildlife: To flesh out the new Annexe on Wildlife, the proposed strategy would provide for assessing a wide range of human activities that may adversely affect wildlife at sea, and the development of measures to address the problems which are identified. This would represent a new departure in trying to get international agreement on programmes that will protect marine wildlife outside territorial waters.

e. Offshore oil and gas: Work in this field has been concentrated on the proposed decision on the disposal of offshore installations. But we will support commitments to develop a long-term strategy to validate environmental management systems and to set their goals.

Finally, we want to find ways of getting wider membership of OSPAR. The Czech Republic (through the Elbe) and the Russian Federation are important for OSPAR waters: we would like to open a dialogue with them. We also need to find ways to help the lessons OSPAR has learnt to be applied in other regions.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civic Forum

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the estimated timetable for setting up the consultative Civic Forum to work with members of the Northern Ireland Assembly. [50403]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has referred the establishment of the Civic Forum to the shadow Northern Ireland Assembly. In the period before devolution the Government intend to consult with the First Minister, the Deputy First Minister and the Assembly so that arrangements can be put in hand to help secure its earliest appropriate establishment.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ensure that papers produced by the New Northern Ireland Assembly are made available to hon. Members through the Vote Office; and if she will make a statement. [50419]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Copies of the Official Record will be laid in the Library at Westminster, but the circulation of other papers produced by the Assembly should be a matter, initially, for the Assembly itself to determine.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the capital expenditure needed to develop the cancer treatment facilities at the Belfast City Hospital; and when the developments are planned to be completed. [50133]

Mr. Worthington: The preliminary estimate of the capital cost of the proposed Cancer Centre is £28 million, including equipment. The current aim is to have the Centre constructed within 5 years.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the closure of cancer treatment services at Belvoir Park Hospital; and when the final transfer of such services to the Belfast City Hospital is expected to take place. [50135]

Mr. Worthington: The cancer treatment services at Belvoir Park Hospital will continue until a new Cancer Centre at the Belfast City Hospital site has been completed. The transfer is expected to take place within five years. In the meantime management responsibility for cancer services at Belvoir Park Hospital will transfer to Belfast City Hospital HSS Trust later this year.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the (a) number, (b) type and (c) age of ambulances in service with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service in each of the last five years. [50326]

Mr. Worthington: The information is given in the tables.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessments she has made of the effect of the introduction of the national minimum wage in terms of (a) the total number of people employed and (b) the numbers employed in each sector of the economy. [50151]

Mr. Ingram: Current estimates indicate that a total of approximately 66,000 employees in employment in Northern Ireland will be directly affected when the national minimum wage is introduced in April 1999. The majority of these work in service sector industries. Current data sources are not robust enough to provide reliable detailed sectoral estimates.

Railways (Antrim-Bleach Green Line)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) new stations will be constructed and (b) old stations re-opened and at what estimated cost, on the railway line between Antrim and Bleach Green. [50137]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The upgrading of 2 former railway halts, at Templepatrick and Mossely West, is planned as part of the reinstatement of the Antrim to Bleach Green line at an estimated cost of £1.4 million.

Downe Hospital

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which services will be provided in the proposed new Downe Hospital. [50325]

Mr. Worthington: I announced my decision on 28 May to support the development of a new modern hospital for Downpatrick. To that end I have asked the Down Lisburn Health and Social Services Trust, in conjunction with the Eastern Health and Social Services Board and local GPs, to develop a proposal for a new hospital which will build on developments in treatments and technology and treat patients in the most appropriate setting locally while continuing to have access to a considerable range of acute services supported by the necessary specialist services and back-up facilities available from larger acute centres in Belfast.

Road Accident Injury Claims

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland made road accident injury claims, and how much was paid by the Government for such claims, in each of the last five years. [50146]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The following personal injury claims were made against the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland Roads Services and the total expenditure on all personal injury claims concluded in the last 5 years has been:

Year	New claims	Total expenditure
1997–98	1,985	3,805,957.45
1996–97	1,712	2,823,289.50
1995–96	1,789	2,967,018.60
1994–95	1,701	4,302,311.40
1993–94	1,622	3,908,445.69

The figures include claims arising from footpath incidents. It is not possible, without disproportionate cost, to distinguish those claims related specifically to road accidents.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost to public funds of expenses for Lord-Lieutenants in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [50265]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Expenditure incurred by the Northern Ireland Office on Lord-Lieutenants' expenses in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Amount (£)[1]
1988–89	4,000
1989–90	6,000
1990–91	4,000
1991–92	8,000
1992–93	5,000
1993–94	6,000
1994–95	10,000
1995–96	6,000
1996–97	14,000
1997–98	9,000

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest £1,000

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Lord-Lieutenants currently serve Northern Ireland. [50266]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The number of Lord-Lieutenants currently serving in Northern Ireland is 8.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cash savings his Department will achieve through restructuring the TA; what proportion of those savings will (a) be re-allocated to the regular army and (b) form part of his Department's efficiency savings. [51036]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those properties and lands identified for disposal by his Department. [51037]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has a large number of properties which have been identified as surplus and are now in the process of disposal. These range from major establishments and airfields, to smaller plots and single houses. A list of sites currently in disposal was placed in the Library earlier this year, on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 41. That list is now being updated. As part of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) we have identified further sites for disposal some of which are listed in Supporting Essay 11 to the SDR White Paper, and on some of which final discussions have not yet been reached.

To provide our assessment of the open market value of individual sites might prejudice the eventual sale and I am therefore withholding the information under Exemptions 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Strategic Defence Review, if he will make a statement on the basis of his Department's assumptions that receipts from sales of properties and land from the Defence Estate will double over the next four years. [50963]

Mr. Spellar: The figure for estimated disposal receipts included in the Strategic Defence Review (SDR) White Paper is based upon our assessment of the open market value of the properties currently identified for disposal. In some cases this is based on in-house valuations carried out by professional surveyors, and in others on valuations carried out by consultants. The figure also allows for receipts from sites which are likely to come forward as a result of studies and further rationalisation of the estate following SDR.

Manpower Reductions

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what long-term financial savings his Department will achieve through the reduction of (a) military and (b) civilian manpower. [50957]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Strategic Defence Review, on what basis his Department estimated that the defence share of GDP will fall from 2.7 to 2.4 per cent. in 2002. [50962]

Mr. George Robertson: The assumptions which have been used to calculate that the defence share of GDP will fall from 2.7 per cent. to 2.4 per cent. are taken from the Economic Assumptions for Public Finance Projections contained within Table B1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", March 1998, HC Paper No. 620.

Service Leavers

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision his Department makes to assist service leavers in their transition to civilian life; and if he will make a statement. [51645]

Dr. Reid: My Department is laying the foundations of a modern resettlement service, by introducing improvements to match the changing employment market and aspirations of Service leavers. A contract has been awarded today to Coutts Consulting Group plc to work with my Department in establishing a Career Transition Partnership. The new arrangements will provide a focused individual service, including counselling, workshops and nationwide job finding support. The contract will run, initially, for a period of five years.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to public funds of expenses for Lord-Lieutenants in England in each of the last 10 years. [50261]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

Expenditure incurred by the Home Office and the Department of Trade and Industry[1] on Lord-Lieutenants' expenses in each of the last ten years is as follows:

Year	Amount[2]
1988–89	190,000
1989–90	225,000
1990–91	253,000
1991–92	305,000
1992–93	372,000
1993–94	479,000
1994–95	572,000
1995–96	736,000
1996–97	672,000
1997–98	784,000

[1] The Department of Trade and Industry pays expenses incurred by Lord-Lieutenants in the presentation of the Queen's Awards for Industry

[2] Figures rounded to the nearest £1000

Some local authorities in England also support lieutenancy activities. Information on any costs incurred is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Pharmaceutical Pricing Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he will take into account in the renegotiations of the Pharmaceutical Pricing Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [49565]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Occupational Health

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many medical and nursing staff have worked in occupational health in the NHS in Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what were the grades of those employees; [51235]

(2) how many unfilled consultant or approved training posts there are in occupational health in Wales; [51234]

(3) how many whole-time-equivalent NHS consultants there are in post in Wales in occupational health; and how many are (a) full and (b) part-time. [51233]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on medical staff employed by the NHS in Wales is collected by means of an annual census of staff in post at 30 September. Information on those staff with a specialty of occupational medicine in given in the table.

Medical staff in post at 30 September with a main specialty of occupational health (whole-time equivalent number)

	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Consultant	4.1	4.5	4.5	3.7	3.2
Senior registrar	1.0	—	—	—	—
Hospital practitioner	0.2	0.2	—	—	—
Clinical assistant	1.6	1.1	1.3	1.6	1.5

As part of the census information is sought on vacant posts. Data collected from NHS Trusts and Health Authorities for the 1997 census indicated that there were no vacant posts in occupational health at that time.

The 3.2 whole-time equivalent consultant staff in 1997 related to 5 consultants in number, 2 full-time and 3 part-time.

Information on nursing staff is not collected on the basis of individual specialties and, therefore, the number of nurses working in occupational health is not available centrally.

NHS Premises (Accidents)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department takes to ensure that NHS trusts have adequate arrangements for recording accidents on NHS premises; what encouragement is given to staff to report accidents; and what steps the NHS Executive takes to monitor the safety performance of NHS trusts. [51238]

Mr. Win Griffiths: All employers, including NHS Trusts, have a legal obligation to report accidents to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995. It is for individual employers to encourage their employees to report incidents. Monitoring the safety performance of employers is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

Land Development

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details and dates of occasions when (a) the Welsh Development Agency, (b) the Development Board for Rural Wales and (c) the Land Authority for Wales have sought consent either before the event or retrospectively for land development acquisitions and deals without planning permission; and if he will make a statement. [51222]

Mr. Ron Davies: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost to public funds of expenses for Lord-Lieutenants in Wales in each of the last 10 years. [50263]

Mr. Ron Davies: Expenditure incurred by the Welsh Office on Lord-Lieutenants' expenses in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Amount (£)
1998–89	'9,000
1989–90	'13,000
1990–91	'14,000
1991–92	'14,000
1992–93	17,000
1993–94	18,000
1994–95	15,000
1995–96	19,000
1996–97	20,000
1997–98	21,000

' Stationery figures are not included, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Note:

All figures rounded to nearest £1,000

Some local authorities in Wales also support lieutenancy activities. Information on these costs is not available centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Lord-Lieutenants currently serve Wales. [50264]

Mr. Ron Davies: The number of Lord-Lieutenants currently serving Wales is 8.

TREASURY

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount of asset sales have been realised (a) by each local authority and (b) in total by local authorities in each of the last five years. [48759]

Mr. Darling: Estimates for total local authority capital receipts in each of the last five years were published in Table 6.10 of Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses 1998–99 (Cm 3901). The same document also includes, in Table 1.6, figures over the period in question for the proceeds from the sale of fixed assets. I will write shortly to my hon. Friend with a breakdown of total capital receipts by individual local authority.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48671]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Tesco Plc

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the occasions upon which Ministers and officials have met Tesco plc or their representatives or advisers since 1 May 1997. [50156]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Treasury Ministers, special advisers and other officials have extensive dealings with organisations in both the public and private sectors as part of their official duties. It would be impracticable to maintain a central record of meetings with representatives of external bodies.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cash value of the illegal drugs trade within the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of its impact on the United Kingdom economy. [50658]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The Office for National Statistics published an article in the July 1998 edition of Economic Trends which provides some illustrative estimates of the value of illegal economic activities, including trade in drugs. A copy of this publication is available in the House of Commons Library. The estimates are not yet sufficiently developed to give a reliable account of the impact on the UK economy.

Financial Securities

Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about competition in the financial securities sector. [49370]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 16 July 1998]: To date, the Treasury has received 143 responses to its consultation document about proposals to benchmark Individual Savings Accounts, "Making Saving Easy". Some of these responses have raised competition issues.

Euro

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what expenditure on promoting the euro is planned for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; [50422]

(2) what EU funding he has applied for to promote the euro in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [50354]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 July 1998]: The Government's communication campaign on the euro is aimed not at promoting the euro but at ensuring that UK businesses are aware of the implications of the introduction of the single currency from 1 January 1999, and to provide them with the information they need.

To this end the Treasury Euro Preparations Unit has received Summer Supplementary Estimate provision of £7.5 million to help raise business awareness of the implications of the launch of the euro, and to provide business with practical help during 1998–99. No expenditure has been authorised beyond this.

To date the Commission has agreed to provide £21,000 from the Community funds towards the costs of the publication and distribution of the Treasury booklet "EMU: Practical Information for Business", published last July. We will continue to talk to the Commission about the scope for further help with our campaign for raising business awareness for 1 January 1999.

National Asset Register

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the assets identified in the National Asset Register which are located in the city of Norwich. [50823]

Mr. Darling: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 279.

The Government propose to consider, in the light of the reaction to the version published in November 1997, whether to produce further editions of the National Asset Register. As part of this exercise we will also consider what the appropriate level of detail of any future editions should be in the light of user's information needs and the cost implications of these.

SCOTLAND

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider the case for reform of the law and practice of compulsory purchase and blight in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [51646]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Office is looking closely at the case for reform of Scots law and practice in this area. In addition to Scottish based work, there will be Scottish participation in the review of the general principles being undertaken by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. This will ensure that any proposals for legislative change will take the separate Scottish context fully into account. Such change for Scotland will, of course, be a matter for the Scottish Parliament to consider.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to public funds of expenses for Lord-Lieutenants in Scotland in each of the last 10 years. [50259]

Mr. McLeish: Expenditure incurred by The Scottish Office on Lord-Lieutenants' expenses in each of the last 10 years is set out. Some local authorities also support lieutenancy activities. Information on any costs incurred is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Scottish Office Expenditure

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update tables 1.3 and 1.4 in Serving Scotland's Needs, published in April, to take account of changes in and projections of expenditure consequent on the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51050]

Mr. Dewar: Tables 1.3 and 1.4 were prepared in accordance with the previous public expenditure arrangements. The change in these arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1195–1201, has required some amendment to this form of presentation. The tables, therefore, present information updated to take account of the financial settlement for the financial years 1999–2000 to 2001–02, in the revised format. In accordance with normal practice, the tables have been rolled forward by one year.

[1] Under the new public expenditure control arrangements and devolution, the Barnett formula used to determine Scottish expenditure applies to the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) in place of the former Scottish Block. Full details of the definitional changes between the DEL and the Control Total were given in the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998", published in June.

[2] Includes provision for the Crown Office, which will be within the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament.

[3] Total budget assigned to the Scottish Parliament. There are some differences between the coverage of the Assigned Budget and the former Scottish Bloc, the main one being the exclusion of non-domestic rates. Figures here include expenditure on Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance of around £37 million per year which is included in the DEL but excluded from the Assigned Budget for control purposes until 1999–2000.

[4] Includes around £1 million for the New Deal for Young People in 1997–98 and £3 million for Childcare in 1998–99.

[5] Total expenditure financed by the Windfall Tax and administered by the Scottish Office. The majority of expenditure on the New Deal is administered for all of Great Britain by DfEE and DSS. Total expenditure in Scotland on the New Deal is projected to be over £450 million in the period 1997–2002.

[6] Figures for future years uprated in line with the RPI.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probationary Prison Officers

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the percentage of probationary prison officers in each young offender institution in England. [49874]

Ms Quin: A probationary prison officer is a newly appointed prison officer who is in the process of completing an initial 12 month probationary period, during which time he or she is required to achieve a satisfactory level of performance, conduct and attendance, prior to the appointment being confirmed. The information requested about probationary prison officers is given in the table for those Young Offender Institutions (YOIs) which are separate establishments. Where a YOI is co-located with an adult establishment, it is not possible to extrapolate this information.

New Prisons

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors led him to reject the proposals for building a prison in Winwick, near Warrington. [50245]

Ms Quin: The decision not to acquire the site of Winwick Hospital for the construction of a new prison was reached on financial grounds. This decision does not remove the urgent need for additional prison places to serve the North West.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors led him to approve proposals to build a prison on a site at Ashworth Hospital, Maghull, Merseyside. [50317]

Ms Quin: There is an urgent need for additional prison places to serve Merseyside. The Ashworth Hospital south site is ideally located to meet this need. The site meets the Prison Service's criteria in respect of affordability, size, topography, communication links and availability of mains services, and on planning grounds is considered an appropriate site for development.

Prisons (Private Management)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of the Prison Service estate which will be privately managed by the year 2002; and if he will make a statement. [50592]

Ms Quin: By March 2002, the certified normal accommodation of the prison estate is forecast to be 67,700. Of these places, it is expected that 6,600 will be privately managed. Therefore the percentage of the Prison Service estate forecast to be privately managed by 2002 is 9.7 per cent.

Alternatively, another way of measuring the percentage of the estate expected to be privately managed is to look at numbers of prisons rather than sum of places. Current plans are for 143 prisons to be operating in March 2002. Of these, it is expected that 11 will be privately managed. The percentage of the Prison Service estate expected to be privately managed in 2002 using this forecast is 7.7 per cent.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the basis on which financial penalties imposed on contractors of privately managed prisons are calculated; and if he will make a statement. [50587]

Ms Quin: There are three financial remedies available to the Prison Service as a result of a contractor's non-performance under a contract for a Design, Construct, Manage and Finance (DCMF) prison. Fees may be withheld under the following circumstances:

i) if certain criteria for "available places" are not met. The criteria include levels of security, control of prisoners and physical requirements such as lighting and heating;

ii) a "penalty points" system, where non-compliance with performance measures specified in the contract leads to an award of pre-determined penalty points; and

iii) if the contractor holds more than a specified number of prisoners two to a cell.

For management only prisons (Blakenhurst, Buckley Hall, Doncaster and Wolds), reductions in payment may result from a performance measure procedure similar to the DCMF penalty points system, and as a result of deficiencies that fall outside the performance measures procedures.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the capital cost of each of the privately built prisons. [50586]

Ms Quin: The project costs for each of the privately built prisons are: Parc, £75m; Altcourse, £88m; Lowdham Grange, £32m; Pucklechurch, £36m; and Agecroft, £55m. The project costs include capital expenditure before the prison's opening and consist mainly of construction costs.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the calculations of the relative costs of privately and publicly managed prisons take into account the cost of (a) capital repayments and (b) interest charges on such payments to the relevant private sector company. [50585]

Ms Quin: Yes. The capital repayments by the contractor for Design, Construct, Manage and Finance prisons and the interest accruing were included in the costs of these prisons when compared with their closest public sector comparators. There are no comparable costs in non Private Finance Initiative procurement since payment is not amortised over a contract period.

Altcourse Prison

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the quality and level of service being delivered at HMP Altcourse following the recent Prison Service audit; when audits are planned to be undertaken into HMP Parc and HMP Lowdham Grange; and if he will make a statement. [50595]

Ms Quin: The audit of Altcourse prison, which took place in April 1998, detected some deficiencies in contract compliance but the performance of the prison overall has been satisfactory. A contract compliance audit of Parc prison took place during the week beginning 29 June and an operational audit in the week beginning 6 July. An audit of Lowdham Grange prison is planned for August 1998.

Prisoners (Medical Records)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist between the National Health Service and the Prison Service for mutual access to relevant medical records of prisoners during and after custody; and if he will make a statement. [50589]

Ms Quin: Prison healthcare staff are not required, as a matter of routine, to obtain the previous non-Prison Service medical records of all prisoners received into custody. Where it is considered necessary, and the patient prisoner agrees, staff will request medical reports or the individual health records from the National Health Service (NHS). In cases where there is a need for treatment to continue following release, medical information is transferred from the prison doctor to the prisoner's General Practitioner or other NHS doctor as required.

A new health care standard on "continuity of health care" is being developed by the Prison Service in collaboration with a number of agencies including the NHS. This is aimed at facilitating the exchange of information and will provide additional advice and guidance to staff.

Prisoners (Protection)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being kept in separate regimes for their protection, at their own request on the last date for which figures are available; and what were the equivalent figures in each of the last three years. [50594]

Ms Quin: Prisoners may be held on Prison Rule 43 and Young Offender Institution Rule 46 for their own protection, or may be held in vulnerable prisoner units separate from other prisoners without being placed on either Rule. Figures for the end of May 1998, the most recent available information, and for the same date in the three previous years are shown in the table.

Prisoners (Continous Assessment)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently under continuous assessment by the Prison Service; what arrangements are in place to ensure that prisoners are not released directly from long periods of continuous assessment into the community; and if he will make a statement. [50430]

Ms Quin: There are 20 prisoners on the continuous assessment scheme (CAS). There is a possibility that prisoners may be released directly into the community: however, wherever possible, prisoners are returned to normal prison conditions prior to release.

Prison Staff

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the full complement of each category of staff at (a) HMP Altcourse, (b) HMP Parc and (c) HMP Lowdham Grange; and how many staff are currently employed in each category. [50591]

Ms Quin: Each contractor categorises staff differently. Information for each prison is set out in the tables.

[50596]

Ms Quin: The information required is set out in the table. The wastage rate in 1997–98 for all staff in public sector prisons was 6.76 per cent.

Prisons (Health Services)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had in relation to the transfer of responsibility for health services in prisons to the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement. [50588]

Ms Quin: I receive regular reports about the progress of the Prison Service and National Health Service (NHS) joint working group on the future organisation of prison health care. This group is considering, among other options for improving prison health care, the transfer of responsibility to the NHS. The Government will announce their decision about whether or not this would be an appropriate way to proceed, once the working group has produced its report and we have had an opportunity to consider it.

Crimes (Motivation)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are for the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate to investigate the number of crimes committed based on (a) homophobia and (b) religious hatred; and if he will make a statement. [50602]

Mr. Michael: The Directorate is in the process of commissioning a study of religious discrimination which is intended to clarify the extent of overlap between religious and racial discriminations. Furthermore, the Directorate plans to publish a report later this year on the police racial incident figures. This will cover the kind of incidents (including those between different religious groups) which the police may record as being racially motivated).

From the information collected centrally, it is not possible to determine the number of offences or incidents of homophobic crime. The Home Office collects statistics on the number of recorded offences by categories which include violence against the person, indecent assault on a male, indecency between males and rape of a male. However, there is no way of identifying which offences had a homophobic element.

In 1996, the Association of Chief Police Officers published a set of Good Practice Guidelines for Dealing with Homophobic Incidents. This included a definition of what should be regarded as a homophobic incident:

"Any incident which appears to either the victim, investigating officer or any other person to be motivated by homophobia, that is animosity towards lesbians and gay men".

The guidelines also recommended that police forces should record and monitor such incidents.

Such information that is available on homophobic crime is contained in surveys. For example, in a survey of gay men carried out in Lewisham as part of the Lewisham Safer Cities project in 1992, the vast majority reported experience of verbal abuse (81 per cent.) and approaching half reported being attacked physically. Property offences were less commonly reported.

Stonewall, as an organisation which campaigns for the civil rights of lesbians, gay men and bisexuals, has carried out a nationwide survey and key findings included:

three quarters reported experiencing verbal abuse on at least one occasion; over a third of men and a quarter of women reported experiencing violence in the last five years because of their sexuality;

some groups, such as black, Asian, disabled and young respondents, had greater risk of victimisation.

Both studies found repeat victimisation was common. They provide useful information, although it must be acknowledged that they may not provide a representative sample.

With regard to crimes connected to religious hatred, most such crimes are likely also to have an element of racial hatred. As such, they will fall within the very wide definition of a racial incident first adopted by the police in 1985:

"Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation; or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

In prosecutions of crimes with a racial element under existing legislation, an element of racial motivation may be treated as an aggravating factor by the courts at the point of sentencing. The Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] also makes provision for a set of new, specific racially aggravated offences, where the maximum sentence exceeds that for their non-racially motivated equivalent. In addition, my right hon. Friend, during the Report stage of the Bill, undertook to monitor charges and sentences in areas where there is intercommunal violence between religious and racial groups, to ensure that the provisions do not unduly favour one group.

Prisoners (Consultation Costs)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cost of each public relations exercise and consultation process in relation to the opening of new prisons in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [50590]

Ms Quin: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the Prison Service's consultation costs in respect of its recent decision to build a new prison on the site of the former remand centre at Ashford, Middlesex, are estimated at £23,000. It would not be unreasonable to assume that other new prison projects involving the same amount of consultation would incur similar costs.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to speed up the process of payment by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. [50654]

Mr. Michael: The criminal injuries compensation system was speeded up by the introduction, with effect from 1 April 1996, of a tariff-based scheme operated by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority in place of the scheme based on common law damages administered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (CICB). Current indications are that the tariff approach enables some 85 per cent. of claims to be decided within 12 months of receipt, in comparison with 60 per cent. under the former scheme; and 80 per cent. of appeals are dealt with within six months instead of the indicative waiting time of two years applicable to most CICB hearings.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much specialised training in man days was provided to Metropolitan Police officers of each rank in respect of (a) murder inquiries and (b) racial incidents in the last year for which figures are available. [50664]

Mr. Michael: Training in the Metropolitan Police Service is an operational matter for the Commissioner. The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police Service does provide training to officers in respect of murder inquiries. This training is provided at a number of levels and through different courses. The most significant of these is the Management of Serious Crimes Course and the Detective Constables Course (the latter was introduced on 31 March 1998).

The total number of officers on these courses between 1 July 1997 and 30 June 1998 were:

Constables: 108

Sergeants: 15

Inspectors: 81

Chief Inspectors: 11.

Elements of Community and Race Relations and Equal Opportunities Training are included in the majority of all training delivered to officers at all levels.

The Commissioner has recently appointed Deputy Assistant Commissioner John Grieve to head the next phase of reform of police racial awareness training and police investigation of racial and violent crime.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the projected change in funding per Metropolitan Police officer consequent on the proposed boundary changes if current arrangements for central Government funding and precepting remain unchanged; [50662]

(2) what will be (a) the percentage change in the number of Metropolitan Police officers and (b) the percentage change in the financial contribution of precepting authorities under the proposed redrawing of Metropolitan Police boundaries. [50663]

Mr. Michael: The proposed changes to the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police will lead to some re-distribution of existing resources, including police officers, but it is too early to give precise estimates.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the projected change in the number of Metropolitan Police officers in (i) 2000 and (ii) 2005 on present trends of recruitment and wastage. [50660]

Mr. Michael: It is for the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police to determine what number of officers will be required to police the capital.

In making this assessment, the Commissioner will consider all the demands on the finances available to him in order to provide an efficient and effective service, while ensuring best value is achieved.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government propose to assist the Metropolitan Police in its recruitment. [50659]

Mr. Michael: It is a matter for the Commissioner to determine what proportion of the funding of the Metropolitan Police Service is used in the recruitment of its officers.

The Commissioner informs me that, in common with other employers in the South East, the police are having to work hard to attract suitable staff, but that two national recruitment campaigns are being run this year.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the quarterly totals for the last three years of the number of (a) officers leaving the Metropolitan Police service or retiring, (b) people applying to join the Metropolitan Police and (c) people accepted as recruits into the Metropolitan Police. [50661]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner has provided the following information:

(a) Officers leaving the Metropolitan Police service or retiring

Year	First quarter	Second quarter	Third quarter	Fourth quarter	Total
1995–96	286	344	334	331	1,295
1996–97	333	338	392	365	1,428
1997–98	388	368	395	436	1,587

(b) Those applying to join the Metropolitan Police:

Year	Number
1995–96	7,208
1996–97	3,941
1997–98	4,633

(c) Those accepted as recruits into the Metropolitan Police:

Year	Number
1995–96	1,208
1996–97	692
1997–98	1,185

The Commissioner tells me that, as applications and subsequent acceptances may take place in different quarters, a breakdown by quarters is not possible.

Child Protection

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further plans he has to tackle the issue of preventing unsuitable people from working with children and to protect young people from abuse by those in positions of trust following the debate on lowering the age of consent from 18 to 16 years on 22 June; and if he will make a statement. [51727]

Mr. Michael: During the debate on 22 June 1998, Official Report, columns 709–811, I referred to the interdepartmental working group set up to look as a matter of priority at further safeguards needed to prevent those unsuitable from working with children and to protect young people from abuse by those in positions of trust. The group is due to meet on 30 July.

The need to protect vulnerable 16 and 17 year olds from abuse of trust was discussed at length in the debate on 22 June. The working group will look carefully at the concerns expressed. Issues to be considered will include:

the definition of a position of trust; the scope of occupations to be covered; the definition of those to be protected; the kind of behaviour to be prohibited; existing safeguards and possible new mechanisms for prohibiting such behaviour, including a possible new criminal offence. Any proposals will relate to the need to protect both boys and girls and will take account of issues such as avoiding the criminalisation of the younger partner in a relationship based on abuse of trust.

On the issue of preventing those unsuitable from working with children, the working group's programme of work will include: how working with children can be defined; how to define those unsuitable to work with children; existing and potential safeguards to prevent unsuitable people working with children; a possible new offence to support the safeguards; and the possible establishment of a central register of those unsuitable to work with children, including questions of quality assurance, access, scope and cost.

The working group will also take into account the report of Sir William Utting's review of safeguards for children living away from home and the Government's response to this review which is expected to be published by the Ministerial Task Force later this year. In particular, consideration will be given to those recommendations dealing with choosing the right staff.

The working group, which will be led by the Home Office, will hold regular meetings during the autumn and is tasked to make recommendations by the end of December. Other Departments involved include: the Department for Education and Employment; the Department of Health; the Welsh Office; the Charity Commission; the Crown Prosecution Service; and the Lord Chancellor's Department. This group will also look at how best to involve outside organisations in the work. The group's recommendations will relate to England and Wales, but representatives from the Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices will also be involved.

Telephone Interceptions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 588, what factors underlie the trends in the numbers of warrants approved; and if he will make a statement. [50932]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the Annual Report of the Interception of Communications Commissioner for 1996 (Cm 3678) in which, at paragraph 10, he gives an explanation for the increase in the number of interception warrants issued. The Commissioner's report for 1997 will be published shortly.

Police Recruits

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to increase the number of police officer recruits. [51042]

Mr. Michael: Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force within the total resources available to them.

Under the Government's spending plans, which were announced on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–211, up to £1.24 billion in additional funds over 1998–99 levels will be available to police forces in England and Wales over the next three years. This settlement, along with savings from the 2 per cent. year-on-year efficiency improvements which police forces will be asked to achieve, will ensure that more resources are focused on the front-line against crime.

Prisons (North-west)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in the North West which are to be re-categorised in the next few years; and if he will make a statement. [50969]

Ms Quin: The only planned re-categorisation of prisons in the North West is for the removal of females from Risley prison, to allow it to become a dedicated male establishment.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in the North West contain detoxification units. [50967]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no specialist drug detoxification units in prisons in the north west as yet. However, the Prison Service has now provided funding for the establishment of a drug detoxification and rehabilitation centre at Risley prison, to be set up in October.

Where a drug detoxification unit is not available, all establishments should be able to provide prisoners with detoxification where needed. Many can be treated on normal location or in the prison health care centre. Where necessary prisoners can be transferred to establishments with specialist detoxification units.

Wymott Prison

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on relations between the Governor and prison staff at HMP Wymott. [50968]

Ms Quin: The governor at Wymott prison considers that relations between him and his staff are satisfactory, after some difficulties over the introduction of new working practices on 21 June. He is working closely with the local branch of the Prison Officers' Association to resolve outstanding areas of concern.

Firearms

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for compensation under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 remain outstanding in respect of the Thames Valley Police Force area. [50936]

Mr. Michael: There are currently 1,066 claims from the Thames Valley Police Force area where payment has not yet been made under Option C of the compensation scheme, the great majority of which have already received a payment under Options A or B. In 28 of these cases, a payment offer has been made and is awaiting acceptance by the claimant. There are also a few claims with an Option A or B element outstanding, pending the completion of inquiries from the claimant or the police.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Lord-Lieutenants currently serve England. [50262]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of Lord-Lieutenants currently serving England is 45. (The position of Lord-Lieutenant of the County of Devon is at present vacant).

Prisons (Suicides)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the ratio of the number of suicides to inmates in prisons in England and Wales, in each of the last three years, (a) by gender and (b) in total; what discussions he has had with the Scottish Office concerning the prevention of suicides in prisons; and if he will make a statement. [50599]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the tables. Officials in the Prison Service for Scotland have with their counterparts in England and Wales discussed strategies on caring for the suicidal in custody. My hon. Friend the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office, recently announced a package of strategic measures, which add to and complement the recently introduced Scottish Prison Service Suicide Risk Management Strategy. The measures include the setting up of a task force to examine in detail all the circumstances surrounding the deaths in prison custody in Scotland this year to identify any common factors and lessons to be learned. A member of the Prison Service for England and Wales Suicide Awareness Support Group will form part of the task force, which I understand will report to Ministers later this year.

Self-inflicted deaths among male and female prisoners held in prison establishments in England and Wales 1995–1997 and the rate of self-inflicted deaths per 100,000 annual average population

HEALTH

NHS Trusts (Administration Charges)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the (a) highest, average and lowest lump sum administration charges and (b) highest, average and lowest photocopying charges per sheet charged by NHS trusts administering general hospitals for access to medical records; and if he will make a statement. [43288]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected only at a disproportionate cost. However, the Access to Health Records Act 1990 requires that charges should not exceed the cost of making a copy and posting it, and guidance to National Health Service organisations has made it quite clear that the actual cost is the maximum that should be charged. The actual cost will differ from case to case and can only be determined by the specific organisation involved. Recommending a charge greater than the actual cost in any particular case would contravene the requirements of the Act, and recommending charges consistently lower than actual costs would increase NHS costs. Therefore, the responsibility for determining reasonable charges must remain with individual organisations.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has approved the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's Fourth Code of Practice. [51617]

Ms Jowell: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's revised Code of Practice has been approved and was laid before the House today. Copies of the Code have been placed in the Library.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to respond to the request for financial assistance for people with haemophilia who are infected with hepatitis C as a result of their NHS treatment. [50477]

Ms Jowell: We will be responding as soon as we are in a position to do so.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Millennium Volunteers

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will launch the Millennium Volunteers Scheme. [51051]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Millennium Volunteers demonstration projects are being set up currently with local delivery bodies in eight locations in England, and we will be publishing a guide which invites organisations to apply for funding after the summer.

Tuition Fees

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the NUS Scotland will be represented on the independent review body to be set up to examine how the Government's proposals for the Scottish fourth year exemption are working. [51045]

Dr. Howells: We shall announce as soon as possible details of the independent body that is to review the arrangements for fee support for students in the final honours year of first-degree courses at higher education institutions in Scotland. The bodies invited to make representations will include the full range of interests, including students. It will also be open to other bodies and individuals to make representations.

Mathematics Teachers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he will take to increase the number of available mathematics teachers. [51041]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are determined to raise standards in schools, and good quality teachers—in both phases and all subjects—have an essential role to play in helping us achieve our plans. Maintaining teacher supply is a key challenge facing the Government and the education system. We are working with our partners—the Teacher Training Agency, higher education institutions, schools and others—to meet that challenge. Our response of 29 January to the Education and Employment Select Committee set out the measures we have taken to date.

We have already announced that all students studying to achieve a Post-Graduate Certificate of Education will not have to contribute to tuition fees; and 83 per cent. of mathematics training places are on PGCE courses. In addition, the Teacher Training Agency will provide, through the Secondary Shortage Subject Scheme some £12 million in the coming year to support those in need who wish to train to teach in such subjects, including mathematics. The new employment-based routes to qualified teacher status, aimed at enabling more mature candidates to enter teaching, also will help to boost recruitment.

Beacon Schools

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultation took place on the establishment of beacon schools; and what responses were received. [50951]

Mr. Byers: The beacon school initiative was developed in discussion with the Standards Task Force and through consultation with those schools identified by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector as the best performing during 1996–97.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the number of export licences (a) applied for and (b) granted for the supply of aircraft parts for each of the last five years together with the average time taken by her Department to resolve the application; and what is the target time which her Department now endeavours to achieve. [49180]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Entry ML10 in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 controls the export of specified aircraft, unmanned airborne vehicles, aero-engines and aircraft equipment, and related goods and components, specially designed or modified for military use. A large number of other entries in the export control legislation may also control the export of aircraft-related equipment. The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating.

The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and the following results were obtained:

Between 1 January 1994 and 12 June 1998, 7,905 applications for Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 474 applications for Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) covering the export of goods with the rating ML10 were received. In the same period, 7,194 SIELs and 370 OIELs were issued covering such exports.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend, the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint), on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Aircraft parts may also have been exported during this period under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

As regards performance targets and the average time taken to process the applications referred to above, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade on 24 November 1997 to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 416.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for licences for the export of (a) paramilitary, (b) security and (c) police equipment to Guinea Bissau have been (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) revoked, (1) between February 1995 and May 1997 inclusive and (2) since May 1997; and what was the export licence category in each case. [49346]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained:

Between 1 February 1995 and 1 May 1997 one Standard Individual Export Licence was issued covering the export to Guinea-Bissau of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. This licence covered goods whose export is controlled under entry PL5018 of the Military List.

No other Standard or Open Individual Export Licences covering such exports were issued or revoked, and no applications refused for such licences, in that period or in the period between 2 May 1997 and 12 June 1998.

This information does not cover any Media OIELS that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELS are Open Individual Export Licences that authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–871.

It is not possible to break down these data in the manner requested, as the equipment covered by many entries in the Military List could be used by military, paramilitary, or police end-users.

Goods on the Military List may have been exported to Guinea-Bissau under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the export licences issued by her Department for military equipment to Sri Lanka during the last 12 months. [49691]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and the following results were obtained:

Between 13 June 1997 and 12 June 1998, 68 individual licences were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Sri Lanka of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List. Sixty-five Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs), and 3 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs). The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all the relevant ratings.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Small Firms Loan Guarantees have been provided by Government in each of the last 10 years and for what amounts. [49311]

Mrs. Roche: The number and value of loans guaranteed under the Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme in each of the last ten years were:

Year	Loans guaranteed	Value (£ million)
1988–89	2,266	63.6
1989–90	3,204	99.4
1990–91	3,387	84.6
1991–92	2,933	69.5
1992–93	2,342	52.0
1993–94	3,886	155.0
1994–95	6,207	246.0
1995–96	7,484	275.4
1996–97	6,942	255.8
1997–98	5,081	201.3

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will list the write-offs under the small firms loan guarantee scheme by number and amount in each of the last 10 years; [50375]

(2) how many small firms loan guarantees have been provided by the Government in each of the last 10 years; and how much money has been allocated in total. [50374]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 631.

Post Office

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the External Financing Limit of the Post Office. [51643]

Mrs. Beckett: External Financing Limits of −£335 million for each of the years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 have been set. This is an interim measure pending the outcome of the current Post Office review. The Government hope to announce their proposals in the Autumn.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Andy King: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the External Financing Limit of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. [51644]

Mrs. Beckett: External Financing Limits of £25 million for 1999–2000, -£75 million for 2000–01 and –£150 million for 2001–02 have been set. These reflect expected improvements in efficiency and expected savings from the integration of BNFL and Magnox.

Oil and Gas Royalties

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current oil and gas royalties system. [49967]

Mr. Battle: The Petroleum (Production) Act 1934 empowers the Crown to receive royalties arising from oil and gas under the soil. These onshore rights were extended offshore in 1964. Royalty, at a rate of 12½ per cent. of the value of petroleum won and saved (less an allowance for eligible conveying and treating costs), is currently payable only in respect of production from fields for which development consent was given before April 1982.

In his 1998 Budget, on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–112, the Chancellor announced that the Government would formally consult the oil industry on specific proposals to change the fiscal regime for companies involved in the extraction of UK oil and gas. The Government intend shortly to issue a consultative document on the North Sea fiscal regime. An outline of the options for change has already been published in an Inland Revenue press release issued on Budget Day. As explained in that press release, one of the options is the abolition of oil and gas royalty. This option is intended to encourage companies to exploit more fully the reserves of older oil and gas fields, and responds to representations made by some companies.

Companies House

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the current staff who exceed the proposed requirements of Companies House, following its relocation, will be re-employed within her Department. [49972]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Staff in Companies House can and will continue to be able to apply for posts in the Department of Trade and Industry, and will be considered for appointment if they are suitably qualified.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she has taken to ensure that the relocation and rationalisation of Companies House in 1999 will not result in a reduced level of service. [49966]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The move of the Companies House London office to new premises at the end of 1998 will coincide with the introduction of new facilities for the on-line electronic delivery of information. The existing premium and standard microfiche service will continue to be provided until the current office closes in Autumn 1999. Alternative arrangements for those customers who continue to want to use microfiche will then be available from the Cardiff office, although it will not be possible to provide the current speed of service. I am confident, however, that the new facilities, offering a combination of traditional microfiche and newer electronic services, will lead to an improved service overall for customers.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the current staff are expected still to be employed within Companies House (a) immediately, (b) six months and (c) a year after the relocation. [49970]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There will be no change now, or in six months' time, in the numbers of staff employed in Companies House, London as a result of the initial relocation of the office. The numbers are expected to have fallen by about 75 per cent. one year after relocation.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff will be made redundant or encouraged to take early retirement when the City Road premises of Companies House are closed. [49971]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Companies House will endeavour to help those staff not required at its new office to secure employment elsewhere, whether within the Civil Service or outside. It is not possible now to say how many staff will be found new jobs or how many will prefer to take early retirement or how many might be made redundant. One third of current staff in London are employed on a fixed terms or casual basis in anticipation of the change in the numbers required.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Angola

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken over the UNITA office in the United Kingdom to comply with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1127 (1997). [50448]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UNITA's representative in the United Kingdom conducted UNITA business from his commercial premises in London. Following the adoption of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1127 (1997), Mr. Kandeya was immediately ordered to leave the United Kingdom. He has submitted an application to remain in the United Kingdom which is being considered by the Home Office. Officials have visited Mr. Kandeya's commercial premises and satisfied themselves that there was no sign of any continuing association with UNITA. As far as we are aware, there are no offices or premises being maintained in the United Kingdom under the name of UNITA.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken over the funds and financial resources of UNITA and senior UNITA personnel in the United Kingdom to comply with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1173 (1998). [50449]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government have prepared Orders in Council to implement United Nations Security Council Resolution 1173, which it expects to be laid before Parliament on 22 July and enter into force on 23 July. When it is passed, the Bank of England will simultaneously write to the relevant UK financial institutions asking them to implement the United Nations' financial sanctions against UNITA.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to prohibit the direct or indirect import from Angola to the United Kingdom of diamonds that are not controlled through the Certificate of Origin regime of the GURN. [50450]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade proposes to amend the Open General Import Licence once the proposed Certificate of Origin Scheme has been finalised by the Angolan Government.

The Government have prepared orders in Council to implement United Nations Security Council Resolution 1173 which it expects to be laid before Parliament on 22 July and to enter into force on 23 July.

Torture Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 300, on torture equipment, what progress was made during the UK presidency of the European Union in encouraging member countries to introduce similar restrictions on the export of torture equipment to those introduced in the United Kingdom by the Government on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. [50724]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have pressed our EU partners vigorously on this issue, culminating in a formal invitation to join the United Kingdom in announcing bans on the export of the same equipment as in the announcement of 28 July 1997.

Our partners are sympathetic to our concerns. Indeed, in defining internal repression, the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports agreed on 8 June 1998 specifically includes torture or other cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment or punishment among the actions which constitute internal repression.

But some of our partners have doubts about the practicality and desirability of an outright ban. Many do not have national controls on some or all of the items involved. We believe from our contacts that there is support for the principle of controlling the export of such equipment.

As this equipment is not military equipment, matters relating to export controls fall within the Community's exclusive competence and it is for the Commission to make any proposal for a regulation establishing common rules. We are encouraging the European Commission to come forward with a proposal.

In the meantime, in the absence of an agreed EU position, it would be premature to press for global action. In due course, we would aim to press for such action to mirror the action that the EC decides to take.

The UK's national policy will be unaffected. Notifications of any licences denied under this ban will be issued to our partners under the denial notification arrangements agreed under the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Sudan

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the objectives of the Minister of State's four day mission to discuss issues affecting Sudan. [50944]

Mr. Fatchett: The reports of the suffering in southern Sudan shocked us all. I have just returned from Nairobi and Khartoum, where my objective was to bring about a break in the fighting in southern Sudan. A temporary truce in the most hunger-affected areas will be essential if the Sudanese people are to be able to start rebuilding their lives.

I am pleased to be able to say that the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Peoples Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A), have agreed to a 3 month ceasefire in Bahr al Ghazal. This is encouraging news for the people of southern Sudan. I hope that we can now build on this important step and work together with IGAD for a wider peace.

CABINET OFFICE

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49830]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47051]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No initiatives have been undertaken by my Department since 1 May 1997 which have resulted in the establishment of action zones. Regarding the establishment of pilot schemes, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 30 June 1998, Official Report, columns 135–36.

Prior Options Reviews

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) on 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 310, if the same options are applied to public sector research establishments included within the scope of the review. [49974]

Dr. David Clark: Yes. The prior options reviews of public sector research establishments must thoroughly examine the same options that are applied during reviews of Next Steps agencies and agency candidates generally: abolition; privatisation; contracting out; market testing; rationalisation or merger with other areas of government; and agency or NDPB status. In looking at whether the function is required, prior option reviews of public sector research establishments will consider the underlying question of the country's scientific needs in that area. As with all prior options reviews, there is no presupposition that any outcome is more favoured than another. The decision on future status is made with the aim of achieving the most appropriate and cost effective way of carrying out the functions so as to deliver best value for money and best service.

Small Businesses

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he has put in place to ensure that small businesses can complete all their licensing requirements and inform themselves about relevant regulation in one office. [50015]

Dr. David Clark: The Access Business Group, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, aims to make the regulatory system more transparent, accessible and helpful. The Group is also looking at the provision of integrated information, advice and guidance to ease the burden on business. The use of Information Technology to help businesses fulfil their obligation is part of this work.

In December, I launched the "intelligent" form which enables people to register as self-employed at a bank. This model has now been extended with the launch of the Post Office-led "Open for Business" pilot which enables people to register as self-employed in a post office, library, a community based "telecottage" or local government office. The "intelligent" form is just the start. The system proves the technology and we should eventually have electronic forms for people to apply for licences.

Lobbyists

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1, what was the nature of the representations received from (a) the Minister without Portfolio and (b) the Secretary of State for the Home Department. [51159]

Dr. David Clark: Internal discussions between Ministers on policy issues are confidential under the terms of Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

People's Panel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 337, on the People's Panel, how many waves of research the Government plan to commission. [51302]

Dr. David Clark: The Cabinet Office plans to commission a second wave of research later in the year. Plans for subsequent waves of research are being discussed with other government departments.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Cann: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Government response to the second report of the Science and Technology Committee "The Year 2000—Computer Compliance" [HC342] will be published. [51804]

Dr. David Clark: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have today laid before Parliament the Government Response as Command Paper 3944.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50686]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office is currently collating information on the performance of the main government departments and agencies in responding to letters from MPs and the general public. This includes information on the volume of correspondence received, the target for responding to such letters, and performance against the target. It will be made available to House.

Information will not be included on the number of staff employed to answer letters as very few are employed solely in handling correspondence: in most cases correspondence is handled by staff across Whitehall as part of their normal duties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48663]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Orange Parades

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Orange parades have been re-routed in Portadown since 1985. [49520]

Marjorie Mowlam: The following table shows the number of Orange parades re-routed in Portadown since 1990. The information prior to that year is not readily available.

Year	Total	Illegal	Re-routed	Conditions imposed	Disorder occurred
1990	85	—	6	3	—
1991	61	—	4	—	—
1992	69	—	4	—	—
1993	58	—	3	—	—
1994	55	—	6	—	—
1995	80	—	5	—	1
1996	68	1	1	—	1
1997	72	—	5	—	—

Railways

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the (a) forecast cost and (b) planned completion date of improvements to the section of the railway line between Lisburn and Belfast. [50136]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Work on Phase 1 of the Belfast-Lisburn rail upgrade, ie, the line between Great Victoria Street junction and Lisburn, which commenced in March, will be completed by 31 December 1998. Work on Phase 2 between Belfast Central Station and Belfast City junction will commence in spring 1999 and is likely to be completed mid year. The total cost of the project is estimated at £16.1m.

Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if land will be included in the list of goods, facilities and services in the Government's proposals to amend the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989. [51306]

Mr. Ingram: The White paper "Partnership for Equality" indicated that Fair Employment legislation would be extended to cover goods, facilities and services and the disposal or management of premises. Premises includes land. Views were sought on possible exceptions within areas such as housing and land and comments received are still being considered.

Equality Commission

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those organisations replying to the White Paper, "Partnership for Equality" (a) explicitly supported the establishment of a single Equality Commission and (b) did not mention it in their submission. [51308]

Mr. Worthington: In total there were 123 responses to the White Paper "Partnership for Equality" and of those 29 or 23 per cent. supported the establishment of a single Equality Commission and 24 or 20 per cent. did not mention it.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the current annual costs and manpower of those bodies which it is intended to absorb into the Equality Commission. [51309]

Mr. Ingram: The current annual cost of the Fair Employment Commission, the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland and the Commission for Racial Equality for Northern Ireland is £4.8m. The staffing complement of these bodies is 117 full-time equivalents. The Northern Ireland Disability Council has an annual cost of £100,000 and no staff.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Older People

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evaluation her Department has made of the impact of the European Court of Justice decision in respect of unauthorised spending by the Commission on measures in favour of older people. [45422]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 June 1998]: No evaluation is required. The European Court of Justice decision (C106/96) given on 12 May was in respect of unlawful expenditure by the European Commission on projects to combat social exclusion. The Court agreed with the UK that whilst the payments had been illegal, the projects should be allowed to retain the money they had received.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has responsibility for the UK challenge against Commission expenditure on measures in favour of older people (C239/96). A date for the oral hearing is awaited.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will set a maximum target for the time within which the Independent Tribunal Service has to respond to requests for statements explaining tribunals' findings on questions of fact and the reasons underlying their decisions; and if she will make a statement. [48815]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the appeal system is a matter for His Honour Judge Michael Harris, the President of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS). Tribunal chairmen provide statements explaining tribunals' findings on questions of fact and the reasons underlying their decisions. I understand the Chief Executive of the ITS has written to the hon. Member asking for more information and that the President will reply in more detail in due course.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public. [48976]

Mr. Field: The Department and its Agencies aim to reply to all correspondence from members of the public within 20 days. Although performance is monitored, the information is not available in the format requested. I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans her Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49895]

Mr. Field: [holding answer Monday 13 July 1998]: This Department provides a wide range of information through a variety of means, including electronic. We have a website on the Internet which contains Social Security information such as benefits and Green Papers and an E-mail box for Ministerial correspondence.

We are actively looking at ways members of the public can deal electronically with the Department, with respect to benefit claims.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315.

State Pension

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the rate of return on the lifetime National Insurance contributions of (a) a man aged 65 and (b) a woman aged 60 retiring in the current financial year and receiving a full basic state pension. [48972]

Mr. Denham: The Government Actuary's Department estimates that the real rate of return on lifetime National Insurance contributions for someone reaching State Pension Age in 1998 would be 1.1 per cent. for a man aged 65 and 4.0 per cent for a woman aged 60.

Notes:

1. The following assumptions have been made:

   The man/woman is single and has been in employment throughout his/her working life from age 16. Juvenile rates of contributions have been used where appropriate. For the period covered by the Graduated Pension scheme and subsequently, the individual is assumed to receive constant full time average earnings. The amount of Retirement Pension (RP) payable includes Graduated Pension and SERPS on a not contracted out basis.

   The contributions are based on total National Insurance (NI) contributions (excluding any NHS Allocation or other elements), employer plus employee. It has been assumed that this total relates solely to RP entitlement. In practice NI contributions cover other benefits (e.g. Incapacity Benefit, Widows Benefit, and in the past Industrial Injuries benefit) in addition to RP.

   The value of the pension received has been based on mortality rates for a man reaching 65 and a woman reaching 60 in 1998 derived from the 1996 based population projection.

   The rate of return quoted in the reply represents a real rate of return, after adjusting for inflation (as measured by the Retail Prices Index).

2. The rate of return for a married man whose wife is receiving a married woman's (category B) pension would be higher than the figure quoted for a single male.

Pensioners (Christmas Bonus)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost of uprating to 1998 prices the £10 Christmas bonus as originally introduced on the basis of providing it (a) to all pensioners, (b) to pensioners other than higher rate taxpayers and (c) to pensioners other than standard and higher rate taxpayers. [49954]

Mr. Denham: The estimated cost of uprating the £10 Christmas bonus to 1998 prices on the basis of providing it to:

	£ million
(a) All pensioners	700
(b) Pensioners other than higher rate taxpayers	700
(c) Pensioners other than basic and higher rate taxpayers	600
(d) Pensioners other than lower, basic and higher rate taxpayers	450

Notes:

1. All figures in 1998–99 prices and rounded to the nearest £50 million.
2. The uprated levels of Christmas Bonus were calculated using the Retail Prices Index (All items). The value of the bonus has been rounded to the nearest 5 pence at each uprating.
3. Estimates for the number of pensioners who pay tax were provided by Inland Revenue (IR), although it is not possible to determine whether a particular individual is a higher rate or basic rate taxpayer for the relevant year at the time the Christmas Bonus is paid. Due to the fact that in sections (b)-(d), the rounded estimates provided by IR were applied to the total extra cost, the figures should be treated with a degree of caution.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit for each of the last three years were made by officials or employees or former officials or employees of (a) Government or Government agencies, (b) the NHS, (c) local government or local government agencies and (d) the private sector. [50628]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. A breakdown of the data into industry type is available only from the 10 per cent. sample data

Child Benefit

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the factors underlying delays in issuing child benefit payment books. [49219]

Mr. Worthington: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Thompson, and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. William Ross, dated 16 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the factors underlying delays in issuing child benefit payment books.

A combination of factors gave rise to problems in the Child Benefit Office that caused delays in payment books being issued. There was disruption when the Office had to relocate to new premises at Windsor House in November 1997. Added to this were problems with the introduction of two new computer systems, one of which required a key additional feature which was not initially available. There were also technical problems which caused difficulties for staff accessing the computer system; response times were slower and in many instances live claims were rejected. Furthermore, staff took action in April 1998 in protest against threats by terrorist organisations which also had a serious impact on the provision of services.

A recovery plan has been in operation which included the deployment of extra staff from elsewhere in the Agency. Extensive overtime is also being worked in order to clear the backlog which has been significantly reduced over the last six weeks. It is anticipated that normal service, including the telephone service, should resume in early August.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the volume of correspondence sent to, and received from, hon. Members by (a) the Inland Revenue and (b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise between (i) January to March 1996 and (b) January to March 1998. [47871]

Dawn Primarolo: The Board of Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise receive a large volume of correspondence from hon. Members at local office level, regional and collection level, and at their respective Head Offices.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Government Debt

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in cash terms total Government debt in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [51474]

Mr. Darling: Cash figures for net public sector debt in 1996–97 were published in Table B7 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report. Estimates of net public sector debt as a proportion of GDP in 1997–98 were published in Table 4.5 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report. The estimate of GDP in 1997–98 was published in Table 4.1.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate total Government debt in cash terms for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02. [51473]

Mr. Darling: Table 4.5 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report showed forecasts of net public sector debt as a proportion of GDP. Forecasts of GDP were published in Table 4.1.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rent Tribunals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to broaden the range of people eligible to sit on rent tribunals. [50106]

Mr. Raynsford: We want to see tribunals drawn from a broader constituency and representing a balance of expert and lay membership. Though these are expert tribunals and necessarily include qualified lawyers and valuers, we have been concerned about the lack of lay members. My Department has started advertising to recruit more lay members and to widen the catchment from which they are drawn.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49815]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 12 July 1998]: On (a), I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315. On (b), as part of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's target of twenty five per cent. of dealings with Government being undertaken electronically by 2002, the Department is taking major steps to modernise and bring in electronic services. Among other things, this will provide more opportunity for the Department to correspond electronically with members of the public.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50679]

Angela Eagle: In respect of the volume of correspondence and targets set by this Department for dealing with such correspondence, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service today, Official Report, colum 363. Few staff are solely employed by my Department to handle correspondence; for most staff this is part of their normal duties.

Environmental Impact Assessment Directive

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library copies of correspondence his Departmen: has received in the last six months from the European Commission concerning the implementation of the Environmental Impact Assessment Directive as it affects the offshore oil and gas industry. [50634]

Mr. Raynsford: Correspondence between the European Commission and the Member States (including the UK) concerning the implementation of EC Directives is regarded by all parties as confidential.

Housing (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Wandsworth Borough Council on the number of council properties that have been empty for periods longer than three months. [50704]

Mr. Raynsford: I have had no such discussions. However officials of the Government Office for London regularly discuss with Borough officials, as part of the annual Housing Investment Programme determination, many aspects of the Borough's housing strategy and of its performance as a housing authority. Empty council properties are one aspect of that discussion. The Government regularly mention the number of empty houses in each local authority area, and encourage all local authorities to implement strategies to minimise the number of empty houses in their area.

Cycling

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funds have been provided by his Department for the Sustrans UK project; and if he will make a statement. [50726]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department welcomes the contribution the National Cycle Network can make to encouraging people to cycle. In addition to the £43.5m Sustrans received from the Millennium Commission the Department has undertaken to fund the crossings on the trunk road network where this is appropriate.

The Highways Agency is committed to spending around £7.8m on cycle schemes across England's trunk road network. A rolling programme of around 60 crossings are being targeted for completion by the year 2000. In most cases the Highways Agency is working in partnership with local authorities, cycling groups and Sustrans to identify the right schemes.

Air Carrier Liability

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the representations received by his Department on the Air Carrier Liability Order 1998 indicating those in favour and those against the terms of the Order. [50821]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Representations have been received from the following organisations, companies or individuals:

Beaumont and Son
Board of Airlines Represented in the United Kingdom
British Airways
British Air Transport Association
Harold Caplan Esq.

Lady O'Cathain.

Some of the representations were seeking clarification; others, particularly from the airline industry, were against the terms of the Order.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss with HM Treasury methods by which local authorities could keep the proceeds of fines relating to dog fouling. [50826]

Angela Eagle: Section 4(2) of the Dogs (Fouling of Land) Act 1996 currently requires local authorities to surrender the proceeds of fines relating to dog fouling to the Secretary of State. The Government will consider whether this should be changed when the next legislation opportunity presents itself.

Packaging Waste Regulations

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many companies registered under the terms of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations by 1977 (a) 1 August 1997 and (b) 1 April 1998; what income was received by the Government agency in respect of companies registering in each period; and how many prosecutions there were in each period of non-registering companies. [50753]

Angela Eagle: The first deadline for registration with the Environment Agency (the "Agency") as required by the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997 was 31 August 1997 and the second 1 April 1998.

By 1 August 1997 records indicate a total of 581 businesses registered with the Agency and subsequently a total of 3,613 businesses registered for the period 31 August 1997 to 1 April 1998. Fees recovered on 1 August 1997 were £720 and subsequently increased to £1,650,600.

By 1 April 1998 records indicate a total of 2,323 businesses were registered with the Agency for the registration period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999 and subsequently a total of 3,376 businesses were registered by the end of June 1998. Fees recovered on 1 August 1998 were £1,497,250 and subsequently £1,482,750.

No prosecutions for non compliance have yet taken place.

Eurostar

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 317, if he will estimate when Peterborough will be served by direct Eurostar services. [51148]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–84, London and Continental Railways, which are responsible for the operation of the Eurostar service, have decided to award a management contract for the service to a consortium comprising British Airways, National Express and the national railways of France and Belgium. This consortium has been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional Eurostar services, and to report to the Government before the end of the year. We cannot prejudge the outcome of that report.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department's negotiations for the construction of the CTRL will be concluded before LCR's review of the feasibility of regional Eurostar services is completed. [51170]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Negotiations for the construction of the CTRL and the review of the feasibility of regional Eurostar services are being taken forward in parallel. Negotiations for the construction of the CTRL are being progressed with a view to allowing construction to start later this year. The consortium selected to operate Eurostar have been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional services and report by the end of this year.

National Air Traffic Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many companies have expressed an interest in taking a stake in the National Air Traffic Services. [51182]

Ms Glenda Jackson: One organisation has so far expressed an interest.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of (a) consultants and (b) legal advisers currently employed or to be employed by (i) his Department, (ii) the Civil Aviation Authority and (iii) National Air Traffic Services to provide advice on the public-private partnership for National Air Traffic Services. [51181]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department is in the early stages of appointing consultants and legal advisers to provide advice on the public-private partnership for National Air Traffic Services. Neither the Civil Aviation Authority nor the National Air Traffic Services currently employ consultants or legal advisers for this purpose, but are considering their need for such services.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many additional staff have been or are planned to be employed by (a) his Department, (b) NATS and (c) the CAA to deal with the proposed public-private partnership for the National Air Traffic Services. [51215]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions intends to staff the work relating to the proposed public-private partnership for National Air Traffic Services from existing resources. Neither NATS nor the CAA employ or plan to employ additional staff for this work.

Airports (South-east England)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what work (a) his Department and (b) the Civil Aviation Authority are carrying out to assess the possibility of (i) RAF Northolt and (ii) Redhill Aerodrome being used as feeder or reliever airports for Heathrow and Gatwick Airports. [51175]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Neither my Department nor the Civil Aviation Authority are carrying out work to assess the possibility of RAF Northolt or Redhill Aerodrome being used as feeder or reliever airports for Heathrow or Gatwick.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the working groups established by (a) his Department and (b) the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss airport capacity in the South East of England. [51190]

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of when Stansted Airport will become slot constrained. [51167]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Stansted Airport Ltd. notified the Department on 7 July that in its opinion conditions are such that Stansted Airport should be fully coordinated for slot allocation purposes under Article 3 of EC Regulation 95/93 with effect from Summer 1999. The Government will consider if the airport should be so designated following consultation with airlines and other relevant organisations on a capacity analysis in accordance with the Regulation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what work BAA plc has carried out recently at his Department's request on a scheme for a close parallel runway at Gatwick. [51377]

Ms Glenda Jackson: BAA plc is not currently undertaking any work at the request of my Department in relation to the possibility of developing a close parallel runway at Gatwick Airport. The work which the previous Administration asked BAA to undertake into this concept following publication of the report on Runway Capacity in the South East (RUCATSE) is not yet complete. We have asked BAA to put the work on hold so that we can consider how to take this issue forward in the light of the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Transatlantic Air Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the transatlantic routes that are currently served only by British Airways or American Airlines services. [51198]

In addition to those routes London—Dallas is served by both British Airways and American Airlines, but no other airline.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of driver and vehicle records have been found to be accurate in each of the last five years. [51200]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has since 1994/95 been set targets for the accuracy with which it captures the data provided by its customers.

The table shows the targets and the results:

Percentage of output without error

Vehicle registration documents	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
New vehicle
Target	98	98	98	98
Actual	98.3	98.4	98.5	98

Drivers licences
Target	95	96	97	98
Actual	95.4	96.6	97	98

These percentages apply to the 13 million registration documents and 7 million driving licenses issued annually.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) driver licence and (b) vehicle registration applications were received by the DVLA for each of the last five years. [51199]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The volumes of driver licences and vehicle registration applications received by the DVLA for each of the last five years are:

million

Year	Driver licences	Vehicle registrations
1993–94	6.4	13.4
1994–95	6.3	13.7
1995–96	6.4	14.3
1996–97	6.7	14.7
1997–98	6.8	15.6

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the computer system used by the DVLA was last upgraded; and what proposals he has for future developments to it. [51172]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The DVLA drivers computer system has recently been upgraded to permit the issue of photocard licences. The vehicle system is currently being upgraded and this will be completed by the end of the year. A number of other amendments and improvements are in hand including ensuring that all systems are year 2000 compliant and are responsive to customer requirements.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for the most recent five years for which records are available (a) the number of heavy goods vehicles tested and (b) the number of HGV test failures due to exhaust emissions. [51126]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Number tested	Number failed
1993–94	448,446	10,763
1994–95	447,660	7,163

Tenders (Environmental Criteria)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what specific environmental and energy-saving criteria are included in standard (a) tender documents and (b) tender evaluation procedures in respect of Government contracts for (i) new building, (ii) renovation works and (iii) heating and lighting. [51025]

Angela Eagle: Government departments are individually responsible for determining their accommodation requirements including the specification of environmental and energy saving criteria in their tender documents. Advice on these matters is available to Government departments from the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate (PACE) and other sources such as the best practice guides produced by the Building Research Energy Conservation Support Unit (BRECSU) and the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU).

DETR has produced a Green Guide for Buyers which provides general advice on conserving resources and reducing waste and pollution. It is available on DETR's web site for greening government.

Elderly Tenants (Pets)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to housing authorities and housing associations supporting prospective elderly tenants who already have and wish to retain a pet. [50937]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 17 July 1998]: It is for local authorities and Registered Social Landlords to decide which of their dwellings are and are not appropriate for pets, taking into account the needs of all their tenants and residents.

Leaseholders

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) percentage and (b) number of long leaseholders have taken advantage of the provisions contained in the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 to enfranchise. [50942]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Research carried out for the Department by Sheffield Hallam University, and to be published shortly, has found that 19 per cent. (49) of leaseholders who contacted LEASE for advice on enfranchisement under the provisions contained in the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 successfully enfranchised under these provisions. The Department has no information on the numbers of leaseholders who have successfully enfranchised without contacting LEASE.

We are concerned that the existing rules for collective enfranchisement for flats are unduly complex and that it can be difficult for leaseholders to enfranchise. We intend to address this problem in our forthcoming consultation paper on leasehold reform.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many leaseholders living in blocks of flats of 50 units or more have successfully enfranchised their leases under the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993. [50948]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Research carried out for the Department by Sheffield Hallam University, and to be published shortly, found no leaseholders living in blocks of flats of 50 or more units who had enfranchised their leases.

Coastal Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has for long-term monitoring of the effects of sludge dumping in Liverpool Bay; and what will be the role of water companies in such monitoring. [51383]

Angela Eagle: The arrangements for monitoring maritime sewage-sludge dumping sites around the United Kingdom, including Liverpool Bay, are described in "Towards 2000: Marine Monitoring in the 1990s", the fifth report of the UK Marine Pollution Monitoring Group, published this year by the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science.

OSPAR Convention

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to inform interested parties of the Government's policy at the forthcoming ministerial meeting of the OSPAR convention in Portugal; and if he will place in the Library the United Kingdom's submissions to the negotiating committee for the conference. [51410]

Mr. Meacher: On 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 325–26, I answered a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) setting out our objectives at the forthcoming ministerial meeting of the OSPAR Commission. I and my officials are meeting various interested non-governmental organisations. I am placing in the Library copies of the paper which my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has submitted to the OSPAR Commission and of the papers submitted by the United Kingdom to the meeting of the Commission at official level and to the last three meetings of the official Heads of Delegation.

Housing Corporation Grants

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of Housing Corporation grant has been allocated to rural areas; and how many new homes have been started or completed as a result in each of the last five years. [51487]

Mr. Raynsford: The table sets out details of the proportion of Housing Corporation grant and the number of approvals allocated to rural areas in the last five years. The information is based upon schemes within settlements of up to 3,000 population.

Housing Corporation grant and approvals in rural areas

	Percentage of HC grant	Approvals
1993–94	4.6	2,200
1994–95	5.6	2,399
1995–96	5.2	1,363
1996–97	5.8	2,157
1997–98	5.1	1,034

Housing

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of affordable housing need in (a) rural areas and (b) villages of less than 1,000 population. [51488]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department recently commissioned a study on the nature of demand for housing in rural areas, including affordable housing. The research looked at five different types of rural areas in England with populations ranging from 7,500 to 15,000 people, where most of the main settlements were of less than 1,000 population. A report on this project will be published by the contractors, DTZ Pieda, soon.

All local authorities are encouraged to carry out assessments of housing need to inform housing strategies and development plans. Local assessments provide the justification for local authorities to specify a proportion of affordable housing to be provided on suitable sites identified in the development plan, and to negotiate the inclusion of an element of affordable housing in private developments.

Boundary Review (London)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the boundary review in London will be conducted on the basis of universal three member wards in order to facilitate elections by thirds. [51470]

Mr. Raynsford: Our consultation paper "Modernising Local Government: local democracy and community leadership" set out options for more frequent local elections, and considered the possible implications for warding arrangements. We are considering the responses to that consultation, and will put forward firm proposals in a local government White Paper this Summer.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his expenditure plans for transport programmes, pursuant to the publication of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. [51805]

Mr. Prescott: I am today announcing, in conjunction with the publication of our Integrated Transport White Paper, plans to revitalise local and public transport. An extra £1.8bn of funds will be made available for local transport, bus services, road maintenance and railways.

The table shows my Department's current plans to use the resources available for transport programmes.

These plans will secure greatly increased investment in transport infrastructure, through both increases in public spending in areas identified as priorities in our Integrated Transport White Paper and through partnership with the private sector. It will allow local authorities to spend almost twice as much on their transport programmes in 2001–02 as they do now.

Extra public spending on rail services will bring in substantial amounts of private investment, and by removing bottlenecks in the network, real improvements for passengers and freight in support of our objective of reducing car use.

The plans involve:

£700m more for local authorities to establish 150 new Local Transport Plans and to restore cuts in maintenance of their principal roads;

£300m more for local bus services. Buses have a major contribution to make to developing more sustainable transport policies. The Government have already allocated this year an extra £50m for rural transport.

more than £300m additional resources for the rail industry (including support for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link) on top of the annual subsidy of over £1bn to rail operators for existing franchise contracts. These new resources will allow for extra freight grants, and extra funds to be made available from two new sources—the Infrastructure Investment Fund and the Rail Passenger Partnership Scheme; over £400m extra spending on the trunk road and motorway network with priority given to maintenance of the existing trunk road network and to making better use of it;

resources for the new Mayor to pursue an integrated transport strategy for London as soon as the Greater London Authority is set up and to allow the acceleration of various initiatives in the Capital.

These plans reflect the reduced demands on public support for the London Underground from 2000–01 as a result of the new public private partnership arrangements. These were announced on 20 March, along with £365m additional resources for this year and next. The plans will allow £7bn of investment to take place in the Underground over the next 15 years. The expenditure plans also take account of the reduced subsidy required for train operating companies which are contractually committed to maintaining service levels and improving performance whilst receiving less subsidy. All these savings taken together, amount to £1.9 billion over three years.

More details of how extra spending on the trunk and motorway network will be targeted will be given when the roads review is published.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of CO_2 emission levels from the nuclear industry in the United Kingdom, with particular reference to emissions during (a) construction, (b) generation and (c) decommissioning and disposal; and if he will make a statement. [50833]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

No separate figures in the form requested are available. It is estimated that nuclear electricity generation leads to emissions of about 4 grams of carbon dioxide per kilowatt hour of electricity delivered to the final user. Of these 4 grams, 3.2 grams are emitted in the process of uranium extraction and the remainder during fuel processing.

Carbon dioxide emissions from nuclear generation are less than 1 per cent. of equivalent figures for any of the major fossil-fuelled electricity generation technologies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applicants were unable to pay for legal representation to assist them in the preparation of their cases during the last 12 months. [50105]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that it is not possible to determine how many asylum applicants were unable to pay for advice or legal representation. The available information is that the Immigration Advisory Service and The Refugee Legal Centre—Home Office funded bodies—provided free advice to 10,578 refused asylum applicants at the appeal stage over the last financial year (4,455 and 6,123 respectively). In addition to this, the Refugee Legal Centre gave advice in 3,152 asylum applications. These figures do not include those advised by charitable organisations or others working without reimbursement who are unconnected with the Home Office.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average waiting time for decisions on applications for asylum in the United Kingdom; and what steps he is taking to reduce waiting times. [50824]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Applications lodged before the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 are currently estimated to be taking on average 58 months to reach an initial decision, while those lodged after the Act are taking an average of 14 months. Both of these figures reflect the proportion of inherited old cases within the system, but figures for 1997 show that 38 per cent. of initial decisions on asylum applications were taken within six months, as against 10 per cent. in 1992.

We have been conducting a wide-ranging review of asylum and immigration policy. We hope soon to be able to make a full statement about our future strategy, including proposals to improve the handling of asylum applications. Quite separately, plans are now well advanced for the introduction of more efficient working practices and for the computerisation of casework in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. A trial of the new working practices is to start on 17 August.

World Cup (Policing Costs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the United Kingdom Government of the co-operation by UK police forces with French police over policing of World Cup matches involving teams from Scotland and England. [50708]

Mr. Michael: In the case of officers from England and Wales, the cost of travel, overseas allowances and overtime will be met by the Football Association. The salary costs will be met by the officers' respective forces. The Football Association contributed to the costs of police equipment. The salary and associated costs and the cost of travel for officers from Scottish police forces will be met by their respective forces. Equipment costs were met by respective police forces from existing stock. Accommodation costs in France for both sets of officers were met by the French authorities.

The Government will contribute to the costs associated with the 24-hour manning of the National Criminal Intelligence Service Football Unit during the Finals, and will meet some of the costs associated with the provision of additional football intelligence officers who were in France for some England matches. Detailed information about actual costs incurred is operationally sensitive.

Pornography

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce further regulations to control the display of pornographic magazine covers and video cases in shops accessible to children. [50754]

Mr. Michael: Current legislation governing the display of pornographic magazines includes the Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981, which makes it an offence to display any indecent matter which is exposed to view in a public place or where it can be seen from a public place. It is the responsibility of the police to decide whether there are sufficient grounds to launch a criminal investigation, and that of the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether to prosecute those alleged to be responsible for the publication.

Most newsagents also abide by a voluntary code of practice, refusing to sell "adult" magazines to persons under the age of 18 and placing pornographic magazines on the top shelf and out of reach of children.

With respect to videos, before the British Board of Film Classification (BBFC) gives full certification to a video work, the sleeve must be seen and approved by the Video Packaging Review Committee. This Committee is chaired by a representative of the BBFC and comprises members of the British Video Association and the Video Standards Council. The sleeves seen by the Committee account for over 90 per cent. of all video works on the market.

While the issue of indecent displays is kept under constant review, there are currently no plans to introduce further regulations in this area.

Animal Experiments

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for reducing the backlog of applications for licences, and amendments to licences, under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [50866]

Mr. George Howarth: We are continuing to explore and, as far as possible, exploit all possible options for managing and reducing the backlog in our London office. This backlog arose primarily due to the loss of experienced staff (for unavoidable reasons) and has built up due to difficulties in attracting and retaining staff for this type of work.

We are in the process of recruiting staff, through open competition, and we are arranging a selection Board for promoting existing Home Office staff to fill two posts currently held by casual staff. These two recruitment exercises should provide the best choice of candidates and a more permanent solution than employing casual staff for short periods.

In the meantime, we have recently recruited another member of casual staff and now have a full complement of staff in our London office. To reduce the backlog, staff are continuing to work overtime and have been joined in London, on occasions, by colleagues from our regional offices.

A minor technical problem has recently been overcome to allow London cases to be transferred to other regional offices to process.

We are also looking to see whether there are elements of work currently carried out by the licensing team which they might stop doing whilst the backlog is cleared—one possibility is to no longer advise project licence holders that their licence will shortly expire. Licensees would, as a consequence, need to remain alert to the date on which their authorities expire and the need to apply for any replacement licence well before that date.

In the longer term, we are exploring how modern IT systems can improve the licensing operation and whether the personal licence system can be streamlined.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications, under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, for licences, and amendments to licences, were awaiting decision on (a) 1 July 1998, (b) 1 January 1998 and (c) 1 July 1997. [50867]

Mr. George Howarth: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost, and the process would significantly worsen the backlog problem about which my hon. Friend is rightly concerned.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many duplicated experiments were carried out in 1997 under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [51122]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 19 January 1998 Official Report, column 387.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to announce a ban on the use of animals for cosmetic ingredient testing; and what is the time scale for a ban becoming operative. [51121]

Mr. George Howarth: This is an extremely complex issue and we are still exploring the implications of various courses of action.

Under European Directives, including the Cosmetics and Dangerous Substances Directives, ingredients must be tested on animals to show that they are safe in use, manufacture and transport. Industry strongly contends that there is a need for certain types of new ingredients for cosmetic products, particularly UVA filters for such products as sunscreens.

We must ensure that any action we take is sustainable and does not unnecessarily disadvantage United Kingdom research, medicine and industry or compromise public safety.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlay the reduction in the proportion of non-legislative animal tests carried out for cosmetic purposes between 1995 and 1996. [51120]

Mr. George Howarth: Additional data on cosmetic testing, above that required for the annual statistics report, are collected separately. In 1996, the way in which this additional information was collected was changed. The data needed to identify the factors in which the hon. Member is interested are not available before 1996.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries from which dogs were imported into the United Kingdom for experiments in 1996 and 1997, indicating the number from each country; how often his Department's inspectors visited these overseas breeding establishments under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if the code of practice for breeding establishments is enforced in these non-United Kingdom establishments. [51123]

Mr. George Howarth: In total, 478 dogs in 1996 and 214 dogs in 1997 were acquired from the United States of America. All were purpose-bred and were obtained from breeding establishments which meet their national standards.

Home Office inspectors have not visited these establishments. They have no right to access to establishments in other countries nor can we enforce our codes in non-United Kingdom establishments.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals were bred for scientific procedures but killed prior to use in any procedure in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [51124]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 19 January 1998, Official Report, columns 388–89.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in reviewing section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and what plans he has to amend it following the Government's freedom of information proposals. [51207]

Mr. George Howarth: No decision has yet been taken. We are still awaiting final details on the proposals for freedom of information legislation.

Air Guns

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for a public information campaign on the potential dangers posed by air guns. [51026]

Mr. Michael: Copies of a public information leaflet on air gun safety may be obtained from police firearms licensing departments or from the Home Office. We shall consider, in consultation with the police, shooting organisations and other interested bodies, whether this leaflet needs to be revised. We have no immediate plans for a further publicity campaign on this issue.

Most air gun shooters are responsible and law-abiding citizens, who pursue their hobby safely. Regrettably, a small minority of people misuse air guns. There are already laws to prevent air gun misuse and people breaking those laws can face severe penalties, including life imprisonment for the most serious offences.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Metropolitan Police has spent on the services of lobbying companies in (a) the last and (b) the current financial year; and which companies have been engaged. [51466]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police Service does not engage the services of lobbying companies, and has no plans to do so.

Crime (Care Homes)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the British Crime Survey excludes from their statistics crimes committed against people living in care homes; and if his Department has any plans to include such crimes in future. [51505]

Mr. Michael: The British Crime Survey (BCS), conducted by the Home Office, is a survey of people living in private households in England and Wales. In its present format and structure, it would be impossible for it also to provide an adequate measure of offences committed against people who live in residential care homes without a major change to its format, structure and scope. A sample of care homes within the size of sample for BCS purposes would be too small to permit reliable analysis. For this reason we have concluded that it would require a specially designed survey. A feasibility study into a possible survey of communal establishments is being undertaken by Social Survey Division of the Office for National Statistics. As yet, no decision has been taken on the types of communal establishment this would cover, whether victimisation will be covered or the funding arrangements for such a survey.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review, when he proposes to announce the details of the settlement for his Department. [51806]

Mr. Straw: Tomorrow. At 3.30pm I will be publishing a research study entitled "Reducing offending: an assessment of research evidence on ways of dealing with offending behaviour", which will provide the evidential basis for my plans for tackling crime.

WALES

Llanllyfni Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account his Department will take of the impact on the health and safety of local residents in determining whether to allow the Llanllyfni bypass to proceed. [50828]

Mr. Hain: The benefits of removing traffic from communities, and the resulting improvement in the safety and environment of local residents, is an integral part of the consideration of any road scheme, including the A487 Llanwnda to south of Llanllyfni improvement, which is currently subject to the Strategic Trunk Roads Review.

Food Sector

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals for the development of the food sector in Wales. [51794]

Mr. Ron Davies: The markets for general agricultural products are competitive, and will become increasingly so. Wales needs premium products, which can command premium prices. We need much greater food processing in Wales, to add value to Wales's primary agricultural products. We need products with a strong brand image, and we must exploit as many niche markets as possible.

I have announced action today to develop industry-led action plans, setting clear priorities for the action that must be taken in the lamb and beef, dairy and organic sectors in the first instance.

As part of this, I am very concerned that work on promoting Welsh food, and work in supporting economic development in the food sector in Wales should go hand in hand. This is critical if there is to be coherent effective support for action by the industry. I have therefore decided to give the WDA a clear responsibility for supporting the development of the food industry in Wales.

The WDA will work in close partnership with the Welsh Office Agriculture Department in facilitating the formulation of the industry-led action plans and it will lead in co-ordinating action in support of those plans. This new responsibility for the WDA will be a key part of the role that the new, all-Wales Agency will plan in promoting development in rural Wales. In giving the WDA this remit, I am endorsing the recommendations that the Welsh Affairs Committee, amongst others, have made to this effect.

In support of this, the Board of Welsh Food Promotions has agreed that work should transfer to the WDA at the start of October this year. WFP staff will be offered employment with the WDA, and the Company will subsequently be wound up. Our aim in this way is to sustain and build on WFP's achievements. I would like to pay particular thanks to Alun Evans, the Chairman of WFP, and his Board, for steering the Company through a difficult period.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when an appointment will be made to the post of Chairman of the new Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement. [51795]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am very pleased to announce that Mr. David Rowe-Beddoe has accepted my offer of the post of Chairman of the new Agency following an open competition. This will take effect in the Autumn upon the merger of the WDA and the Development Board for Rural Wales (DBRW) and the Land Authority for Wales (LAW).

Local Authority Audit Arrangements

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the guidelines for determining the audit arrangements for trading subsidiaries of local authorities and the relevant definitions for not-for-profit companies financed in whole or in part by local authorities causing them to be regarded as (a) privately influenced and (b) public sector influenced. [51312]

Mr. Ron Davies: The basic framework for classifying local authorities' interests in companies is set out in Part V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1985. Section 69 of the Act describes the circumstances which would lead to a company being one which is treated as "influenced" by a local authority.

The Local Authorities (Companies) Order 1995 (SI 1995 No. 849) includes requirements applicable to companies subject to the influence of local authorities within the meaning of the 1989 Act.

In March 1995, the Welsh Office issued an explanatory guide to local authorities' interests in companies. Paragraphs 10 and 11 of this guide provides general advice on private sector influenced companies and public sector influenced companies. The question of which category an influenced company falls into is one for local authorities to decide in conjunction with their auditors and legal advisers.

Not all local authority trading subsidiaries are companies. Where such subsidiaries are not legally separate from the authority, auditors will be the same as that for the authority.

The Audit Commission is responsible for appointing auditors to local authorities in England and Wales. Appointed auditors should ensure that local authorities have complied with the provisions of the 1989 Act. This will include consideration of the classification of companies as well as other appropriate requirements. Auditors may also consider how local authorities have discharged their stewardship responsibilities in relation to transactions undertaken through the medium of a local authority company.

Audits of private sector or public sector influenced companies must be carried out by auditors registered under the Companies Acts, although the authority's auditor may seek assurance as to the adequacy of controls operated by the company to safeguard public funds.

In May 1996, the Audit Commission issued guidance to auditors on the audit approach to local authority companies in the form of Technical Release 11/96.

Copies of the Welsh Office guide to local authorities' interests in companies and of Technical Release 11/96 has been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Further Education Leavers

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of 18 year olds leaving further education entered (a) full-time or part-time education, (b) job-related training, (c) employment without a training element and (d) unemployment in Scotland in each year since 1988. [48492]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 8 July 1998]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Young People (Reoffending)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics his Department collates on the re-offending rates of young people who have been referred to children's panels following the reporting of an offence; and if he will make a statement. [50601]

Mr. Galbraith: Responsibility for collection and publication of data on the Children's hearings system lies with the Scottish Children's Reporter Administration.

The only relevant information collected relates to children referred to Reporters on offence grounds on more than one occasion, and this is not collated routinely. I have asked the Principal Reporter to write to the right hon. Gentleman with more details of this information.

Community Organisations

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up a study to examine practice in the management of community organisations funded by Urban Aid, EU or other regeneration funds, and produce guidelines to ensure good management of such organisations in future. [50548]

Mr. Macdonald: The allocation of moneys from the Urban Programme, EU and other regeneration funds is governed by clear conditions. The responsibility for supervising and monitoring the performance and activities of individual community organisations in accordance with these conditions rests with central departments, local authorities or other agents of government, depending on the source of the funding. However the Government take seriously any reports of poor practice in the management of community organisations which have access to public funds, and seek to ensure that the appropriate examination and monitoring procedures are adhered to.

Nursery Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for each local education authority area the provision of nursery places to be provided by non-statutory bodies and private providers in the academic year 1998–99; [50426]

(2) if he will estimate the number of children currently attending nurseries provided by private providers who will not be able to continue to do so in the academic year 1998–99 because the facilities have been withdrawn by the local education authority. [50427]

Mr. Wilson: The number and distribution of grant funded pre-school education places which local authorities will commission in school year 1998–99 from partner centres will not be known accurately until the autumn. Estimates have however been received from each authority and the information is set out in the table.

It is likely there will be some parents of pre-school year children in the school year 1998–99 who, because their local authority has decided not to commission places from their preferred registered provider, will have to decide whether to move their child to another centre which is grant-eligible or to pay for a place at their preferred provider themselves. A reliable estimate of the number of parents so affected would however require data which are not collected centrally.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the criteria to be used to review the way that local education authorities have exercised their discretion in entering into local partnerships with private sector organisations to provide nursery places for the academic year 1998–99. [50425]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 21 April 1998, Official Report, column 585.

Intestacy

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums passed to the Crown as ultimus haeres from Scottish estates where the deceased failed to leave an effective will in the last year for which figures are available. [51440]

Mr. McLeish: The total sum passed to the Crown Office in Scotland as Ultimus Haeres for the year 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997 was £1,708,773.03.

The part of the sum attributable to Scottish estates where the deceased failed to leave a Will cannot be identified separately from sums passing to the Crown from dissolved companies without disproportionate cost to the Department.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Prime Minister what is his office's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48672]

The Prime Minister: It is not possible for me to deal personally with all of the letters I receive and I must therefore refer most of them to the Department with responsibility for the policy or the matter in question. We ask Departments to respond within their targets for dealing with correspondence.

One of the six service standards for central government requires Departments to set a target for responding to letters from members of the public and to publish information on their performance. A report on the performance of the main Departments against the six standards is being prepared and will be made available to the House shortly.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what is the e-mail address of his Office's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49822]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Downing Street receives approximately 7,000 items of correspondence a week from the general public—approximately three times as much as received prior to the General Election. The majority receive a response from my office or the relevant Government Department. There are no plans at present to introduce a dedicated e-mail address for the 10 Downing Street Correspondence Unit. However, the Government are currently considering policy on providing Ministers with e-mail addresses. Number 10's allocation of an e-mail address will be in line with this policy once it has been finalised.

The 10 Downing Street website (www.number-10.gov.uk) also provides five discussion fora where the public can post their views on matters of Government policy.

No. 10 Policy Unit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if a telephone log is kept showing the incoming and outgoing calls to and from the No. 10 Policy Unit. [49963]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 July 1998]: The facilities under the previous Government continue to operate whereby an automatic record is kept of the telephone numbers called from the No. 10 switchboard.

BBC Vice-chairman

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what names have been provided to him or his office following the advertisement for candidates who wish to be considered for appointment as vice-chairman of the BBC. [50535]

The Prime Minister: These appointments are made by the Prime Minister with the approval of Her Majesty the Queen and they will be announced, in the normal way, when the full appointment process is completed.

The Observer

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) on 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 1065, what factors led him to his conclusion that The Observer claimed to have a tape recording of a conversation with a member of his staff in relation to payments for contacts; and when he reached that conclusion. [50533]

The Prime Minister: In an interview broadcast on BBC Radio Five Live on 6 July 1998, Mr. Gregory Pallast, a journalist from The Observer, was asked in relation to an alleged conversation with a member of my staff "Do you have that on tape?". Mr. Pallast replied "I have that for certain".

In a discussion broadcast that evening on the BBC television programme "Newsnight" Mr. Pallast was again repeatedly asked whether he could produce a tape. He did not take the opportunity to deny that one existed.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish an independent review of the legal processes relating to Lockerbie. [49275]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 July 1998]: No. Since taking office, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate, in his independent role as prosecutor, has fully reviewed the evidence relating to the Lockerbie case. He concluded that, on the evidence available, it would be right to pursue the petition warrants against the two Libyan accused.

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the most recent requests for investigations which the Government have made to the Committee on Standards in Public Life and the date each request was communicated to the Committee. [51224]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Committee on Standards in Public Life does not have powers of investigation, but undertakes more general inquiries about standards of conduct in public life. On 12 November 1997, I wrote to Lord Neill, Chairman of the Committee on Standards in Public Life, inviting the Committee to look at the funding of political parties, and extending their terms of reference to enable them to undertake this study. The Committee's inquiry is due to be completed in September 1998. The Government have made no subsequent requests to the Committee.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 2, when he expects to write to the right hon. Member for Wokingham indicating the cost of his trip to Japan. [51421]

The Prime Minister: Shortly.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Library

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans the British Library has for the charging of readers fees for (a) commercial and (b) non-commercial users. [50743]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The British Library has no immediate plans to introduce charges for access to the reading rooms but is currently consulting its users on a broad range of issues, including introduction of charges. Any proposal by the Board to introduce charges would require my approval and would be considered in the light of all relevant factors, including the views of readers.

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what initiatives his Department has taken in respect of developing sustainable tourism within the United Kingdom. [51031]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 17 July 1998]: My Department has recently undertaken a nationwide consultation exercise on sustainable tourism and the responses to the consultation are currently being analysed. They will feed into the development of the new strategy for tourism which my Department will launch later this year and will help update the UK Sustainable Development Strategy which will be published by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, also later this year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Exports

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he can report in lifting the ban on beef exports from the UK. [49420]

Dr. John Cunningham: A Commission proposal to enable beef to be exported from the UK under the Date Based Export Scheme (DBES) is currently under consideration by the Standing Veterinary Committee. The UK is making every effort to secure an early agreement on the best possible terms.

Technetium-99

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that monitoring takes place of concentrations of Technetium-99 in seaweed and crustaceans along the north coast of Wales. [50635]

Mr. Rooker: The Department continues to carry out regular monitoring and assessment of concentrations of technetium-99 in aquatic materials from the north coast of Wales.

The results are published annually in the Department's report "Radioactivity in Food and the Environment". The latest report, for 1996, shows that concentrations of technetium-99 in seaweed and crustaceans along the north coast of Wales are of negligible radiological significance. The report for 1997 will be published in the autumn.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Veterinary Medicines Directorate will publish the Annual Report on Surveillance for Veterinary Residues in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [51742]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are committed to giving consumers the maximum possible information on the presence of residues in food, with appropriate advice on the significance of any results. The Annual Report on Surveillance for Veterinary Residues in 1997 is being published by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) today and it paints a very positive picture of the current situation in the UK.

The VMD operates a statutory national sampling and surveillance scheme and a complementary non-statutory programme. In 1997 some 42,000 samples were collected and subjected to around 57,000 analyses in GB. The VMD reports the results of its surveillance quarterly in the Medicines Act Veterinary Information Service (MAVIS) and in much greater detail in this Annual Report. The results continue to show that the presence of residues of veterinary medicines from all sources in food is very low.

The main points to emerge from the Report are:

99.5 per cent. of statutory samples tested in 1997 were free of detectable residues compared to 99.2 per cent. in 1996.

More significantly, the "positive" samples fell from 0.24 per cent. in 1996 to 0.13 per cent. in 1997.

This Report, for the first time, gives details of the follow up investigations which are undertaken on all positive samples. Two successful prosecutions were taken and the report outlines initiatives which are being introduced to improve the chances of successful prosecutions int the future.

The Report, which is available free of charge from the VMD, explains how the VMD obtains samples, how and where they analyse them and what they do with the results. It places the surveillance programmes into the current and future EC context and, to help the lay reader, includes a glossary of technical terms. The results are all placed into a toxicological context which I believe will re-assure consumers that, because of the considerable margins of safety which are applied when maximum residue limits for veterinary medicines are established, the very low levels of residues currently found under the schemes are unlikely to pose a health risk.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cranston: To ask the Attorney-General how many barristers over six years call were employed as lawyers by the Crown Prosecution Service during each of the years 1993 to 1997. [50096]

The Attorney-General: On 1 April of each year, the Crown Prosecution Service employed the following number of barristers with over six years' call:

	Number
1993	205
1994	284
1995	393
1996	441
1997	513

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General what assistance is given to unqualified Crown Prosecution staff to develop their careers, with particular reference to obtaining formal legal qualifications; and if he will make a statement. [50145]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service offers a number of training contracts to law students leading to professional status as barristers and solicitors through its Legal Trainee Recruitment Schemes. Approximately one-third of the available places have been allocated to staff in the CPS enabling them to achieve professional qualifications and appointments as Crown Prosecutors.

There are also a number of other development opportunities available which include:

- A two level Casework Officer Training Scheme designed jointly with the Institute of Legal Executives (ILEX). The first level comprises nine modules covering general legal procedures such as committals, indictments and trial procedure. Level two is a two year course which provides more advanced legal training and can lead to exemption from the ILEX paper on criminal law.
- A range of in-house courses and distance learning packages offered to develop expertise on a number of legal and non-legal subjects. In addition, sponsorship is available for a range of external qualifications including NVQ's and the Institute of Legal Executives.
- The Crown Prosecution Service also takes part in the Prince's Trust Volunteer Programme which aims to help 16 to 25 year olds to develop their personal skills through practical teamwork in the community.
- A training programme is also being prepared for the Designated Caseworkers who will be undertaking the review and presentation of cases in the Reducing Delay pilots at selected CPS branch sites commencing October 1998.

Mr. Cranston: To ask the Attorney-General how many registered pupil masters were employed by the Crown Prosecution Service; and how many pupils were trained by those pupil masters in each year since 1993. [50097]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not keep historic records of the number of registered pupil masters. However, on 1 July 1998, it employed 98 pupil masters who are registered with the Bar Council.

Similarly, the Crown Prosecution Service does not hold records to show the number of pupils trained by its employed pupil masters. However, the number of pupils employed by the Crown Prosecution Service in each year since 1993 is:

Year	Number
1993	23
1994	11
1995	4
1996	1
1998	0

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation she had with women's organisations; and if she will make a statement. [49090]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development has not been responsible for any legislation passed in the current session. The Department assesses all its policies and programmes for gender impact, in line with the guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment that has been available since 1992.

Our White Paper, published in November 1997, reaffirmed our commitment to gender equality and the empowerment of women by eliminating gender disparity in primary and secondary education by 2005; one of the key international development targets to which we subscribe.

We also played a key part in formulating the revised guidelines on gender, issued by the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in April 1998.

Fair Trading

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her decision to write to the chairmen of the top 500 companies urging them to use Cafédirect in their vending machines. [50553]

Clare Short: Trade is crucial to poverty elimination as it brings the resources that can help generate growth. But we need to ensure that the benefits of trade reach the least developed countries and the poorest people and lead to sustainable economic and social development. Fair and ethical trade have a key role to play in this, both by establishing codes of practice and improving the conditions of workers, and by dealing with smaller producers on the edge of the economy. Many British companies are working for fair and ethical trade in their own business practices and are discussing these issues with my Department.

My letters to the chairmen of the FT500 companies was a request to ask them to consider using fairly traded coffee in their vending machines.

Sex Tourism

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with other countries to offer help and advice in combating sexual tourism in their countries. [50706]

Clare Short: Sex tourism is just one element of sexual exploitation. Social and economic conditions create an environment where poor or vulnerable people in particular are subject to sexual abuse and exploitation, and combating sex tourism is therefore part of the Department for International Development's (DFID) goal of eliminating poverty in poorer countries.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children is of particular concern to DFID. DFID funds non-government organisation projects in a number of countries, many of them in Asia, to address sexual exploitation of children.

DFID is involved in the preparations for the ASEM Child Welfare Experts Meeting, which takes place later this year, gathering representatives from ASEM member countries in London, to share experience in tackling sexual exploitation of children.

DFID is supporting the International Labour Organisations International Programme for Elimination of Child Labour in carrying out research on trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

The Global March against child labour brought the realities of child labour, including sexual exploitation of children, to many people and governments around the world. Following the March, at the International Labour Conference, DFID took an active role in agreeing a draft international convention to immediately outlaw the worst forms of child labour; labour that maims, corrupts and kills children. Combating sex tourism is part of that.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards advising third-world countries of the dangers of importing and using asbestos. [50705]

Clare Short: My Department is committed to working with our partner countries in their efforts to develop and implement national strategies for sustainable development. This includes working to improve standards of environmental regulation and reverse overall trends in environmental degradation, which may include advice on the use and handling of asbestos in specific cases.

The UK has previously assisted the Hirakud Power Station in India to assess health risks associated with the existence of asbestos lagging, and to identify the most appropriate and safe ways of removing and disposing of hazardous materials.

European Council Regulation No. 2455/92 concerning exports and imports of certain dangerous chemicals establishes a system by which third countries, including developing countries, which import chemicals banned or severely restricted in the European Community are notified of the potential dangers and are informed of the safety precautions which have to be taken, and of the use restrictions of the products within the Community.

The Regulation also implements the procedure of Prior Informed Consent set up by the United Nations Environment Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organisation. This means that EC exporters have to comply with the import conditions of countries participating in the procedures. Asbestos is one of the substances covered by the Regulation, which is implemented in the United Kingdom by the Health and Safety Executive.

Coral Reefs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department has given to the International Coral Reef Initiative. [50020]

Clare Short: My Department has a particular interest in reversing the degradation of coral reef and other coastal ecosystems because these often represent an important source of livelihood of poor communities in the heavily populated coastal areas of the developing countries. Those with greatest dependence on these resources are often the poorest members of these communities.

The United Kingdom is a founder member of the International Coral Reef Initiative (ICRI) and participates in meetings of the ICRI Co-ordinating Planning Committee. Following financial and technical support which UK provided for the ICRI South Asia Region Coral Reef Management Workshop in 1995, my Department has recently funded the preparation and publication of a Manual of Coastal Resource Management in South Asia. We are also helping our partners in South Asia to protect their coral reefs by providing funds and expertise to the International Oceanographic Commission of UNESCO for the development of a South Asia region coral reef monitoring network, the first regional component of a planned global network.

In September this year, the performance of ICRI over its first four years will be reviewed at the International Symposium on Tropical Marine Ecosystems Management, to be held in Australia. My Department has agreed to support the costs associated with attendance at this meeting by representatives from our S. Asia partners countries, from the regional ICRI co-ordinating organisation and from the S. Asia coral reef monitoring network.

The ICRI seeks greater understanding of the ecology of coral reefs, mangrove and seagrass systems on tropical coasts, and urges the sustainable use of these systems for the benefit of dependent populations. During the period 1990 to date, my Department has supported 35 projects with a total commitment of almost £10 million in pursuit of these objectives. Our concern in supporting the protection of coral reefs, and other tropical coastal ecosystems, is to help our partners stabilise and regenerate natural resources which are of significant importance to global efforts to eradicate poverty.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Funds

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter), of 7 April 1998, Official Report, columns 202–04, if he will place in the Library a list of projects supported over the last year for which figures are available for budget lines (a) A-3024 and A-3104, (b) A-3020 and A-3100, (c) A-3029 and A-3109, (d) A-3037 and A-3117, (e) A-3025 and A3105, (f) B3–302, (g) A-3021 and A3101, (h) B3–301, (i) B3–300 and (j) A-3022 and A-3103; and who monitors the activities funded in the United Kingdom. [49651]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I have already placed in the Library reports on beneficiaries of grants from Part A of the Community budget in 1997 and 1998 (to 30 May). These cover all the budget lines in this question apart from B3–300 and B3–301 and B3–302, for which a breakdown of projects funded over the last year is not available. All activities funded under these budget lines are monitored in the first instance by the Commission.

Edgar Fernandes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Turkey concerning the case of Edgar Fernandes; and if he will publish their response. [50673]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy sent a Diplomatic Note to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) in Ankara on 5 June. The Note pressed the authorities for information on the investigation into Mr. Fernandes' death and the progress of the extradition request for the suspect to be returned from Malta to Turkey. the MFA replied with Diplomatic Notes on 17 and 24 June. They confirmed an investigation was still being conducted and they had not yet received a response from the Maltese authorities. The Turkish authorities informed our Embassy orally on 14 July that a formal extradition request had been handed to the Maltese Embassy in Rome.

Treaty of Canterbury

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with (i) the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions, (b) Eurotunnel and (c) the French Government regarding Clause 33.3 of the Treaty of Canterbury. [51176]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There is no Clause 33.3 of the Treaty of Canterbury. My hon. Friend may be referring to Clause 33.3 of the Channel Fixed Link Concession Agreement.

We are not aware of any discussions in recent years between Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers or officials and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Eurotunnel or the French Government regarding Clause 33.3 of the Concession Agreement, other than in the context of preparing a reply to this question.

Aloïs Brunner

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Syrian Government on the subject of Aloïs Brunner. [50899]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made no representations to the Syrian government on this matter.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to assist the French Government to extradite Aloïs Brunner for crimes against humanity; and if he will make a statement on the whereabouts of Aloïs Brunner. [50898]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have no record of any activity by the Government on the subject of Aloïs Brunner, nor evidence of his whereabouts.

Philippines

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how long those who have applied in the Philippines for settlement in the United Kingdom as the wife of a British citizen have had to wait on average for a decision in the last year. [51230]

Mr. Fatchett: In the last year, the average waiting time in Manila for an interview for a settlement visa has been 8 weeks. In almost all cases, a decision on the application is taken immediately following the interview and the applicant informed at the same time.

Indian Ocean Territories (Fishing)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for the protection of coral reefs around fishing grounds in the British Indian Ocean Territories. [49590]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Administering the British Indian Ocean Territory's (BIOT) 200 mile Fisheries Conservation and Management Zone is the responsibility of the BIOT Government. It is alert to the need to provide protection for the coral reef fishery. May I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement made to the House by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development on 1 July 1997, Official Report, columns 324–30.

Mexico

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the timetable for discussions on free trade between Mexico and the EU. [51305]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We strongly support the strengthening of EU/Mexico relations, including the liberalisation of trade in goods and services. As EU Presidency, we secured EU agreement to Negotiating Directives which clear the path for formal negotiations with Mexico. The UK will be looking for a package that is fully compatible with WTO rules and offers the EU similar access to the Mexican market as that already given to Mexico's NAFTA partners, the US and Canada. We expect negotiations to begin after the Summer break when the Mexicans have had time to consider EU proposals.

Correspondence

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Woking regarding Kenny Richey. [51489]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am sorry that a substantive reply to the hon. Member's letter to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary of 25 June has been delayed. A full reply was sent to him on 17 July.

Europe Houses

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries in which Europe Houses operate; what are the criteria for the establishment of a Europe House; and what discussions are taking place on the establishment of a Europe House in the United Kingdom. [46069]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The International Federation of Europe Houses (FIME) is an association of over 100 education and information centres in 24 European countries, including the UK. Questions about the criteria for membership of FIME should be addressed to them.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the implications for human rights of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [50763]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The purpose of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) is to prevent discrimination against investors on the grounds of their nationality. The Government are pressing for clauses in the MAI which will prevent countries attracting specific investments by lowering environment and labour standards. We do not believe that the MAI will have any adverse effect on human rights, nor will it prevent the Government from pursuing their human rights agenda.

Gibraltar

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments there have been in discussions between Gibraltar and Spain regarding the use of Gibraltar airport; and if he will make a statement. [50676]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 July 1998:] We are not aware of any recent discussions between the Government of Gibraltar and the Spanish authorities regarding the use of Gibraltar airport. We believe that development of Gibraltar airport would bring significant economic benefits for Gibraltar and Spain. We would support any proposal on which all parties could agree.

Pakistan and India

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions have been applied by (a) the UK, (b) the EU and (c) the G8 to (i) Pakistan and (ii) India following their detonation of nuclear devices; and if he will make a statement. [50848]

Mr. Fatchett: G8 countries meeting in London on 12 June agreed to work for a postponement in the consideration of loans to India and Pakistan in the World Bank and other International Financial Institutions, except where these loans were to meet basic human needs.

The EU adopted a similar policy on IFI loans on 8 June. The General Affairs Council also asked the Commission to consider, in a forthcoming review, India and Pakistan's eligibility to benefit from the Community's Generalised System of Preferences in the light of their tests. The General Affairs Council stated that the European Union would take all necessary measures should India and Pakistan not take early steps to accede to the relevant international non-proliferation treaties.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary outlined the measures that the UK took in response to the tests in his statement to the House on 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 21–22. Additional safeguards to prevent proliferation activities by India and Pakistan in the UK were announced to the House by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) on 10 July 1998, Official Report, columns 687–88.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Innovation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the Business Link Innovation Credit Scheme was cancelled; and what initiatives have replaced it. [48339]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 July 1998]: The Innovation Credit scheme was discontinued at the end of March 1998 as part of a series of measures to simplify funding for Business Links, by reducing the number of separate programme budgets. Business Links are sufficiently experienced to decide for themselves at local level whether a voucher-based scheme of this sort is a priority use of funds.

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation she had with women's organisations; and if she will make a statement. [49091]

Mrs. Beckett: Guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment has been available in this Department since 1992.

Within the Department we are making increasing use of consultation, research projects and disaggregated statistics to identify the impact of policy on women. For example, in developing the proposals on maternity and parental rights in the White Paper, "Fairness at Work", we consulted key stakeholders including representatives of women's interests.

Similarly, the Low Pay Commission's recommendations for the national minimum wage, which the Government have accepted subject to consultation on the practicalities of implementation, were produced following extensive consultation, including with the Equal Opportunities Commission and women's organisations.

Mirror Group Newspapers

Mr. Radice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will publish her Department's inspectors' inquiry, set up in April 1992, into the circumstances of the flotation of Mirror Group Newspapers plc; and what is the current state of progress with the report. [50836]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The inspectors have not yet reported to me. A decision on publication will be taken when the report has been received and fully considered. It is not our policy to comment on an inspection during its progress.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on United Kingdom trade with Libya of sanctions against that country. [49435]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The Department keeps a watching brief on trade between the United Kingdom and Libya. The United Nations Security Council imposed sanctions on Libya on 15 April 1992. These sanctions relate to a ban on the sale of goods related to the Military and Aviation sectors, a world-wide ban on flights to and from Libya, and restrictions on diplomatic movement. Further sanctions were introduced on 1 December 1993 and relate to oil-related goods and equipment; material for Libyan airfields, making aircraft available to Libya; and extending the earlier provisions related to technical advice and training. The extended measures also introduced a limited assets freeze. The effect of sanctions on United Kingdom trade with Libya has been minimal. Britain's exports to Libya for 1997 were £269 million, which equates to a 2.5 per cent. decrease on the end-of-year figure for 1993, the year sanctions were introduced. Imports from Libya for 1997 were £231.4 million compared with £156.6 million in 1993.

Electrical Goods

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to monitor the electrical goods market to ensure that price fixing is not occurring. [51218]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Under UK competition legislation the Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for keeping the operation of markets under review, and considering allegations of anti-competitive behaviour, abuse of monopoly power or restrictive trade practices, including price fixing.

As part of his responsibilities, the Director General will keep under review compliance with the Order made by my right. hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 19 May 1998, following the 1997 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of eight categories of domestic electrical goods. The Order prohibits suppliers of those goods from recommending retail prices to retailers, and from influencing the prices at which retailers sell their goods, and comes into force on 1 September 1998.

Branded Goods

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will take steps to ensure that United Kingdom consumers continue to benefit from high street retailers importing branded goods from outside the EU on a parallel basis. [51217]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Under present United Kingdom legislation (the Trade Marks Act 1994) trade mark rights cannot be used to prevent or control parallel importation into this country of genuine goods, that is, goods already put on the market by, or with the consent of, trade mark owners, but this reduction in their rights applies only to goods put on the market in the European Economic Area (EEA). Under current legislation, goods put on the market outside the EEA do not come within this exception. Trade mark owners may, if they wish, use their rights to prevent or control the importation into the United Kingdom of such goods. However, the effects of the exercise of rights in this way is subject to the requirements of European and domestic law governing supply and competition.

The issue of parallel importation from outside the EEA into EC Member States is important for the operation of the European Single Market. The European Commission is currently undertaking a major study to investigate the economic effects of the use of trade marks and other intellectual property rights in relation to parallel importation. We will consider the results of this work very carefully when they emerge towards the beginning of next year, and we intend to take a strong part in the discussions and decisions which follow.

The Trade Marks Act implements Directive 89/104/EC.

In implementing, the UK Parliament, along with all other Member States, took the view that the Directive required that trade mark owners should be able to use their rights to control or prevent parallel imports from non-EEA countries. This is reflected in the UK Act at Section 12. A recent case before the ECJ (the Silhouette case) questioned this interpretation. The judgment confirms that this interpretation is correct.

The Commission's study into intellectual property rights and their effects on parallel importation was instigated following Dutch objections to provisions in a Directive concerning industrial designs protection, which provisions mirror those of the trade marks Directive.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she will take to ensure that fuel poverty does not increase as a result of the introduction of competition into the gas and electricity supply industries; and if she will make a statement. [50927]

Mr. Battle: The Green Paper "A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation" highlighted a particular concern that disadvantaged consumers may be benefiting least from emerging competition in gas and electricity supply. Competition has, and will, continue to benefit all consumers in these markets by driving prices down and services standards and choice up. But it is important that these benefits should be enjoyed fairly by all. The gas and electricity regulators and energy companies, in consultation with consumer representative bodies, were therefore asked to draw up an action plan to ensure that disadvantaged consumers benefit from improved efficiency, more choice, and greater fairness. That action plan has now been received and is being considered carefully, along with the many representations submitted on these issues. The President of the Board of Trade will be announcing the Government's response as soon as possible.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library a copy of the 93+2 protocol on international nuclear safeguards agreed in June between Euratom, IAEA and other relevant parties. [51400]

Mr. Battle: I have arranged for a copy of the Council Decision of 8 June approving the three Additional Protocols, with the text of the three Additional protocols attached as annexes, to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The three Additional Protocols were also approved by the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency on 11 June.

We expect the agreement to be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities in due course.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the impact on the United Kingdom aerospace industry of the award of the contract to Airbus Industrie to provide aircraft for US Airways. [51038]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The UK's industrial partner in Airbus, British Aerospace, has a 20 per cent. stake in Airbus which brings considerable economic benefits to the UK. Airbus and related businesses support 25,000 UK jobs in 300 companies, and contribute £1 billion to the UK trade balance. Airbus is an excellent example of European industrial co-operation. In the first half of this year Airbus has estimated that it has won 52 per cent. of the world market for large civil aircraft.

The US Airways order was for up to thirty A330–300 aircraft, comprising 7 firm orders, 7 options, and 16 reserved production positions. The 14 orders and options are estimated to be worth over $1,500 million. Orders such as this demonstrate Airbus' continuing technical and commercial excellence.

Departmental Invoices

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of her Department's invoices were paid within the target period during the last year; and what was the figure for each of the three preceding years. [50014]

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Small Firms, Trade and Industry will publish details of the payment performance of all Government Departments for the 1997–98 financial year before the Summer Recess. Following is the information for the Department of Trade and Industry, for the three preceding years:

	Percentage
1994–95	84
1995–96	93
1996–97	97.9

Export Licences

Yvette Cooper: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library statistics on export licences issued and refused for the period 1 January to 1 March 1997. [51650]

Mrs. Beckett: The statistics on export licences issued and refused for this period were placed in the House Library today.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has conducted on whether former local authority employees transferring employment under the Acquired Rights Directive are likely to receive their full anticipated retirement pension in cases of one or more subsequent transfers of employment. [51248]

Mr. Ian McCartney: None. The coverage of occupational pensions is, however, one of the issues that the Government have under active consideration in the context of their intended revision of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (the TUPE Regulations) which implement the Acquired Rights Directive in the UK.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to publish the results of the review of renewable energy policy; and if she will make a statement. [50827]

Mr. Battle: The Government expect to make an announcement about the Review later in the summer.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research she has commissioned to assess the potential of renewable energy in contributing to the Government's 12.5 per cent. target for reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. [51317]

Mr. Battle: In June 1997 the Government initiated a review of new and renewable energy policy, including what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of the UK's electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010, and what contribution new and renewable technologies could make to meeting greenhouse gas reduction commitments. The Review is considering, inter alia, the current status and potential of the relevant new and renewable energy technologies. The Review is also addressing the need for research, development, demonstration and dissemination, and the barriers to the deployment of new and renewable energy and the measures which may be necessary to overcome them.

The Government expect to make an announcement about the Review later this summer.

Business Links

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the latest survey of Business Links' level of activity, with particular reference to the number of small businesses using Business Links. [50013]

Mrs. Roche: In the period January to March 1998 just over 112,000 businesses in England used Business Link. Of those of known size, over 56,000 of these businesses had less than 10 employees, and more than 29,000 had from 10 to 49 employees.

Sombrero Island (Rocket-launching Platform)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to discuss with the Government and Governor of Anguilla the plans of Beale Aerospace to build a rocket-launching platform on Sombrero Island. [50127]

Mr. Battle: The Government's approach to the proposal by Beale Aerospace to develop a satellite launch site on Sombrero Island is being co-ordinated by the British National Space Centre (BNSC) which is seeking advice on the proposal from a range of Government Departments. Officials from BNSC are in close contact with both the Governor of Anguilla and officials from the Anguillan Government. I have no immediate plans to discuss the issue with the Governor or Government personally.

Science and Engineering Research

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how much of the proposed £1.1 billion extra spending on science and engineering research will be spent in the North West; [51040]

(2) where the extra funding recently announced for science and engineering research will be spent in the North West. [51039]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 17 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will make decisions on the allocation of the Science Budget in the usual way, being advised by the Director General of Research Councils (DGRC). Decisions on the Research Council's programmes will be announced in the Autumn. The Research Councils and other funded bodies will then take decisions on the basis of the quality of the proposal and its relevance to sustainable growth and quality of life. The arrangements for the £600 million joint Infrastructure Fund with the Wellcome Trust will involve the peer review of proposals, as agreed between the DGRC and the Director of the Wellcome Trust. It is not possible to specify in advance which research proposals at which universities/institutes will get funding.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what ways she has been involved in the Government's consideration of European monetary union. [13040]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department is playing a full role in the key task of ensuring that British business is fully ready for the launch of the euro on 1 January next year. We are also working with business on what we must do to prepare for possible UK entry. In this way, the UK could be in a position to join early in the next parliament if the single currency is successful and if Government, Parliament and the people agree.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to answer the questions for answer on (a) 29 October 1997 (13040), (b) 28 January (25826), (c) 25 June (47544) and (d) 29 June (48339) from the right hon. Member for Wokingham. [51441]

Mrs. Beckett: I have answered q13040 today. The delay arose because the question did not appear in the electronic system used to transmit such information to my Parliamentary Branch, and we were thus unaware it had been tabled. Action has been taken which should prevent this recurring.

Q25826 was answered on 3 February and the text will appear in the bound volume of the Official Report.

I have answered q48339 today and will answer q47544 shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Members (Facilities)

37. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Council what steps she is taking to improve the range of facilities available to hon. Members to increase the effectiveness of their offices. [49613]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Accommodation and Works, Administration, Broadcasting and Information Committees have responsibilities which affect the effectiveness of Members offices and I am sure that those Committees would be willing to consider any specific matters within their terms of reference which my hon. Friend wishes to raise.

Staff Costs

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the impact on staff costs per week of the House sitting in August. [49609]

Mr. Kirkwood: Staff of the House are paid on an annual basis. If the House were to sit in August, the additional staff costs would therefore be confined to overtime and additional hours payments together with the cost of late night transport. The precise amount would depend on the hours of Sitting but could be of the order of £10,000 per week.

Refreshment Department

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what ethical and environmental policies are in place in respect of the purchasing of food by the Refreshment Department. [49860]

Mr. Dennis Turner: In the purchasing of food, the Refreshment Department not only considers the price being offered, but also takes into account criteria such as the quality and wholesomeness of the produce available, food safety issues and consumer confidence; the latter requires the Department's procurement officer to be aware of ethical and environmental issues relating to the food chain and to advise the Department's management in order that customer confidence can be maintained at all times.

The Refreshment Department maintains purchasing guidelines which include the following food-related issues:

1. animal husbandry and, in particular, the procurement of fresh meat and poultry only from sources approved under an accredited 'farm assurance' scheme;
2. the purchase of 'dolphin friendly' tinned and fresh tuna;
3. the purchase of free-range eggs only;
4. the purchase of coffee which has been accredited by the Fairtrade Foundation;
5. to support the aims of the Lomé Convention, specifically with reference to the purchase of Caribbean bananas and cane sugar;
6. to encourage food suppliers to minimise the use of packaging materials and wherever practicable, to use packaging manufactured from recycled materials;
7. to maximise the recycling of food packaging, disposable products, glass, plastics, cans and waste oils;

8. to maintain close contacts with organisations such as Freedom Foods, the Soil Association, the Fairtrade Foundation and others who operate schemes promoting the availability and quality of ethical or environmentally-friendly foods; in particular, to work with and encourage such organisations to extend their schemes into the catering food supply chain;

9. to avoid, wherever identifiable, the procurement of foods which contain genetically modified organisms.

PDVN

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what was the cost of the Parliamentary Data and Video Network in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [51021]

Mr. Allan: The Capital and Revenue cost of providing the PDVN, in the financial year 1997–98, including expenditure on upgrade and improvement projects, but excluding expenditure on IT from the Office Cost Allowance and money spent by Departments of the House in providing information services on the PDVN (such as POLIS) was £2,207,000. Associated staff costs over the same period were an additional £647,000. It is estimated that some £750,000 was spent by the House of Commons on PDVN cabling in 1997–98.

HEALTH

Medicines (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the newly established system for licensing medicines for the treatment of children in the United States of America and the advantages and disadvantages of such a system for the United Kingdom. [43821]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 1 June 1998]: There is a newly established system for licensing medicines for the treatment of children in the United States of America. There have been recent amendments and proposed amendments to the already existing legislation which applies to the licensing of medicinal products for the treatment of all age groups.

In December 1994 the United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) published the Final Rule on paediatric labelling. The Final Rule required applicants to examine their existing data for already approved drugs to determine whether there was enough information to permit a paediatric indication. If appropriate, applicants were to apply for the addition to their licence by April 1997. This rule has not been very successful in adding paediatric age groups to existing licences as the available data were generally inadequate.

In November 1997 the FDA Modernisation Act of 1997 was signed into law. Section 111 deals with paediatric studies of drugs. Where appropriate, studies are encouraged in children for all newly authorised drugs so that new medicines will be available for use in children. For certain already approved drugs (list published in May 1998) applicants will be required to carry out studies in paediatric age groups with the aim of obtaining a licence for use in children. The Act allows 6 extra months of market exclusivity for pharmaceutical manufacturers who conduct acceptable studies in children of drugs identified by the FDA for which paediatric information would be beneficial.

There is also a proposed rule, published in August 1997, which would require manufacturers to conduct studies in children if requested to do so by the FDA. If the incentives in the Modernisation Act are successful this additional regulation may be unnecessary.

The spirit of these amendments is reflected in new European guidance on licensing medicines in children which came into operation in September 1997[1]. The United Kingdom played a major role in developing this new guidance which strongly encourages the pharmaceutical industry to develop medicines for use in children. It states that clinical trials in children should be submitted to the regulatory authorities as soon as possible if a product is likely to be of benefit to children or widely used in that age group.

In the European Union there is no legal requirement to conduct studies in children although a change to the Directives may be considered if companies do not respond to the new guideline. There is no extra market exclusivity in the EU for applicants who conduct studies in children.

Action Zones

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the initiatives undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 which have involved the establishment of (a) action zones and (b) pilot schemes limited to particular geographical areas, indicating the name of the programme and the action zone or pilot scheme areas covered in each instance. [47060]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Pharmacists

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies he has commissioned into the role of pharmacists in the National Health Service. [48231]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 1 July 1998]: A number of pilot projects have been funded by the Department to appraise the value to the National Health Service of community pharmacists providing a wider range of services. There were 17 pilots on prescribing advice during 1995–96 and there are currently six pilot projects on repeat and instalment dispensing (whereby patients receive certain medicines dispensed in instalments) and a further six pilot projects evaluating services to help various patient groups to obtain best outcomes from their medicines. In addition, the Department has commissioned specific pieces of research relevant to the role of community pharmacists from university departments. The results will inform decisions on which if any of these services proceed to implementation.

We propose to publish a document in the autumn setting out proposals for the future role of community pharmacy within the NHS.

Family Planning

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list, by health authority, the number of nurses waiting for a place on the ENB family planning course; [48966]

(2) if he will list, by health authority, the number of places available for nurses to take the ENB family planning course. [48967]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested for the number of nurses waiting for a place on the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting family planning course is not collected centrally in the format requested.

There are currently 3,952 approved places per annum on education programmes in family planning and reproductive sexual health. This is broken down by region as follows:

Region	Number
Anglia and Oxford	407
Northern and Yorkshire	550
North Thames	715
South Thames	607
North West	330
South and West	428
Trent	560

Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many formal complaints were made to the Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [48950]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is in the table:

Table: Number of written complaints for Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust 1992–93 to 1996–97

Social Service Provision (London)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what additional costs are incurred within London in the social service provision of adult care (a) in residential establishments and (b) in the community; and what allowance is made for this in the funding of London local government; [49441]

(2) what additional costs he estimates are incurred within London in the social service provision of children's care; and what allowance he makes for this in his Department's funding of such provision. [49419]

Ms Jowell: The Government's estimates of the costs of providing social services are reflected in local authorities' standard spending assessment (SSAs). SSAs for 1998–99, per head of population of the relevant age-group, for London authorities, non-London authorities, and all English authorities, are shown in the table.

£ per head

	London	England outside London	England
Residential services for the elderly	485	343	361
Non-residential services for the elderly	270	206	213

Chiropody

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each relevant NHS trust (a) the number of patient contacts with the chiropody service, (b) the number of chiropody staff employed and (c) total expenditure on community chiropody services in each of the last three years. [49551]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Information about the number of patient contacts with their chiropody services for each National Health Service trust is contained in the Department of Health publication "Chiropody services, summary information, England". Copies of the summary information for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97, the latest year available, are available in the Library.

Copies of the information about the number of chiropody staff employed in each NHS trust in the last three years up to 1996–97, the latest year available, will be placed in the Library.

NHS trusts provide figures for total expenditure on community chiropody services in the annual financial returns. Analysis of these data by individual trust in England for the years 1994–95 to 1996–97 are available in the Library.

Mental Health Challenge Fund

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the cases of misuse of Mental Health Challenge Fund moneys which have been uncovered by (a) audit and (b) other means; and if he will make a statement. [50074]

Ms Jowell: We are not aware of any misuse of Mental Health Challenge Fund moneys.

NHS Magazine

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the National Health Service, net of advertising, sponsorship and sales, of the production and distribution of the NHS Magazine in each month since its introduction; and what its budget is for the next 12 months. [50130]

Ms Jowell: The "NHS Magazine", which was first published in June 1995, acts as a vehicle for sharing best practice within the National Health Service. It also carries the most up to date quarterly data about NHS performance, helping to ensure the service remains accountable to those it serves.

The new costs of production of each issue of the magazine, all of which have been met from the communications budget of the NHS Executive, were:

Date	Net Cost (£)	Costs per issue (pence)
Summer 1995	33,711	1.12
Autumn 1995	31,276	0.89
Winter 1995	27,611	0.79
Spring 1996	30,169	0.86
Summer 1996	26,812	0.72
Autumn 1996	33,154	0.95
Winter 1996	35,536	1
Spring 1997	29,815	0.85
Summer 1997	32,491	0.90
Autumn 1997	29,959	0.83
Winter 1997	40,285	1.15
Spring 1998	41,468	1.18
Summer 1998	50,030	1

Distribution costs of the magazine were met from a central Departmental budget and cannot be readily identified separately.There is no separately identified budget for the future production costs of the magazine, which will continue to be met from within the NHS Executive's overall budget.

Organophosphates

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department has collected on synergetic or potentiating effects of exposure to organophosphates to an individual taking the H2 inhibitors Cimetidine and Ranatidine. [50417]

Ms Jowell: We are not aware of any data on possible interactions of organophosphates and human medicines containing H2 inhibitors.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has evaluated into the effects on pulmonary, immune, neurological and psychoneurological functions of infants and young children exposed to organophosphates used domestically; and if he will make a statement. [50530]

Ms Jowell: The Pesticides Safety Directorate, an agency of the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, is responsible for the registration and safety evaluation of pesticides for amateur garden use in Great Britain. The Department has not evaluated any research into the effects on pulmonary, immune, neurological and psychoneurological functions of infants and young children exposed to organophosphates used domestically in gardens.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the correlation between the incidence of asthma in children of sheep farmers and (a) sheep dipping and (b) spraying of crops with organophosphates. [50529]

Ms Jowell: The Department's policy research programme (PRP) and the central National Health Service research and development programmes are not currently supporting any research into the correlation between the incidence of asthma in children of sheep farmers and sheep dipping and spraying crops with organophosphates. The Medical Research Council, which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology, commissions most of the Government's research into bio-medical and clinical issues. The Council is always open to new sound scientific proposals in competition with other applications. The Department's PRP supports the formulation of health and social care policies and the NHS programmes support the needs of the health service. Records are not held centrally of all research carried out in the NHS.

Antidepressants

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to the NHS of antidepressants prescribed by community pharmacists in England in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; and what proportion of this was attributable to SSRIs. [50444]

Mr. Milburn: Pharmacists do not prescribe any medication. The information on prescriptions written by doctors is shown in the table.

3. The net ingredient cost refers to the cost of the drug before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs or fees. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantity of each type of antidepressant was prescribed by community pharmacists in England in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [50445]

Bristol Royal Infirmary

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the public aspects of the public inquiry into cardiac surgery at the Bristol Royal Infirmary will start; what factors will determine the start date; and if he will make a statement. [50479]

Mr. Milburn: It is our intention to begin the public inquiry as soon as is practicable. Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's oral announcement on 18 June 1998, Official Report, columns 529–39, Professor Ian Kennedy is currently considering all aspects of the inquiry which he will be leading, including the terms of reference and the selection of other panel members. We will be making a further announcement shortly.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Her Majesty's Government will meet the costs of group legal representation for families bereaved following malpractice at Bristol Royal Infirmary. [50478]

Mr. Milburn: Issues concerning the terms of reference of the Inquiry and participation in it are still be decided.

Benzodiazepines

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantity of each individual type of benzodiazepine was prescribed by community pharmacists in England in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [50446]

Hepatitis C

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to provide financial assistance for people with haemophilia infected with the hepatitis C virus. [50436]

Ms Jowell: We are considering the representations which have been made to us on this subject and will announce the outcome as soon as we are in a position to do so.

Cancer

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money his Department spent in each of the last three years on research into (a) breast (b) lung and (c) prostate cancer. [50206]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 14 July 1998]: We are committed to encouraging research into the causes, prevention, early detection and treatment of all cancers.

Departmental expenditure on research into (a) breast, (b) lung and (c) prostate cancer is:

£000

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Breast cancer
Department's policy research programme (PRP)	849	637	304
National Health Service research and development programme	123	316	528
Total	972	953	832
Lung cancer
Department's PRP	144	231	0
NHS research and development	27	197	187
Total	171	428	187
Prostate cancer
Department's PRP	20	21	17
NHS research and development	49	47	12
Total	69	68	29

In addition, the Medical Research Council (which is funded by grant-in-aid from the Department of Trade and Industry and is the main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research) invested in 1997–98: £3.3 million in breast cancer research, £691,000 in lung cancer research and £18,000 in prostate cancer research.Cancer charities and industry are also major investors, spending an estimated total of £122 million and £115 million per year respectively on cancer research.

NHS resources also support the NHS service costs of projects funded by non-commercial funders of research and development. This could include cancer research projects in the above areas.

Departmental resources going into cancer research complement these other funders, and the fluctuating spend stems from the cycle of commissioning as projects and programmes start and finish rather than any established policy to change funding levels.

NHS Trust Boards

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women he has appointed to National Health Service trust boards since 1 May 1997. [50731]

Mr. Milburn: Since 1 May 1997 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has appointed 469 women and 451 men as non-executive directors of National Health Service trusts, including chairmen.

Health Visitors

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of ending the separate registration of health visitors on public safety and quality of nursing care. [50829]

Mr. Milburn: This is an issue which was raised during the consultation stage of the current review of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979. United Kingdom Health Ministers expect to receive the review report shortly and will be considering its recommendations over the summer.

Nursing Students

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to implement the increase to non-means-tested nursing student bursaries announced at the recent Royal College of Nursing Congress. [51208]

Mr. Milburn: 1 September 1998.

General Practitioner Lists

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) in total and (b) aged over state retirement age, were removed from their general practitioner list in 1997. [51146]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the number of people removed from their general practitioner's list is collected annually and is published in the GMP Census Additional Data Collection, copies of which are available in the Library.

The latest published information relates to the year 1995–96.

No information is held centrally analysing these figures within age bands.

Medical Records

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to ensure that patients are not obstructed from access to their medical records by general practitioners. [51043]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: All general practitioners are bound by the provisions of the Access to Health Records Act 1990 and the Department has issued clear guidance on the operation of the Act. When instances of apparent flagrant violation of the Act are brought to our attention (for example excessive charging), we have written to the record-holder concerned reminding them of their responsibilities under the Act. Further, since 1 April 1996, patients have been able to pursue complaints about any aspect of how an application under the Act has been handled under the National Health Service Complaints Procedure. This provides an opportunity for the complaint to be heard by an independent review panel if local complaints officers are unable to resolve the matter satisfactorily.

Linear Accelerators

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Royal College of Radiologists' recent report, if he will assess the cost to public funds of (a) providing 48 new linear accelerators and (b) replacing 44 existing linear accelerators. [50949]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Linear accelerators cost around £1 million each depending on local circumstances such as the model selected and optional extras. The pair of reports from the Royal College of Radiologists will provide valuable information for local planning of services; the National Health Service Executive, health authorities and trusts will find them useful for formulating and assessing proposals for radiotherapy services.

Residential and Domiciliary Care

Mr. Burst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage increase in charges to service users for (a) domiciliary care services, (b) day care and (c) meals on wheels for the latest year for which figures are available for each local authority. [51508]

Ms Jowell: Information on charges made to individuals for social services provision is not collected centrally. However, the total amounts reported by local authorities as having been received from clients in the form of fees and charges, in 1996–97, for different services are collected centrally, and are available in the form of computer tables on the DH World Wide Web pages for all local authorities in England (Internet reference http:\\www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/pss—stat.htm).

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons his Department has not issued guidance under section 7 of the Local Government Act 1970 to local authorities on the provisions of section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983. [51503]

Ms Jowell: Section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 places a duty on health authorities and local social services authorities to provide after-care services to a specified group of patients. It is a responsibility imposed on both authorities. Guidance on section 117 is contained in the Code of Practice to the Mental Health Act 1983.

Spinal Cord Injuries

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the incidence of spinal cord injury; [49724]

(2) how many people with spinal cord injury were awaiting admission into a spinal injury Unit in each year from 1990 to 1997; [49725]

(3) what is the total number of beds in spinal injury units; [49726]

(4) how many people with spinal cord injuries waiting for a bed in a spinal injury unit were (a) dealt with in the community and (b) admitted to a district general hospital in each year between 1990 and 1997; [49727]

(5) what assessment he has made of the protocol for the treatment of spinal cord injuries drawn up by the Spinal Injuries Association. [49898]

Ms Jowell: Information on the incidence of spinal cord injury is not held centrally. However, estimates based upon the number of hospital admissions suggest that there are about 400 new cases of spinal cord injury in England each year. We know this figure is an overestimate, since spinal injury patients who are transferred to Spinal Injuries Units in other trusts will count as two admissions.

Data on waiting times for individual procedures are not collected centrally. Information on people waiting for a bed in a spinal injury unit and where they were treated is not available.

1995–96 was the last financial year in which bed data were collected separately for spinal unit wards. In 1996–97, beds in spinal units were added to beds in other units and classified as "Younger Physically Disabled". The information is given in the table. Information on beds is contained in the publication "Bed availability and occupancy for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Table: Average daily number of available beds in Younger Physically Disabled wards, open night and day (ie 24 hours) England, 1995–96 and 1996–97

	1995–96 Number	1995–96 Per cent.	1996–97 Number	1996–97 Per cent.
Younger Physically Disabled	1,364	100	[1]1,294	100

The Department is aware of the protocol drawn up by the Spinal Injuries Association. At present, the drawing up of guidelines for good practice in any area of medicine, including spinal injury, is a matter for the Medical Royal Colleges.

Dental Services

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the funding provision of NHS dentistry in Herefordshire. [51249]

Mr. Milburn: The amount spent on general dental services is dependent upon the activity of National Health Service dentists. Dentists providing general dental services receive payment from the NHS for the dental treatment and care they provide.

Residential Care

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide guidance to local authorities on the funding responsibility for residential accommodation for elderly people who have chosen to move from a residential home in one council's area to a residential home in another council's area. [51225]

Ms Jowell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Cotter) on 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 453.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Student Allowance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if local education authorities are required to follow national criteria when allocating disabled student allowance; and if he will make a statement. [51427]

Dr. Howells: Disabled Students Allowances can be paid by local education authorities to students who can prove that they have a disability or medical condition which affects their ability to study. These allowances are payable as part of a mandatory award. The Mandatory Awards Regulations therefore provide the legal framework under which LEAs administer the allowances.

They have written guidance from my Department available to them on how to assess a student's eligibility for these allowances within that framework.

Education Action Zones

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if businesses contributing in cash or in kind to education action zones will be prevented from entering into any form of preferred trading agreements with the schools in those zones, or with the Education Action Forum; and how such arrangements will be monitored. [51307]

Mr. Byers: Education Action Forums must secure best value in any contract they enter into. We will be issuing guidance to them on how to do this.

Each Forum will be under a legal duty to send its accounts to the Comptroller and Auditor General. The Comptroller and Auditor General will report on them to Parliament.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria he has set for the receipt of contributions in kind from businesses involved in the education action zones. [51303]

Mr. Byers: Each zone will raise £250,000 a year in cash or kind from the private sector.

Contact Sports (Gum Shields)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice his Department provides to schools on the use of gum shields in contact sports. [51389]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not issue advice to schools on the use of gum shields in contact sports.

The National Curriculum for physical education requires schools to ensure safe practice and to teach pupils why particular protection is worn for different activities.

School Meals (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the cost of the fixed-price school meals provided by Gloucestershire and South Gloucestershire education authorities for the most recent five years for which records are available. [51125]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not collect this information.

Industrial Accidents and Illnesses

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average estimated cost to public funds of an industrial accident or illness resulting in (a) death, (b) serious injury incapacitating the victim from further employment, (c) other serious injury and (d) minor injury; and if he will make a statement. [50627]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The costs to public funds of work-related accidents or work-related ill-health arise principally through social security payments and medical provision. However, the records maintained do not enable the costs to public funds of injury accidents or ill-health arising from work activities to be separately identified.

Students (St. Helena)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what financial help has been given in each of the last five years towards the education costs of young people from St. Helena studying in the United Kingdom. [50707]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1993 the overseas aid programme to St. Helena has provided the sum of £659,542 towards the education costs of St. Helenians studying in the United Kingdom which is broken down in each of the last five years as follows:

1993–94: £144,365

1994–95: £102,740

1995–96: £143,472

1996–97: £166,804

1997–98: £102,161.

Easternside Primary School, Middlesbrough

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria were used in determining the need for an OFSTED inspection of Easternside Primary School in Middlesbrough within three years of the previous inspection. [50874]

Mr. Byers: The timing of school inspections is a matter for Ofsted. Easternside Primary School, Middlesbrough, was inspected in July 1995 and I understand that HM Chief Inspector has arranged for the school to be inspected in October 1998. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend, to explain the reasons for that decision, and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Beacon Schools

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what procedures are in place to assess the effectiveness of the investment of extra resources in beacon schools. [50910]

Mr. Byers: Each beacon school will be required to produce an annual report accounting for the additional expenditure and assessing the impact of its activities on raising standards in other schools. Those schools receiving support and advice from beacon schools will also be asked to evaluate its impact.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what basis beacon schools were selected; and what involvement local education authorities had in the process. [50954]

Mr. Byers: The beacon schools were selected from those commended in Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools' latest Annual Report as the best performing during 1996–97. Local Education Authorities were not involved in the process.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of beacon schools on the planning of school admission limits and the management of empty places in schools. [50911]

Mr. Byers: Beacon schools will have no impact on the planning of school admissions limits or the management of empty places in schools.

Education Spending

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 490, what was the education standard spending assessment for (1) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94, (c) 1994–95, (d) 1995–96, (e) 1996–97, (f) 1997–98 and (g) 1998–99 for Hereford and Worcester local education authorities in (i) cash terms and (ii) 1998–99 prices for the categories (1) primary education, (2) secondary education, (3) post 16 education, (4) under-5 education and (5) other education. [50431]

Mr. Byers: The following tables set out the five education SSA sub-blocks for Hereford and Worcester local education authority for each year since 1992–93 in cash terms and in 1998–99 prices. It is not possible to calculate underlying year-on-year changes, adjusted for all local authority changes of function, at the level of individual SSA sub-blocks.

3. The figures for 1998–99 represent the aggregate totals for Herefordshire and Worcestershire

Schools (Worcestershire)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money local education authority schools in Worcestershire held in reserves (a) as a total amount (cash), (b) in real terms at 1998 prices and (c) as a percentage of the total available to be spent on schools in each year since 1991–92. [50920]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Key Stage 2 and 3

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement about the problems which delayed the provision of Key Stage 2 results to certain schools this year; [50385]

(2) what measures are being undertaken by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to ensure that the problems in making available this year's Key Stage 2 results do not occur again. [50386]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) are responsible for the collection and notification of Key Stage 2 results to schools. The problems affecting this year's exercise also apply to Key Stage 3 test results.

The Department was informed by QCA that there were significant problems, primarily relating to delays in the completion of the necessary work. On being informed we immediately told QCA to take action as a matter of urgency to both minimise disruption to schools and to ensure the accuracy and quality of results.

On 14 July QCA wrote to all schools explaining that it would not be possible to notify all results before the end of the summer term but that all schools would receive a complete set of accurate results by the end of August at the latest.

Ministers regard this whole episode as being an unacceptable state of affairs and an inquiry will be conducted to find the cause of the difficulties and to make sure this does not happen again.

The Chief Executive of QCA has written to all schools to apologise.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many schools will not receive their Key Stage 2 test results before the end of the summer term; [49508]

(2) how many schools have not received their (a) Key Stage 2 test results and (b) Key Stage 3 test results; [49509]

(3) what is the nature of the technical problems which have prevented the contractor employed to process and notify Key Stage 2 and 3 test results from completing the work on time; [49511]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 2 July 1998, Official Report, column 268, concerning Key Stage 2 and 3 test results, if he will identify the contractor and place a copy of the contract in the Library. [49513]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 8 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) today.

The contract is commercial-in-confidence and not available for general inspection.

Charity Collectors

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 557, concerning charity collectors, what studies he has undertaken of the effectiveness of the precautions against jobcentres assisting recruitment of collectors for bogus charities; and if he will make a statement. [50398]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 20 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning studies he has undertaken into the effectiveness of the precautions against Jobcentres assisting in the recruitment of collectors for bogus charities. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Since you last raised this issue, in November of last year, we have taken action to strengthen our guidance to Jobcentres in consultation with the Charity Commission.

As I explained in my reply to you in November 1997, our guidance already told Jobcentres not to accept vacancies from or on behalf of any charity unless it was registered with the Charity Commission or, in Scotland, the Financial Intermediary Claims Office (FICO). Where any doubt arises about the registration, or the actions of a charity, the local Jobcentre is now instructed to forward details to a team in the Employment Service Head Office in Sheffield for investigation. This team will check the organisation's registration with the Charity Commission or the Financial Intermediary Claims Office, as appropriate, and advise the Jobcentre whether or not to accept the vacancy. Where necessary we will ask the Charity Commission or the FICO to investigate the organisation. This will confirm whether the organisation is registered and whether the Commission or FICO, through their Investigations Division, are aware of any other information about them which would lead us to doubt whether their vacancies were suitable for display in Jobcentres. If the organisation is not registered, or the Commission expresses any doubt about them, the team will instruct Jobcentres not to display any vacancies from them.

These strengthened processes mean that a single team at our Head Office is now able quickly to tell Jobcentre staff about the steps they should take to safeguard jobseekers, and seek the advice of the Charity Commission or FICO about organisations whose activities are causing concern to staff or jobseekers. It also allows us to inform all our Jobcentres quickly of any organisations about which the Charity Commission or FICO have concerns and thus stop them accepting any vacancies from them.

You ask what studies we have undertaken on our precautions. We have not undertaken any specific research, although our Head Office team will themselves monitor carefully any feedback from our Jobcentres and from our clients about charities which appear to have doubts attaching to them. If you have any examples or problems of which you would like us to be aware we would of course, be very happy to investigate them.

I hope this is helpful.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

15. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army centres have been identified for (a) closure and (b) sale as part of his Department's efficiency savings. [49591]

Dr. Reid: Prior to the announcement of the Strategic Defence Review, and following its normal annual assessment of the usage of its assets my Department had identified 18 Territorial Army centres for closure and subsequent sale. In addition, and as an element of the Strategic Defence Review, we have already announced that the Duke of York's Headquarters in Chelsea will be sold and its Territorial Army occupants re-accommodated as necessary. Further closures will arise from the forthcoming restructuring of the Territorial Army, but we do not expect to be in a position to announce these until the autumn.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the likely effects of the measures announced in the Strategic Defence Review on the effectiveness of the Territorial Army. [49576]

Dr. Reid: The aim of the Strategic Defence Review has been to ensure that our forces are more capable of performing their primary defence tasks. The conclusions we have reached are designed to increase the utility and efficacy of our Armed Forces, of which our Reserve Forces are an important and fully integrated part. The improvements made by the Review will, therefore, enhance the effectiveness of the Territorial Army in the new strategic setting.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Strategic Defence Review, if he will make a statement on the future of the Territorial Army in Chorley. [51030]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Following the announcement of the results of the Strategic Defence Review, work has now commenced to establish the future organisation and structure of the Territorial Army. It is too early to say how this work will affect TA units in any particular area, but we expect to be in a position to make detailed announcements by the Autumn.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate how many fewer men and women on current retention rates will have served in the Territorial Army by the end of the year 2015 under the Government's plans for the future establishment of the TA compared to the current establishment. [49578]

Dr. Reid: We estimate that, based on current retention rates, some 68,000 fewer individuals will have served in the Territorial Army by the end of 2015 under our plans for the future establishment of the TA compared to the current establishment. This will represent a decline of no more than around 6 per cent. in the number of people who will have had some experience in the forces—excluding those gaining experience with the Combined Cadet Corps in schools.

Army (Recruitment)

16. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Army's most recent recruitment figures. [49592]

Dr. Reid: Recruitment is one of our highest priorities and we are therefore actively pursuing a number of recruiting initiatives. Reversing the problems we have inherited will take some time, but we are making promising headway. I am pleased to be able to report that as at 1 June we have 1,500 more people on the total strength than there were at 1 May last year.

Royal Navy (Anti-submarine Warfare)

17. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the anti-submarine warfare capability of the Royal Navy. [49593]

Dr. Reid: The Royal Navy continues to have a world-class anti-submarine warfare capability. However, the nature and scale of the submarine threat has changed since the end of the Cold War, towards a wide range of operations in coastal areas. We have decided therefore as part of the Strategic Defence Review to focus more on this threat and reduce the emphasis on open ocean operations.

United Nations Operations

18. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to enhance the UN's ability to mount peacekeeping and humanitarian operations. [49594]

29. Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to enhance the UN's ability to mount peacekeeping and humanitarian operations. [49605]

Mr. George Robertson: The Strategic Defence Review has reaffirmed that the UK will continue to make an important military contribution to the United Nations. We are planning a significant UK initiative to underline the Government's commitment to support UN operations by declaring a much larger proportion of our front line capabilities as potentially available to the UN, including all of our rapidly deployable forces; and by incorporating this declaration in a new Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with the UN.

Defence Medical Services

19. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact of the strategic defence review on the tri-service medical services. [49595]

20. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for the Defence Medical Services. [49596]

Mr. George Robertson: The Strategic Defence Review included measures to address current personnel and equipment shortfalls across all three Services as a matter of priority and to provide an acceptable level of medical support for deployed operations. These measures include recruiting approximately 250 hospital specialists, nurses, technicians and other personnel to bring the Defence Secondary Care Agency up to its manpower establishment.

As part of this major new initiative, we intend to enhance our arms control programme, including restoration of our 'Open Skies' air inspection capability; expand our Outreach and wider military assistance programmes, including greater use of attachments and short term training teams; revitalise our pool of defence attaches; and introduce new education and training initiatives, including a new defence diplomacy scholarship scheme. These measures will greatly enhance the British contribution to conflict prevention.

Diplomacy and Conflict Prevention

21. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to promote defence diplomacy and conflict prevention. [49597]

22. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to promote defence diplomacy and conflict prevention. [49598]

31. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to promote defence diplomacy and conflict prevention. [49607]

Mr. George Robertson: A key decision of the Strategic Defence Review was that defence diplomacy should become one of the eight core Missions of our Armed Forces. As part of this major new initiative, we intend to enhance our arms control programme, including restoration of our 'Open Skies' air inspection capability; expand our Outreach and wider military assistance programmes, including greater use of attachments and short term training terms; revitalise our pool of defence attaches; and introduce new education and training initiatives, including a new defence diplomacy scholarship scheme. These measures will greatly enhance the British contribution to conflict prevention.

Armed Forces (Training)

24. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women in the armed forces are at present undertaking training which will lead to a formal qualification. [49600]

Dr. Reid: Formal qualifications are taken to mean civilian qualifications. The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, considerable numbers of Service personnel are studying for a variety of civilian qualifications at any given time.

Additionally, a large and growing proportion of Service training is now accredited by civilian award bodies.

As part of the Strategic Defence Review and our 'Policy for People', our new 'Learning Forces' initiative will make further improvements to education and training provision in the Armed Forces, helping Service personnel to gain recognised qualifications.

Joint Service Co-operation

25. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government are taking to increase joint service co-operation in Britain's armed forces. [49601]

Mr. George Robertson: Increasing Joint Service co-operation and integration is a major theme of the Strategic Defence Review. We had already announced the creation of a Joint Services' Command and Staff College at Watchfield. As a result of the Review we will create a pool of Joint Rapid Reaction Forces to include all of our readily available capabilities, bring the Royal Navy and RAF Harriers together in a 'Joint Force 2000' and enhance the role of the Chief of Joint Operations. We will set up a Joint Helicopter Command and new joint arrangements for ground-based air defence and nuclear, chemical and biological defence. We will create a new tri-Service four-star Chief of Defence Logistics and significantly expand joint integration in the support area. Finally, we will set up a Joint Defence Centre to develop tri-Service doctrine and planning.

Colchester Garrison

26. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated value of the private finance initiative for the re-development of Colchester Garrison; when he expects to announce the name of the chosen contractor; and when he expects work to start. [49602]

Mr. Spellar: I have made no estimate of the value to prospective contractors of the private finance initiative for the re-development of Colchester Garrison. Tenders for the PFI project at Colchester were received on 8 July and will now be subject to a full technical and commercial evaluation. The information contained within the tenders is commercial in confidence and is being withheld under section 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. If it is decided that the PFI route represents a viable way forward, a preferred bidder should be announced early next year. I would expect any contract to be awarded in mid-1999 with work starting on a phased basis during the year 2000.

Armed Forces (Commitments)

27. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what change there has been in the level of total commitments falling on the armed forces since 1 May 1997. [49603]

Mr. George Robertson: On 1 May 1997, 24,359 personnel were involved in major operational commitments in Northern Ireland, the Balkans, the Gulf region and Zaire and in UN deployments in Cyprus, Kuwait and Georgia.

On 1 June 1998, 24,183 personnel were involved in operational commitments. The operation in Zaire had been completed by this date .

Armed Forces (Readiness)

28. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current level of readiness of the armed forces. [49604]

Dr. Reid: The readiness of the Armed Forces is sufficient to enable them to meet the demanding range of operational tasks they currently undertake. However, some shortfalls have been identified and are being addressed in the Strategic Defence Review.

Airborne Forces

30. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the role of airborne forces. [49606]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state for Defence made on 8 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1073–76, on the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review.

Duke of York's Headquarters

32. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Duke of York's headquarters in Chelsea. [49608]

Dr. Reid: We have announced, following the Strategic Defence Review, that the Duke of York's Headquarters will be sold. Further work is needed on the disposal arrangements. Units currently occupying the site will be re-accommodated as necessary.

Suspected War Criminals (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards the detention of suspected war criminals in the former Yugoslavia. [49585]

Mr. George Robertson: Nine people indicted for war crimes have been detained in Bosnia by SFOR. Seven of these detentions took place in the British-commanded sector, and involved British SFOR forces, either directly or in support. A further fifteen indictees have surrendered voluntarily to the International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague.

Armed Forces (Personnel)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the impact of the strategic defence review on the personnel strengths of the armed forces. [49599]

Mr. George Robertson: As a result of the Strategic Defence Review, we will increase the size of the Army establishment by 3,300 personnel. Once full manning has been achieved, the net effect of the Review on the Royal Navy's Regular manpower will be a reduction of some 1,400, and the net effect on Regular RAF manpower will be broadly neutral. We intend to achieve full manning in the Royal Air Force by 2000, in the Royal Navy by 2002 and in the Army around 2004.

The Territorial Army will be reduced from around 56,000 to around 40,000 but we will make it more relevant and usable. The Royal Naval Reserve will increase by 350 personnel. No change is planned to the strength of the Royal Marines Reserve. The Reserve Air Forces will increase by 270 posts.

RAF Scampton

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Scampton following the Strategic Defence Review. [50453]

Dr. Reid: Detailed options for the future use of RAF Scampton are currently being considered taking account of the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review. An announcement on the future of the site will be made as soon as the work is concluded.

Royal Military Police (Army)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of Royal Military Police (Army); how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [51129]

Mr. Spellar: The Royal Military Police (Army) have one newsletter the RMP Journal. The Journal, which has no security classification is published three times a year and is received by serving and associated members of the RMP. It was first published in March 1950.

Research and Development (Universities)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research and development contracts and agreements are currently being funded by his Department in universities; how many of these research projects are classified; and from which of his Department's research establishments these research projects have originated. [51131]

Mr. Spellar: A complete list of all research and development contracts and agreements funded by MOD is not kept. However, in 1997 there were over 450 contracts and agreements, involving about 60 UK academic institutions, for extramural research, funded through the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. Fewer than 25 of the 450 projects are classified.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 569, if he will list the names of the 11 directorates which currently exist at AWE, Aldermaston. [51134]

Mr. Spellar: The 11 Directorates currently existing at AWE Aldermaston are:

Assurance Commercial Communications
Finance
Performance Management
Personal
Physics Research
Programmes
Sites Development
Systems Engineering Technology.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volume of sludge containing (a) plutonium and (b) uranium is presently held at AWE Aldermaston; how this is presently stored; what plans he has to (a) reduce the volume held and (b) improve storage safety of the material; and if he will make a statement. [51156]

Mr. Spellar: There are at present some 761 cubic metres of sludge stored at AWE Aldermaston. This material contains both plutonium and uranium. It is safely stored in tanks above ground within bunded areas. These tanks are regularly inspected and maintained.

A feasibility study is underway, with the aim of reducing the volume of this material.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funds have been earmarked in years (a) eight, (b) nine and (c) 10 of his Department's long-term costings for the replacement carriers. [50960]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Long Term Costings represent projections and assumptions which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of constituent elements of the Defence Programme. It has been the position of successive Governments that advice to Ministers, and hence LTC information, should not be published. I am therefore withholding this information under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Procurement

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the basis for his Department's assumption that Smart procurement will achieve savings of two per cent. or £2 billion. [50958]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The estimate of Smart procurement cost savings over the next 10 years, amounting to £2 billion, has been compiled in consultation with industry and is based on the progressive application, to a range of existing and planned equipment procurements, of the acquisition reforms announced as part of the Strategic Defence Review. The greatest impact of the reforms will be achieved on procurements which are currently in their early formative stages and therefore most open to change.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to implement the Treasury's proposal for least cost procurement. [50955]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The term "least cost procurement" is not recognised; the Ministry of Defence pursues a policy of value for money procurement. The Strategic Defence Review included a radical reappraisal of the ways in which we carry out defence procurement. The resulting package of measures, grouped under the banner of "Smart Procurement", aims to make defence procurement faster, cheaper, and better.

Stockholdings

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the means by which industry will meet the stockholding requirements of his Department for weapons, equipment and clothing following the disposal of current stocks. [50964]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 July 1998]: As part of the Strategic Defence Review the Department is assessing the stockholding requirements needed to be retained in house and what may more effectively be provided from industry within agreed readiness times. Each equipment area will be examined in detail and a decision taken on stockholding policy requirement. Following this detailed work the Department will invite expressions of interest from industry.

RAF Chilmark

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom, on what terms and in what numbers are buildings available at the former RAF Chilmark for use as a fireworks factory. [51053]

Mr. Spellar: No buildings at the former RAF Chilmark are let or available for use as a fireworks factory. Four buildings have been let on the Ladydown Site on short term leases for fireworks storage and agreement has been reached in principle to let one further building.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the figures for total defence spending for the years 1996–97 and 1997–98 on an outturn basis and 1998–99 to 2001–02 on an estimated or planned basis (a) in cash and (b) at 1996–97 prices using the actual and estimated GDP deflator to make the adjustments. [50843]

Mr. George Robertson: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

Year	Cash	1996–97 prices
1996–97	22,345	22,345
1997–98	21,554	20,987
1998–99	22,240	21,045
1999–2000	22,295	20,562
2000–01	22,830	20,542
2001–02	22,987	20,179

The figure for 1996–97 outturn is that shown in Table 1 (Cash Plans) of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1998–99 Ministry of Defence" (Cm 3902) which excludes the element of receipts arising from the sale of the married quarters estate that were appropriated onto Defence Votes in that year. The figure for 1997–98 represents the provisional outturn as set out in the Public Expenditure 1997–98 Provisional Outturn White Paper (Cm 3988) adjusted to exclude a further receipt from the sale of the married quarters estate.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish detailed Defence Estimates for (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [50842]

Mr. George Robertson: The details of the Government's planned expenditure on defence for the years 1999–2000 to 2001–2002 will be presented to Parliament in the Supply Estimates, in the usual manner, by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury at the start of each financial year; eg, April 1999 for 1999–2000.

Torpedo Testing Facilities

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1998, Official Report, columns 261–62, if he will make a statement on the implications of the Strategic Defence Review for operations at the British Underwater Test Evaluation Centre. [51429]

Mr. Spellar: It is too early to assess what implications the Strategic Defence Review may have for the overall operation of the British Underwater Test and Evaluation Centre. However, with regard to the testing of torpedoes, the answer given to the hon. Member on 25 February 1998, Official Report, columns 261–62, still applies.

Surplus Property and Land

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites included in his Department's Forward Disposal Programme referred to in part 16 of Supporting Essay II to the Strategic Defence Review; and if he will provide for each such site an estimate of market value. [50950]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 330.

Bosnia

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the costs of United Kingdom participation in the Bosnia peacekeeping operation for 1998–99 will be charged to the Reserve. [50841]

Mr. George Robertson: As in previous years, it remains open for my Department to make a claim on the Reserve, should it not prove possible for the cost of UK participation in Bosnia peacekeeping operations in 1998–99 to be accommodated within the Defence budget without detriment to the underlying defence programme and the delivery of defence outputs.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 151 of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's Review of the MOD's Radioactive Waste Management and Practice, what action he plans to take in respect of the storage facilities identified as not constructed for long-term use. [51157]

Mr. Spellar: There were two stores at AWE Aldermaston which were identified as not constructed for long-term storage of Intermediate Level Waste (ILW) by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee. The waste from these two stores will be checked, overpacked and transported to one of the existing purpose built stores by the end of 1999. It remains the intention to construct the new ILW store referred to by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee in paragraph 151 of their report on the Ministry of Defence radioactive waste management to deal with future waste arisings.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantity of radioactive liquid has escaped from nuclear submarines held at (i) Rosyth, (ii) Devonport and (iii) Faslane in each year since 1980. [51155]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

C-17 Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the competition for leasing of C-17s indicating the criteria set by his Department. [51502]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 27 April 1998, Official Report, column 23, and to the Strategic Defence Review White Paper, Chapter 5, paragraphs 96 and 147. Requests for Proposals are currently being finalised to meet both the short term strategic airlift requirement announced in the Review and the long term air transport requirement, in parallel competitions. The lease of aircraft is one of the contract options that could meet the short term requirement. C-17 is not the only contender in either competition.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the capacity of the European Fighter Aircraft to be used on the new aircraft carriers announced in the Strategic Defence Review. [51438]

Mr. Spellar: A 'navalised' Eurofighter is one of the possible solutions currently under consideration to meet the Future Carrier Borne Aircraft requirement.

Ordnance Manufacturing

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the ordnance manufacturing capability of the UK for the supply of UK armed forces requirement. [51500]

Mr. Spellar: UK industry has extensive capability for the development and production of the guns and ammunition required by the Armed Forces. Most requirements are now subject to international competition. However, the principal recent orders for guns, including the AS90 howitzer, the gun for the Challenger 2 tank and the SA 80 small arm, have been awarded to UK industry. UK industry also continues to supply the great majority of the Armed Forces' ammunition needs.

Joint Services Command and Staff College

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent on providing temporary accommodation for the Joint Services Command and Staff College at Bradwell. [51297]

Mr. George Robertson: The decision to accommodate the Joint Services Command and Staff College temporarily at Bracknell (not Bradwell) was taken by the previous Government. The accommodation at Bracknell consists of existing buildings previously used by the former RAF Staff College, supplemented by temporary accommodation units. The total spend on providing the temporary accommodation is now estimated to be some £8.9 million, which compares favourably with the original estimate of £10.2 million. This figure includes the provision and maintenance of the temporary units until 2000, the provision of IT and relocation costs.

Bilderberg Meeting, Turnbern

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his attendance at the Bilderberg Conference in Ayrshire on 14 and 15 May. [49581]

Mr. George Robertson: I attended part of the Bilderberg Conference in Ayrshire last May to contribute to one of the discussions relevant to my Ministerial responsibilities.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 21 July 1998

HOME DEPARTMENT

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the UK Passport Agency performed against its targets in 1997–98; and what performance targets he has set for the Agency in 1998–99. [52006]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency performed very well in 1997–98. With demand 28 per cent. above forecast, it did not meet its target for processing properly completed straightforward applications within a maximum of ten working days. But customers' travel needs were met on most occasions, and customer satisfaction remained very high.

The UK Passport Agency's financial target was to secure efficiency savings of 11.1 per cent. in the three year period 1995–96 to 1997–98 equivalent to £11.32 per passport service provided. The latest indications are that the Agency has achieved a unit cost of £9.90, which represents an efficiency saving of 10.3 per cent. for the year, and nearly 25 per cent. for the three year period.

1998–99 will be a transitional and difficult year for the Agency, as it manages the introduction of new passport issuing arrangements and a more secure British passport from October 1998. Nevertheless, I expect the Agency to maintain a high standard of service throughout the year.

I have set the Agency the following targets which take account of the special circumstances that apply in 1998–99, and the cost of the new arrangements:

To process properly completed straightforward applications within a maximum of 15 working days in April, and 10 working days for the remainder of the year.

In seeking to meet this target, the Agency will give priority to customers' travel needs, aiming to meet declared travel dates for at least 99.99 per cent. of passports issued.

To achieve an accrued unit cost of £12 per passport service provided.

The Chief Executive will remain directly accountable to me for the performance of the UK Passport Agency. An Advisory Board, including two private sector members with experience of delivering services to the public, will continue to provide me with an independent assessment of the Agency's performance.

Fire Service

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps are currently being taken by the Fire Service to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of virtual reality computer simulation in operational command training; [50761]

(2) what steps his Department will take on the forthcoming report of the Chief Fire Officer and others on the nationwide trial of virtual reality computer simulation training. [50758]

Mr. George Howarth: The contribution that multi-media systems can make to the training and assessment of fire officers in the knowledge and skills they require to be competent in their professional role, particularly in the area of operational command, is recognised.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Fire Services is already pursuing work with the fire service to develop the concept and principles of operational command appropriate for fire service officers. This includes an on-going examination of computer simulation systems which could support necessary training, and of reports of trials that are undertaken.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers in the United Kingdom are currently held in detention; [50832]

(2) how many asylum seekers currently detained in the United Kingdom have been detained for (a) between one month and three months, (b) between three months and six months, (c) between six months and one year and (d) over one year. [50825]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 30 June 1998, a total of 775 persons who had sought asylum at some stage were detained solely under Immigration Act powers. A breakdown showing the duration of time those persons had been continuously detained is given in the table.

Number of people recorded as being detained[1,2] on 30 June 1998, who had sought asylum at some stage, by length of detention[3] and immigration status

Length	Port	Illegal entrants	Subject to deportation action	Total
0–1 month[2]	71	183	3	257
1–3 months	85	149	6	240
3–6 months	54	92	7	153
6–12 months	49	42	13	104
Over 12 months	3	12	6	21
Total	262	478	35	775

[1] Persons detained solely under the powers contained in Schedule 2 or 3 of the Immigration Act 1971.

[2] These figures are approximate because of the delay in recording receptions into, and releases from, detention and the large number of persons detained for a short period.

[3] Length of detention relates only to the current continuous period of detention.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 28 April 1998, Official Report, column 96 and 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 452, when he expects the casework programme system to be used to deal with asylum casework. [50974]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Officials are in discussion with Siemens Business Services about the date on which the new Information Technology system will be introduced. With effect from 17 August, some cases will be dealt with under new integrated caseworking procedures by a pilot group using currently available Information Technology support.

Motoring Offences

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motorists were (a) prosecuted for and (b) convicted for offences relating to the illegal use of bus lanes in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the figures for 1990. [51087]

Mr. Michael: Prosecutions and convictions for this offence cannot be distinguished from other offences connected with neglect of traffic directions in the statistics collected centrally.

The Government are supporting the Traffic Director for London in developing a system whereby bus lane offences can be detected by camera.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers have been (a) stopped for and (b) convicted of offences arising from excessive exhaust emissions in (i) the Metropolitan Police area and (ii) England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [51079]

Mr. Michael: Information obtained from the Vehicle Inspectorate (an executive agency of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions) shows that 111,865 vehicles were stopped for a specific excess exhaust emission check by the Inspectorate in England and Wales in the year 1996–97. 6,450 of these were in the Greater London area.

There were 94 proceedings for this offence in England and Wales in 1996, of which 65 resulted in convictions. 17 of these proceedings and 11 of the convictions were in the Metropolitan Police area.

Most offences of this nature encountered by the Vehicle Inspectorate are dealt with by the issue of a prohibition notice and 5,733 such notices were issued in England and Wales in 1996–97, 420 of them in the Greater London area.

Under the Environment Act 1995, local authorities now have the power to conduct checks for excess exhaust emissions, and in trials taking place in seven local authority areas, figures provided by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions show that nearly 8,000 vehicles have been tested so far in 1998, resulting in 450 fixed penalty notices being issued.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the experimental schemes involving video cameras placed in buses to film those illegally using bus lanes; in which areas they are located; and if he will make a statement. [51086]

Mr. Michael: Following a pilot project in 1995, an on-board camera system for enforcing bus lane offences was "type approved" in December 1997, after being fully tested against a published specification as required by the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988. It provides visual evidence of an offence with the exact time and location.

The initial Area Scheme is managed by the Traffic Director for London, in partnership with the Metropolitan Police, in an area broadly bounded by the A1, A10, A406 and A501, with 61 bus lanes within the boroughs of Islington, Camden, Hackney, Haringey, Enfield and the City of Westminster. Boundary and repeater signs inform drivers. The Area Scheme has proved successful and the Traffic Director for London is currently working up a programme for London-wide implementation.

CS Gas

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times CS gas has been used by police forces; in how many cases medical attention was required; and how many incidents led to police disciplinary measures. [51083]

Mr. Michael: As the use of CS spray is an operational matter for chief officers, information is not kept centrally about how many times it has been used.

During police trials of CS spray between 1 March and 31 August 1996, in which 3,818 officers carried CS canisters in 16 forces, CS was discharged 726 times. Everyone sprayed with CS, and most of the officers affected by cross-contamination, were seen by a police surgeon, resulting in 585 medical reports being submitted to the trial evaluators. These showed that further treatment was advised for a total of 14 civilians and three officers. The advice ranged from "to attend eye hospital (since previously partially sighted in left eye)" to "should wash face and eye area later". One person was taken directly to hospital and five more treated by a hospital in due course. The data from the trials showed that the risk of injury from CS was less than that from baton use.

Police Complaints Authority figures show that, in the twelve months up to 31 March 1998, one case involving police use of CS resulted in a disciplinary charge, and a further ten in other disciplinary action.

Treaty of Canterbury

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the provisions in the Treaty of Canterbury that prevent the application of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987. [51153]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no provisions in the Treaty of Canterbury which prevent the application of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987.

Tote

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many expressions of interest he has received from prospective buyers of the Tote. [51018]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office has received three expressions of interest. However, no decision has yet been taken to sell the Tote. We have launched a review which will consider a range of options for the Tote's future.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ambulance Service

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps her Department has taken to improve the ambulance fleet in Northern Ireland; and when the decisions on these steps were taken. [50327]

Mr. Worthington: Due to historical under-investment, the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service inherited an aging fleet on its creation as an HSS Trust in 1995. In recognition of the particular problems faced by the ambulance service; the Trust was given approval on 3 September 1997 to draw on £200,000 of its 1998–99 capital allocation to address pressures on the ambulance fleet. Capital provision of £1.5 million was announced on 9 February 1998 for the urgent replacement of accident and emergency vehicles. This was in addition to the general capital provision of £500,000 approved for the 1998–99 year. As a result of this additional funding, significant improvements in the standard of ambulance services and patient care throughout the Province will be achieved. The position will be further enhanced by the PFI exercise being undertaken by the Trust to support the replacement of the remaining out of standard ambulances. This will mean the Trust moving from one of the oldest to one of the most modern emergency fleets in the UK.

In recognition of the changing profile of ambulance services throughout Northern Ireland, a wide ranging review of the service will shortly be undertaken.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for future cancer treatment at the Belfast City Hospital. [50134]

Mr. Worthington: The Belfast City Hospital, working closely with the Royal Group of Hospitals, is to be developed as the regional cancer centre for Northern Ireland; the centre will also act as a cancer unit for the local population. A Cancer Services Steering Group has been established at the Belfast City Hospital to oversee the development of cancer services, including the smooth transfer of radiotherapy and chemotherapy services from Belvoir Park Hospital to a new building on the Belfast City Hospital site. It is expected that the centre will be operational by the year 2003.

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the provision of lung and oesophageal cancer services at the Royal Victoria Hospital. [50132]

Mr. Worthington: The Royal Victoria Hospital currently provides a regional thoracic surgery service for patients with lung and oesophageal cancers. The Cancer Working Group Sub Group on Lung Cancer recommended that purchasers should make arrangements for the appointment of a third thoracic surgery consultant at the Royal Victoria Hospital and assess the need for the future appointment of a fourth consultant. The Royal Group of Hospitals and Dental Hospitals HSS Trust is currently advertising for a third thoracic surgeon. The need for a fourth thoracic surgeon will be kept under review in light of anticipated increases in the lung and oesophageal cancer workload.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what target her Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49886]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the e-mail address of her Department's Ministerial Correspondence Unit. [49888]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments do not have a central Ministerial Correspondence Unit. Each Minister's Private Office handles its own correspondence. Ministers may be accessed at press.nio@nics.gov.uk.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost in a full financial year of Irish translation facilities in the new Northern Ireland Assembly. [50193]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 14 July 1998]: The question of Irish translation facilities is a matter initially for the Assembly to determine. Should it decide that such facilities are required, the cost will depend on a number of factors related to the extent and type of service or services required. It is therefore not possible to provide any meaningful estimate at this stage.

Housing (Relocation Requests)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been received by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the current year for relocation due to intimidation; and what were the figures for each of the previous five years. [51078]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose Chief Executive has advised me that the position is as follows:

Year/date	Number
1993–94	324
1994–95	307
1995–96	256
1996–97	394
1997–98	374
1 April 1998 to 30 June 1998	54
6 July 1998 to 15 July 1998[1]	117

[1] Post Drumcree

Prisoners

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently held in gaol in Northern Ireland; how many are remand prisoners; and how many of each are held for scheduled offences. [51080]

Marjorie Mowlam: On 17 July 1998 there were 1,368 persons held in Northern Ireland prisons and 198 inmates in Young Offenders Centres. Of the total, 359 were on remand, 103 being held for scheduled offences.

Abortion

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proposals she has for the Northern Ireland Assembly to exercise powers, functions and rights of debate as regards policy on abortion in Northern Ireland; what powers, functions and rights of debate on policy will be reserved for the United Kingdom Parliament; and if she will make a statement; [51565]

(2) what proposals she has to devolve policy as regards the application of the Abortion Act 1967 to the Northern Ireland Assembly; [51566]

(3) what proposals she has to devolve policy on abortion from the United Kingdom Parliament to the Northern Ireland Assembly; and if she will make a statement. [51567]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In Northern Ireland the law on abortion is currently classified as part of the criminal law and is therefore a "reserved" matter. This means that it can be legislated upon either at Westminster or, with the approval of the Secretary of State and Parliament, by the new Northern Ireland Assembly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on the regional reorganisation of the Crown Prosecution Service. [50757]

The Attorney-General: Shortly after this Government were elected, I announced that the Crown Prosecution Service would be reorganised into 42 Areas, establishing a one-to-one relationship between CPS Areas and police areas (save in London where there will be a single CPS Area covering both the Metropolitan Police Service and the City of London Police).

On 1 June 1998, Official Report, columns 42–45, I published the report of the independent review of the Crown Prosecution Service, set up by this Government under the chairmanship of Sir Iain Glidewell. That report endorses the move to 42 CPS Areas.

Responses received so far to the Glidewell report have welcomed the move to 42 CPS Areas.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has today placed in the Library of the House a paper agreed between himself, the Lord Chancellor and myself. The paper outlines the Government's wider intention, as part of the process of modernising the administration of justice, to align the geographical boundaries of the various criminal justice agencies. The move to 42 CPS Areas is part of that re-alignment of boundaries. It will enable the Crown Prosecution Service and other criminal justice agencies to communicate and work together more effectively.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

"The Multi-Media Revolution"

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the Government response to the Fourth report of the Culture, Media and Sport Committee "The Multi-Media Revolution" (HC 520-I). [51924]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have today, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, published the Government response to the report "The Multi-Media Revolution" (Command Paper number 4020). We have also jointly published today a Green Paper "Regulating Communications: Approaching Convergence in the Information Age" (Command Paper number 4022).

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will consult the Board of the New Opportunities Fund on the policy directions which he proposes to issue to them; and if he will make a statement. [51922]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have written to the Fund's Chairman with drafts of Directions I propose to make under my powers in section 26(1) and 43C(1) of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993. I have placed copies of the letter and drafts in the Libraries of the House.

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 344, on Millennium tourism, how many of the new millennium attractions, which are to appear in The New Map of Britain, are outside London; and if he will list those in the North West. [51184]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 17 July 1998]: As I said in my reply of 6 July, the British Tourist Authority is now developing plans specifically to promote the Millennium celebrations. One of its proposals has the working title "the New Map of Britain", a shorthand description for a promotional document listing attractions open between 1999 and 2001. The list will include many projects including some funded by the Millennium Commission and other Lottery distributors. It will be at least 6 months before this list can be drawn up.

I can, however, assure my hon. Friend that the list will contain a good regional spread of attractions, and that the North West will be well represented.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many new jobs he estimates will be created in the tourism sector over the next five years. [51032]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Tourism employment grew by 16 per cent. in the ten years to December 1997 and 1.7 million people (approximately 7 per cent. of the total of employees) are working in the tourism industry in Britain. Against that background, the World Travel and Tourism Council's prediction of 300,000 new jobs in tourism in the UK in the next decade.

we are confident that the tourism strategy we shall publish later this year will help the industry maximise its undoubted potential for employment generation.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the future of the English Tourist Board. [51033]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 17 July 1998]: We will be announcing to Parliament on 24 July proposals for revising the structure and mechanisms through which Government support for all DCMS sectors is channelled. This will include domestic tourism in England.

CABINET OFFICE

Lobbyists

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what criteria he uses to determine which lobbying firms should receive (a) solicited and (b) unsolicited information from his Department. [50735]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 16 July 1998]: All contacts with outside interest groups are conducted in accordance with the principles set out in the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Code.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Open Government White Paper

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to section 9.21 of the White Paper on Open Government, on what basis he stated census returns contain an explicit assurance that records will not be released for 100 years. [50831]

Dr. David Clark: Confidentiality of the information in decennial census returns is governed by sanctions against unlawful disclosure in successive Census Acts and provisions in the Public Records Acts as to custody, closure to public inspection and access to the records. However, as well as observing the legal constraints on disclosure, regard is also paid to the assurances of confidentiality given at the time the information was collected from the public. For example, the 1991 census form stated that "The forms will be kept securely within my—the Registrar General's—Office and treated as confidential for 100 years".

I presume it is to these assurances of confidentiality that the previous Government were referring in the 1993 White Paper to which the hon. Member refers.

Departmental Accounts

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the accounts for the Duchy of Lancaster will be placed in the Libraries of the House. [51921]

Dr. David Clark: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that the accounts of the Duchy of Lancaster for the year ending 31 March 1998 were laid before the House today.

Performance Targets

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what performance targets he has approved for the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, the Central Office of Information and the Civil Service College for 1998–99. [51920]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have approved the following key performance targets for my executive agencies for 1998–99:

Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency

1. to break even on an accruals basis;
2. to deliver CCTA services within voted provisions;
3. to achieve 75 per cent. of customers surveyed confirming that CCTA has operated within the terms of its Charter;
4. to secure a 5 per cent. reduction in the cost of support services;
5. to secure customer satisfaction at levels 1 and 2 (out of 5) on 85 per cent. of assignments and services delivered.

Central Office of Information

2. to achieve efficiency improvements of a unit cost reduction of 2 per cent.
3. to achieve a customer satisfaction index of 8.25 (out of 10)

Freedom of Information

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Government intend to publish their response to the Third report of the Select Committee on Public Administration's report on the Government's proposals for a Freedom of Information Act (HC 398). [52033]

Dr. David Clark: I have today written to my hon. Friend enclosing a Memorandum which sets out the Government's response to this report. I am placing copies of my letter and of the Memorandum in the Libraries of the House. The Committee's inquiry into Freedom of Information has resulted in a constructive and well-thought through report. I am pleased to be able to respond both promptly and generally positively to the Committee, and look forward to working with the Committee when a draft Freedom of Information Bill is published, which we aim to do by the end of September.

[49234]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: (a) This answer covers the Prime Minister's Office, the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service (including its Agencies), but excludes vehicles from the Government Car and Despatch Agency, for which I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson to reply to the hon. Member direct.

(b) Nil.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 21 July 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, has asked me in my capacity as Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of vehicles owned and leased by this Agency, and the Agency's vehicle replacement programme.

This Agency operates two separate businesses. The Government Car Service provides long and short term chauffeur and car hire to Ministers and senior officials. The InterDespatch Service provides secure mail services within government and the wider public sector. Each service has its own fleet of vehicles and the figures below cover both of these. Not all the Agency's vehicles will be replaced during the three years in question.

The information you requested is set out in the following table.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commonhold

38. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received on the introduction of commonhold tenure of property; and if he will make a statement. [49911]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1 May 1997, I have received seven letters from Members of this House making representations about commonhold, and there have been three Parliamentary Questions, including the present one. Over the same period, it is estimated that my Department has received, on average, about one letter and three telephone inquiries on the subject of commonhold per week, although a number of these were repeat inquiries from the same people. Those making inquiries included individuals living in leasehold accommodation, residents associations, representatives of mortgage lenders, and others.

Legal Aid

39. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to extend support under the green form scheme to additional law centres. [49912]

Mr. Hoon: For the moment, there are no specific proposals to extend support under the green form scheme to additional law centres. However, in June 1997, the Lord Chancellor issued a direction under Section 4 of the Legal Aid Act 1988 giving the Legal Aid Board the power to extend its pilot for the provision of legal advice and assistance by not-for-profit advice agencies, under the green form scheme, to allow the funding of salaried lawyers at law centres. The green form scheme will be replaced with fixed price contracts by the end of 1999. It will be open to law centres, along with other suppliers of legal services, to seek contracts.

Disabled Access

40. Mr. Amess: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to make his Department more accessible to the general public. [49913]

Mr. Hoon: It is the Lord Chancellor's policy that all new court buildings and existing buildings undergoing significant alteration or extension should enable disabled people, staff and court users alike, to gain independent access into and within the building.

Magistrates courts are locally managed by magistrates courts committees under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the future and number of magistrates courts in their area are for the relevant MCC to determine in accordance with section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. While my Department has no role in the actual decision making process, we may have a limited role if a magistrates courts committee decides to make a bid for a new building via the Private Finance Initiative.

My Department has also directed that all magistrates courts committees should meet specified standards of performance relating to disabled court users. To assist courts committees in implementing the standards, a booklet containing guidance and useful contacts accompanied the direction. Copies of the guidance can be found in the House of Commons Library.

The Court Service Agency is responsible for all civil and the higher criminal courts. It keeps court accommodation under constant review.

To comply with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA), the Court Service is reviewing its practices, policies and procedures. A number of initiatives are under way: Customer Service Officers will have disability awareness training, covering the DDA and all staff will receive printed guidance; interpreters for deaf court users are provided and paid for in criminal, civil and family cases; the tribunals for which the Lord Chancellor has responsibility are considering a similar scheme; a leaflet is being prepared advising court users about available facilities for people with different needs, for example, information about the Court Service will be made available on audio cassette and is available in Braille, as are a series of leaflets about small claims in seven minority languages: Arabic, Hindi, Gujarati, Punjabi, Urdu, Chinese and Bengali.

Fines

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each court in Derbyshire, for the last year for which figures are available, how many (a) attachment of earnings orders were issued to collect (i) fines and (ii) reparation orders and (b) orders were made by each court to deduct fines and other money from social security payments. [51093]

Mr. Hoon: These figures are not collected centrally, and a full answer could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I have been informed by the Justices' Chief Executive for Derbyshire that currently in the Chesterfield PSD, 54 attachment of earnings orders and 50 orders for deduction from social security payments are in existence, and in the Buxton PSD there are 11 and 6 respectively. I have not been given a breakdown between fines and reparation orders. I have been further informed that it is difficult to extract the number of orders where full payment has been made and the file is now closed.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for each magistrates' court in Derbyshire for the last year for which figures are available (a) the total amount of fines imposed, (b) the percentage of that money collected, (c) the amount of fines written off as uncollectable and (d) the criteria used for writing that money off. [51094]

Mr. Hoon: Figures for (a) and (c) are shown in the table, together with explanations. The table also shows the amount collected in the same period. The percentage figure (b) has not been calculated because the amounts collected do not relate directly to the amounts imposed. Write off (d) is authorised only when all realistic steps to enforce sums due have been taken without success, and the circumstances fall within one of those listed in the note to the table.

April 1997-March 1998

	(a) Fines imposed	(b) Amount collected	(c) Written off
Chesterfield	2,114,436	1,882,373	155,780
Derby and South Derbyshire	2,109,029	1,738,910	425,398
East Derbyshire	1,201,207	548,292	678,794
Grand total for Derbyshire MCC	5,424,672	4,169,575	1,259,972

Notes:

(a) Fines imposed includes fines, costs, compensation awards and contributions to Legal Aid

Also included are fines etc. imposed at other courts which have been transferred to this court for enforcement. Fines etc. imposed locally but transferred out to other courts for enforcement have been excluded

(b) Amount collected includes payments against amounts imposed in previous years as well as the current year, and amounts remitted by the courts, but exclude amounts written off

(c) Amounts Written Off may have been imposed in previous years as well as the current year

(d) Criteria for write off

The defendant's/defaulter's whereabouts are unknown and cannot be traced

The defendant/defaulter is known to have emigrated or gone abroad and there is very little real prospect of return or recovery of the sum

The defendant/defaulter has died. However if a fine was involved and the fine itself was particularly high, the justices clerk may wish to consider whether the estate has benefited from the crime. Only if it is clear that it has, should consideration be given to lodging a claim against the estate and any subsequent request to write off should show this has been done and the outcome of the action

The defendant has been sent to a mental health institution for a period of 12 months or more

The court has despatched a notice to a defendant who was not present in court informing him in error of a lesser fine, contribution to costs order that the court imposed—in such cases the balance would be considered for write-off

The sum outstanding is less than £5 and is considered to be not worth pursuing

As a result of subsequent proceedings the defendant is sentenced to imprisonment for a period of 12 months or more

The sum was imposed or awarded against a limited company which has subsequently been wound up or, where there are no goods on which to levy distress, the company has ceased trading and it is not considered financially worthwhile for the court to initiate

A serviceman has been sentenced to a period of military corrective training

The defendant has moved permanently to Scotland

Other, where circumstances for write off are not covered by any of the above criteria, and grounds for write off are provided in a separate note

County Courts (Disabled Facilities)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of county courts in Derbyshire provide (a) wheelchair access, (b) disabled toilet facilities and (c) facilities for persons with seeing and hearing disabilities. [51089]

Mr. Hoon: There are three county courts in Derbyshire: Derby (at the Combined Court Centre), Chesterfield and Buxton.

At Derby there is a lift and wheelchair access by the front door of the court. A wheelchair is also available and there are toilets for the disabled. There are no special facilities for the hard of hearing and those with seeing disabilities.

At Chesterfield, there is a ramp into the court building, a lift and toilets for the disabled. There are no special facilities for the hard of hearing and those with seeing disabilities.

At Buxton, there is no wheelchair access. The court is situated above a shop and there is no lift. However, there is a door bell at street level by the entrance of the court so that users can summon assistance. There are no special facilities for the hard of hearing and those with seeing disabilities.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Education (Third-world Countries)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department takes to help provide education facilities within the United Kingdom for young people from third world countries. [50903]

Mr. Foulkes: One of my Department's key objectives is to improve quality of, and access to, education within developing countries.

My Department provides funding for about 3,500 scholars each year from developing countries to study at universities and other Higher Education Institutes, at a cost of £23 million in 1998–99.

In addition, DFID supports a small programme of school exchanges through Education Partners Overseas, at an annual cost of £50K. This involves developing country children coming to this country for a short period.

Within the UK, it is the responsibility of Local Education Authorities (LEAs) to ensure that there are sufficient suitable school places within their areas for all resident children, this includes those from other countries, and those with refugee status.

Child Labour

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the Governments with whom she has discussed the use of child labour in their countries during the last 12 months. [51243]

Mr. Foulkes: In the course of her participation in the Oslo Conference on child labour in November 1997 and the Forum for the Global March Against Child Labour in Geneva last month, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State addressed representatives of the governments of many of the developing countries where child labour is a serious problem. Our officials are discussing with a number of them ways in which we can work together to help eradicate child labour. Currently our work on these issues involves the following countries:

India
Pakistan
Bangladesh
Nepal
Thailand
Cambodia
Laos
Vietnam
China
Kenya
South Africa
Tanzania
Zambia.

PRIME MINISTER

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 8 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1071–72, what factors will be taken into account in deciding whether a freedom of information Bill will be included in the Queen's Speech. [50420]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Already this session, 32 Bills delivering our manifesto commitments have received Royal Assent. We will continue to put the Government's priorities forward in the next session.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to announce his response to proposals to create a new Ministry for Rural Development. [50572]

The Prime Minister: No decision has yet been reached.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50678]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Gibraltar

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to discuss the issue of Gibraltar during his forthcoming meeting with Spain's Socialist Party Leader. [51304]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 July 1998]: This was an introductory meeting with the new leader of the Socialist Party in Spain which was arranged on a party-to-party basis. Therefore, I did not discuss Gibraltar with Mr. Borrell.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister how many reports the Social Exclusion Unit has produced to date; and what areas they are currently examining. [51311]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 July 1998]: In the first phase of its work, the Social Exclusion Unit has produced two reports "Social Exclusion and Truancy" and "Rough Sleeping" and the Unit is now involved in following them up. Copies of the reports are available in the libraries of the House.

The Unit's third priority for its first phase was "developing integrated and sustainable approaches to the problems of the worst housing estates" and a report on this work will be published shortly.

The Unit was also asked to focus on "improving mechanisms for integrating the work of departments, local authorities and other agencies at national level and on the ground" and as part of the follow up work on school exclusion and truancy is looking at the overlap between the number of plans affecting young children; joint audit and inspection of different services bearing on the same client; and the need for better information sharing between professionals.

The Unit is also involved in drawing up key indicators of social exclusion and is pursuing this in parallel with the Department of Social Security's consultation on the success measures proposed in the Green Paper on Welfare Reform. A decision on the second phase work of the Unit will be announced in due course.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of the Social Exclusion Unit, indicating the special responsibilities and experience of each member. [51310]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The table shows the members of the Social Exclusion Unit at senior executive level and above. The unit works in teams on its projects, details of which were set out in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Colman) on 8 December 1997, Official Report, columns 408–10. Its next set of priorities will be announced shortly.

Unit member	Department/organisation
Moira Wallace (Head of Unit)	HM Treasury
Jon Bright (Deputy Head of Unit)	Crime Concern
Simon Courage	Department for Education and Employment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the work of the Social Exclusion Unit on the provision of furnished accommodation. [51447]

The Prime Minister: The Social Exclusion Unit has no specific remit to look at the provision of furnished accommodation. The Social Exclusion Unit has, however, recently published a report on rough sleeping. A copy is available in the libraries of the House.

"Newsnight"

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what was the basis for the statement made on his behalf by his Chief Press Officer concerning ministerial responses to invitations to appear on "Newsnight". [51814]

The Prime Minister: The Government seek to field Ministers for interviews as requested by the broadcast media, and my Chief Press Secretary has a role in the co-ordination of this activity. Given the growth in outlets, and the number of bids received, judgments inevitably have to be applied about which interviews Ministers agree to. Ministers regularly appear on Newsnight and many other BBC programmes.

House of Lords

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the likely timescale for the reform of the House of Lords. [51446]

The Prime Minister: The Government will publish their proposals on reform of the House of Lords in due course.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Air Carrier Liability

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which other European Union member states have introduced, or are planning to introduce, measures similar to the Air Carrier Liability Order 1998. [50820]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The United Kingdom is not notified of the actions of other EU Member States in relation to the implementation of Community law. However, I understand the Commission is considering writing to Member States to ask what steps they have taken, or plan to take, to implement Council Regulation 2027/97, which enters into force on 17 October 1998.

Roads

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has made of the costs of maintaining the UK's national and local road network in the next five years: and what research his Department has evaluated into the value for money achieved by the current maintenance programme. [50883]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Future resources for maintenance of both the trunk and local road networks are being determined in the light of the Chancellor's announcements of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–94, on resources for transport and local government current spending (which includes maintenance of non-principal roads). We shall announce figures in due course.

The Highways Agency provides advice on the value for money of maintenance activities in several documents, such as the design Manual for Roads and Bridges, the Trunk Road Maintenance Manual and the Value for Money Manual. The advice in these documents is based, among other things, on research carried out by the Agency. The Agency aims to improve continually the value for money of its maintenance and management activities, and its research programme plays a large part in this. Value engineering appraisals are carried out before any maintenance project is finalised.

The Government are also developing a best value regime for local authority services. Under these proposals, each local authority will consult on its performance standards and each year report on their performance against those standards. There will also be periodic reviews within each authority for service to examine rigorously how performance can be improved. The best value regime will apply to highway maintenance for local authority roads.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been paid by road authorities throughout the UK in compensation to road users for accidents or damage to vehicles as a result of poorly maintained roads in each of the last five years. [50884]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Responsibility for roads in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Within England, information relating to compensation paid to road users on roads that are the responsibility of local authorities is not collected centrally.

For trunk roads and motorways in England it is not possible to separate out the compensation paid specifically as a result of poor maintenance.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the monetary value of the national and local road network in the UK. [50882]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Highways Agency has undertaken a valuation of the 10,000 km motorway and trunk road network in England using both professional advisers and Agency staff. This evaluation was produced for the Department's forthcoming Resource Accounts and was prepared in accordance with the Treasury's Resource Accounting Manual. As at 1 April 1997, the network was valued at around £60 billion.

No research has been commissioned by the Department on the monetary value of the local road network.

Treaty of Canterbury

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list those organisations and individuals which have made representations to him about the use of Clause 33.3 in the Treaty of Canterbury; [51168]

(2) what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with (i) Eurotunnel, (ii) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, (iii) the French Government, (iv) the Kent Fire Service and (v) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office regarding the use of Clause 33.3 in the Treaty of Canterbury. [51169]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My hon. Friend is the only individual or organisation to have raised Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement (there is no such clause in the Treaty of Canterbury) with the Government since the General Election.

As far as I am aware, since the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement was drawn up in 1986 the only discussions on this Clause between my officials, Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials, Eurotunnel and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority have been in the context of preparing replies to Questions posed by my hon. Friends the Members for Crewe and Nantwich and for Thurrock (Mr. MacKinlay). There have been no discussions at Ministerial level or with the French Government or with the Kent Fire Service.

London Underground

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of (a) consultants and (b) legal advisers employed by London Transport to provide advice on the sale of London Underground and the estimated cost of employing each company. [51189]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground is not for sale. Freshfields and PricewaterhouseCoopers are providing, respectively, legal and financial advice jointly to the Government and London Transport on implementing our plans for a Public/Private Partnership. Competitions are currently underway for other specialist advisers.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not possible to give a figure for the estimated value of the contracts. We will, of course, report aggregate figures for the total cost of advice on implementing the Public/Private Partnership, in due course.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many companies to date have expressed an interest in taking a stake in London Underground infrastructure. [51193]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Companies will not be asked formally to express their interest in infrastructure contracts until next year. But London Transport has placed a notice in the Official Journal of the European Community inviting firms to take part in a consultation process on our proposals for a Public/Private Partnership. London Transport also hosted a market sounding conference on 16 July which was attended by delegates from around 200 organisations.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many additional staff have been employed by his Department to deal with the transfer of London Underground infrastructure to the private sector. [51173]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No additional staff have been employed by my Department to work on our plans for a Public/Private Partnership for London Underground.

Internal reorganisation has taken place to ensure that adequate resources are in place to enable our proposals to be implemented as quickly and efficiently as possible.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision has been made for additional subsidies to be paid to London Underground to compensate for the additional costs of transferring infrastructure services to the private sector. [51192]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The aim will be to let contracts which are affordable from LU's own resources, on the basis of projected revenue flows. Unless it represents poor value for money, payments to the contractor or contractors will be profiled so as to avoid the need for subsidy.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the contractual basis on which London Underground staff will be transferred to the private sector for the purpose of the planned London Underground restructuring. [51209]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The majority of London Underground staff will remain with the publicly owned and publicly accountable operating company. It makes sense for some staff to transfer with their work to the private sector contractor or contractors. The means of transfer has yet to be decided but the Deputy Prime Minister has already given firm commitments on the protection of staff rights under the contracts of employment, covering pay, hours, leave, collective agreements and unions representation, as well as on issues such as pensions and concessionary travel.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those organisations invited to attend the seminar hosted by London Transport on the procedures to be adopted for the transfer of London Underground infrastructure to the private sector. [51376]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Around 200 organisations were invited, including rail industry suppliers and contractors, banks and other financiers, project management specialists, legal and financial advisers and consulting engineers. I shall write further to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the contractual arrangements for the restructuring of London Underground to be completed. [51528]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We aim to award the one, two or three infrastructure contracts for the London Underground Public-Private Partnership by April 2000.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the London Underground conference held on 16 July. [51737]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The conference was designed to start a consultation with potential bidders and their financiers about how best to implement the Government's Public-Private Partnership for the London Underground. Around 200 organisations were invited, including rail industry suppliers and contractors, banks and other financiers, project management specialists, legal and financial advisers and consulting engineers. The conference was welcomed by those present and represented a successful start to the more detailed consultation process which will now follow.

Airports

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when (a) he or (b) other Ministers in his Department and (c) his officials last met BAA plc to discuss airport capacity in the South East of England. [51214]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have met BAA plc on four occasions since 2 May 1997. None of these engagements was arranged specifically to discuss airport capacity in the South East of England. Discussions covered a range of issues. I understand the same is true for the other Ministers in my Department. Officials within my Department met BAA on 14 July 1998 and, among other topics, did discuss airport capacity in the South East of England.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many slots are operated by each airline at (i) Heathrow and (ii) Gatwick airports. [51149]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government do not collect this information themselves, but from reports prepared by Airport Co-ordination Ltd., I can provide the figure for the ten carriers that hold the most slots for the current summer season.

	Slots	Percentage
Heathrow
British Airways	97,455	37
British Midland	35,497	13
Lufthansa	11,280	4
Aer Lingus	9,076	3
SAS	8,340	3
Iberia	6,300	2
American Airlines	6,299	2
United Airlines	6,010	2
KLM	5,820	2
Alitalia	5,520	2

	Slots	Percentage
Gatwick
British Airways	37,558	27
City Flyer	18,657	13
Jersey European	5,877	4
Monarch	5,262	4
GB Airways	4,973	4
Air 2000	4,930	4
Britannia	4,673	3
Caledonian	4,469	3
Air Tours International	3,394	2
Air World	2,534	2

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department will carry out an assessment of the benefits and disbenefits of the three major South East airports being owned by the same operator. [51374]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have no plans to do so. Under the Airports Act 1986 the Civil Aviation Authority can impose whatever conditions might be appropriate to remedy the effects of anti-competitive behaviour by an airport operator. In the 1996 quinquennial review, the MMC reported that it had not found any course of conduct by BAA London airports for which a change in the structure of their ownership would be an appropriate remedy.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking or plans to take following the decision by BAA to give sole access to Terminal Five at Heathrow to British Airways and its alliance partners. [51375]

Ms Glenda Jackson: BAA announced in 1997 that it would provisionally be designating British Airways as the main user of Terminal 5. Decisions on the allocation of terminal facilities are a matter for the airport operator; I understand that BAA's announcement followed a process of consultation with all interested parties.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what conclusions were reached between Eurotunnel, the Kent Fire Brigade and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority regarding the operation of a fire service by Eurotunnel in the Channel Tunnel. [51174]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No proposal has been received from Eurotunnel regarding the operation of the First Line of Response (FLOR) fire service in the Channel Tunnel. If such a proposal is made it will be considered by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority who will advise the Intergovernmental Commission.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each DVLA office the number of staff employed on enforcement duties, the number of cases handled and the estimated income generated in each of the last five years. [51171]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is not available in the format requested for the full 5 year period. The VED enforcement breakdown for the current DVLA local office network for 1997–98 is as follows:

[2] In addition revenue generated from Campaigns against evasion of Vehicle Excise Duty amounted to £3.642 million

In the last five years the staff deployed, total cases completed and the revenue generated from the VED Enforcement effort is as follows:

Year	Staff deployed	Total cases completed	Revenue generated (£ million)
1993–94	946	696,000	65
1994–95	916	714,000	68

1996–97	762	710,000	71
1997–98	758	635,000	[1]67

[1] In addition £8.5 million was generated through the Agency Wheelclamping scheme

The reduced staff deployment has been possible through the use of more efficient working practices and changes in procedures.

Motor Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing a mandatory mileage registration scheme for motor vehicles. [51178]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Although detailed costings have not been estimated, a mandatory requirement for the provision of mileage information on DVLA forms would have significant implications for the overall operating costs of the Agency's national vehicle register. Some 17 million transactions a year could be affected.

Marine Safety Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the last five years the number of marine surveyors employed in each Marine Safety Agency office. [51180]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures requested are given in the table. Figures are the actual number of Marine Surveyor staff in post as at 1 April for each of the five years. The Marine Safety Agency merged with the Coastguard Agency to become the Maritime and Coastguard Agency on 1 April 1998. The Headquarters office is based at Southampton, along with the Regional Marine Office.

Coastguard

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by coastguard station for each of the last three months the number of days that the station was staffed below the minimum watch level. [51179]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no minimum watch levels for Her Majesty's Coastguard Co-ordinating Centres. Suggested watch levels were set out in the 'Focus for Change' review and can be varied locally following an assessment of perceived and actual operational demand and risk. I have placed in the Library a table which shows, by station and date, the number of hours when watch levels were below these levels for the months of April, May and June.

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to come to a decision on the legal case involving the BEST Pension Scheme. [51166]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Decisions will be taken at the appropriate time, consistent with our hope that all outstanding legal matters concerning the former National Bus Company pension funds are satisfactorily resolved as soon as possible.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for (a) his Department, (b) its NDPBs and (c) its executive agencies, the target date for millennium compliance. [51191]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions now publishes plans on the Internet which show targets for millennium compliance and progress made against the targets. These plans are reviewed and updated regularly.

The plans show that the Department's centre has a target date of June 1999 for completion of its business critical systems. The Department's executive agencies are working towards target dates for business critical and operational systems which range from December 1998 to June 1999.

Certain of the Department's key NDPBs will be contributing towards the next reports to be published on the Internet in September 1998.

Civil Servants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise. [50891]

Angela Eagle: We do not hold any central Departmental record of the educational qualifications for staff. However, for the headquarters element of the Department, the personnel database records that 140 members of staff have a science degree and we estimate that 41 per cent. of these staff may be using their degree in their current post. Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which sites of special scientific interest in England will be affected by trunk road and motorway schemes for which preferred routes have been announced. [51127]

Mr. Meacher: Trunk roads and motorway schemes in England are subject to the Roads Review. We expect to announce the conclusions of this review later this month.

Housing

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the costs of bringing an empty home back into a good standard of repair. [51116]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department's 1996 English House Condition Survey (EHCS) includes information on the repair costs for vacant dwellings.

The average expenditure required for the comprehensive costs of putting empty homes into good order is identified by the survey at just over £6,500.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of residential properties in England which have been empty for a year or more. [51118]

Mr. Raynsford: At the time of the 1996 English House Condition Survey, it was estimated that some 415,000 dwellings (2 per cent. of the total housing stock) had been empty for six months or more. The Survey does not provide figures on the number of properties empty for a year or more.

Cycling

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision has been made for cyclists on (a) the new Millennium Bridge, (b) the rebuilt Hungerford Bridge and (c) Southwark Bridge. [50952]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 17 July 1998]: According to information provided by the London authorities with responsibility for these structures:

The new Millennium Bridge and the rebuilt Hungerford Bridge are for pedestrians. Cyclists will be required to dismount when crossing these bridges.

Provision for cyclists across Southwark Bridge is currently under investigation by the Corporation of London, to connect with the London Cycle Network on the south side.

Specified Risk Material (Incineration)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he (a) has given and (b) intends to give for the control of emissions in respect of the incineration of specified risk material by power stations. [51242]

Angela Eagle: Specified Risk Material (SRM) is not incinerated in power stations, but is rendered to produce Meat and Bone Meal (MBM). The Environment Agency has published guidance for the control of emissions from the incineration of MBM. The Agency has no intention at present to issue any further guidance.

Coastal Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has evaluated regarding the effects of major inshore algal blooms on the distribution of pollutants in coastal areas with particular reference to the (a) metal absorbing capabilities and (b) bubble scavenging properties of algae. [51384]

Angela Eagle: My Department has not commissioned any research on these questions, and is not aware of any recent relevant work commissioned by others.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has evaluated on the potential health risks of foam and sludge deposits left by Phacosystic algae blooms on the shore line. [51385]

Angela Eagle: My Department has commissioned no research on this question.

Air Safety

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has evaluated into the impact of electromagnetic pulses from military craft on civilian airliners; and if he will make a statement. [51090]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As part of an international programme, the Civil Aviation Authority has undertaken research and implemented certification requirements to ensure that civil aircraft are immune to the adverse effects of exposure to electro-magnetic pulses and transmissions, from sources external to aircraft.

Reclamation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce regulations to give the Health and Safety Executive and the Environment Agency increased powers to withdraw licences for the operation of reclamation processes for reasons relating to the protection of human health and the environment. [51092]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive has powers to prohibit any work activity which involves or will involve a risk of serious personal injury. The Environment Agency has powers, under section 38 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, to revoke a waste management licence which has been issued for a reclamation process where the continuation of the activities authorised by the licence would cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health. We have no evidence that these powers are not adequate and we have no plans to increase them.

GRP Tanks

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions on which, and the locations where collapses of glass reinforced plastic tanks with PVC linings have been investigated by (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the Environment Agency in the last 10 years; if he will publish their conclusions in each case; and if he will make a statement. [51055]

Angela Eagle: The information requested could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Environmental Prosecutions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many businesses have been prosecuted successfully for breaches of environmental standards since 1990 in Derbyshire. [51091]

Angela Eagle: This information is not held centrally. The Environment Agency took on responsibility for managing and regulating the water environment and controlling industrial pollution and wastes in England and Wales on 1 April 1996. Between then and 31 March 1998 it undertook 17 successful prosecutions for environmental offences committed in Derbyshire. Local authorities and other bodies also have responsibility for enforcing some environmental controls.

Tankers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those incidents involving the leaking of chemicals from tankers broken down by leakages which occurred while the tankers were (a) at the point of origin, (b) in transit and (c) at the point of destination which have been investigated by (i) the Health and Safety Executive and (ii) the Environment Agency during the past 10 years, indicating the conclusions of such inquiries; and if he will make a statement. [51056]

Angela Eagle: The Reporting of Injuries, Disease and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 (RIDDOR 95), require certain types of Dangerous Occurrence to be reported to the relevant enforcing authority. One category of Dangerous Occurrence concerns any incident involving a road tanker or tank container used for the carriage of dangerous goods where the tank or tank container overturns, is seriously damaged, is involved in a fire, or where the contents escape.

A similar category of Dangerous Occurrence was also included in the previous regulations, RIDDOR 1985.

During the last ten years the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has investigated 124 such Dangerous Occurrences which have involved a loss of containment of dangerous goods from tankers or tank containers, of which 43 occurred at the point of origin;

54 occurred while in transit;

27 occurred at the point of destination.

The action taken by HSE as a result of their investigations includes advice, letters, enforcement notices and in some cases prosecution. I have arranged for a detailed breakdown of the 124 Dangerous Occurrences investigated by HSE to be placed in the Library.

Vessels (Survival Suits)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the types of vessels required to carry survival suits for crew members; what regulations govern the provision of this equipment; and if he will make a statement. [50847]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Passenger ships of Classes I, II and II(A) and Cargo ships of Classes VII-VIII(A)(t) and XI are required to carry immersion (survival) suits. The carriage requirements for these vessels are detailed in the Merchant Shipping (Life-saving Appliance) regulations 1986, SI No. 1066.

The Merchant Shipping (High-Speed Craft) Regulations 1996 No. 3188, identifies the requirements for the carriage of immersion suits on High Speed Craft.

Rail Services

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement concerning the number of complaints made to rail companies. [51669]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator published on 1 July 1998 a bulletin of passenger complaints made to the train operating companies in 1997–98 which reported that nearly 1,000,000 complaints were received by the operators during the year, representing 115 complaints per 100,000 passenger journeys. These figures show a high level of passenger dissatisfaction with the railway. Train operators must listen to what their passengers are telling them and take action to address passengers' concerns.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of complaints made to Virgin Trains over the West Coast Main Line service. [51668]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator's bulletin of rail complaints, published on 1 July, indicates that 119,266 complaints were made in writing to Virgin West Coast during 1997–98. Quality of service on the West Coast service was poor during much of the year, mainly owing to problems with rolling stock and infrastructure. I am pleased that Virgin Trains has taken action to bring about some improvements. We look to the Franchising Director to work with Virgin Rail, involving Railtrack where necessary, to ensure that this trend is maintained and, where there are still shortcomings, improved.

Aircraft (Disease Transmission)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will conduct an investigation into the transmission of disease through the air-conditioning systems of jet airliners. [51672]

Ms Glenda Jackson: To date there has been no evidence to suggest that there is a link between cabin air quality, flow rates and the spread of disease. Even when the air conditioning is set at its lowest level, the air in a modern aircraft cabin is completely changed every three minutes on average. This is well above the standard for public buildings.

We have no plans to conduct any research into this issue at present.

Dorset County Council

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will request the Audit Commission to investigate Dorset County Council's (a) social services funding and (b) expenditure on moneys on an office in Brussels. [51673]

Mr. Raynsford: No. The conduct of the audit of Dorset County Council is a matter for the independent external auditor appointed by the Audit Commission.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the statutory basis of already approved trials of genetically modified crops. [51561]

Mr. Meacher: Trials of genetically modified crops are approved by the relevant Secretaries of State under Part IV of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 (amended 1995 and 1997). Together these implement Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release of genetically modified organisms to the environment and the subsequent amendments to the directive.

Heathrow Express

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria in respect of (a) safety and (b) compensation to passengers were adopted by his Department in the licensing process for the Heathrow Express. [51796]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Heathrow Express had to meet full safety case requirements as set out in the Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994 before their passenger licence could be granted. However, the licence was not issued with a "through-ticketing and network benefits" condition, owing to the specialised nature of the Heathrow Express service. For example, the station at Heathrow is exempt from the Railways Act 1993 and therefore exempt from the standard train operator ticket retailing agreements (and therefore the usual passenger protections under the conditions of carriage arrangements).

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he received from the Office of the Rail Regulator concerning the licensing of the Heathrow Express. [51776]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Heathrow Express passenger licence was granted by the Secretary of State. No formal representations were received from the Rail Regulator and his office was consulted throughout the licensing process.

Low Flying

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what channels are available to members of the public wishing to complain about low-flying helicopters; and what action is taken once a complaint is received. [51775]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Members of the Public wishing to complain about civil helicopter activities should contact the Aviation Regulation Enforcement and Investigation Branch of the Civil Aviation Authority, CAA House, 45–59 Kingsway, London WC2B 6TE. The CAA can also be contacted both during office hours and out of hours on 0171 832 5854. This number is also available to all Police Forces and Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Complaints about military helicopter activities should be addressed to the Ministry of Defence.

On receipt of a complaint, a preliminary investigation is carried out to determine if the complaint indicates a breach of legislation or is about noise and nuisance. If it is the latter, then the immunity granted by Section 76 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 precludes any further action.

Section 76 says that if the aircraft was being flown in accordance with the regulations governing aircraft flight, then no prosecution can be made for trespass or nuisance. However, if there appears to be a breach of aviation legislation, steps are taken to identify the machine and the pilot responsible and to ascertain if there are any exemptions or permissions in issue which would account for the observed activity. If it then appears that the flight was in breach of the rules and also that there is a reasonable prospect of obtaining sufficient evidence suitable for presentation to a court, a full criminal investigation is carried out and evidence is taken by a CAA Investigation Officer in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act, 1984.

When the investigation is complete, a report is raised which is examined against the guidelines given in the Code for Crown Prosecutors. If it meets these guidelines, the Authority may dispose of the matter by means of a Warning Letter, by administering a formal caution under the Attorney-General's guidelines, or, for the most serious breaches, by prosecuting. The Authority also has the power to take licensing action against any pilot found to be in breach of the legislation.

Planning

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he intends to implement the amended EIA Directive for planning in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [51897]

Mr. Caborn: The Government have today issued draft Regulations to implement the requirements of the amending EIA Directive (97/11/EC) into the Town and Country Planning System in England and Wales. A copy of the draft Regulations has been placed in the Library.

The amending Directive does not bring fundamental changes to the existing system and we have taken the opportunity to consolidate, as well as amend, the existing provisions. The two previous consultation exercises on implementation of the Directive have brought support for the Government's approach, including the use of thresholds or criteria to assist planning authorities in deciding whether or not a development requires Environmental Impact Assessment. The level and application of these criteria have been set after consultation, but to ensure the maximum protection for the environment and the minimum burden on planning authorities and developers, the system will be reviewed after two years of operation.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the implications for housing and regeneration policy of the Chancellor's oral statement of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–211, on the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51923]

Ms Armstrong: I am tomorrow placing in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office a statement outlining the changes to housing and regeneration policy resulting from the Review.

Service Charges

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will enable disputes over the reasonableness of service charges between landlords and long leaseholders where court proceedings began before 1 September 1997 to be transferred to leasehold valuation tribunals. [51925]

Ms Armstrong: Following consultation with interested parties, I have made a further Commencement Order under the Housing Act 1996 which will take effect on 11 August 1998. From that date, a court will have the discretion to allow service charge disputes which started before 1 September 1997 to be transferred to leasehold valuation tribunals, where the court considers the interests of justice would best be served.

WALES

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total sum to be allocated out of the Welsh budget to local authorities in Wales in each of the three years covered by the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51459]

Mr. Ron Davies: It is my intention to issue a consultation paper in September, the results of which will inform my decisions on the most appropriate way to allocate the Welsh budget. I have already met the Welsh Local Government Association and they will participate in the consultation process. I will announce the allocations later in the year.

Buses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote the provision of bus services in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [51210]

Mr. Hain: The Government's integrated transport policy is based on the promotion of public transport, including bus services. We have already made an additional £2.25 million available to Welsh local authorities this year for new and enhanced bus services in rural areas. Further details were set out in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" and will be included in the complementary transport policy statement for Wales.

DEFENCE

Chemical and Biological Defence Sector

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has made of the long-term effect on human health of short-term exposure to chlorine. [49991]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about short term exposure to chlorine.

DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD) has not carried out any formal assessment of the long term effects on human health of short term exposure to chlorine.

CBD is aware, however, of the general toxicology and health effects of chlorine gas, as reported in the open literature, particularly in reaction to exposure occurring through industrial accidents.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of the titles of the reports published in the Chemical Defence Establishment Technical Paper series which were produced as unclassified papers. [50022]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the unclassified reports published by the Chemical Defence Establishment.

I have arranged for a list of the unclassified Technical Paper series published by the Chemical Defence Establishment, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector to be placed in the House library.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent research has been carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to investigate whether short-term exposure to adamsite (DM) can cause long-term illnesses; when this research was carried out; and what were the results. [49987]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about short term exposure to adamsite (DM).

DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD) has not conducted research involving exposure to adamsite (DM) for over 30 years. No assessment of possible long term health effects resulting from short term exposure to adamsite has been made.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out to investigate the long-term human health effects of short-term exposure to 1-methoxycycloheptatriene (1-MCHT); when this research was carried out; and what were the conclusions. [49989]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about short term exposure to 1-methoxycycloheptatriene.

DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD) conducted a small number of human volunteer trials involving eye only exposure to 1-methoxycycloheptatriene (1-MCHT) from 1984 to 1985.

The trials involved 19 volunteers who were exposed for between 10 to 30 seconds to concentrations of 5.0 milligrammes per cubic metre of air. The purpose of the study was to evaluate the irritancy of the compound.

No assessment has been made of possible long term effects of short term exposures to 1-MCHT.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts and agreements in universities are currently being funded by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment; what is the total value of these research projects; how many of these research projects are classified; and if he will list the universities at which these research projects are being funded. [49986]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about university research contracts funded by DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD).

CBD currently funds 60 research contracts and agreements with universities. The total value of the research is approximately £5,900,000. None of the research projects are classified.

The contracts and agreements are with the following universities:

London

Birmingham

Sheffield

Ulster

Exeter

Durham

Oxford

Bath

Hertfordshire

Dundee

Plymouth

Cambridge

Bristol

Southampton

Newcastle-upon-Tyne

Manchester

St. Andrews

Hull

Warwick

Huddersfield

University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology

University College of London.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has made of the effects of short-term exposure to phosgene. [50023]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about short term exposure to phosgene.

DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector is currently undertaking studies to determine the short term effects of exposure to phosgene. The studies are part of an ongoing research programme to develop medical countermeasures against chemical warfare agents. We would be happy to provide the results of this work when they are published in the open literature.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to investigate whether short-term exposure to mustard gas can cause long-term illnesses; when this research was carried out; and what were the results. [49995]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about short term exposure to the chemical blister agent mustard.

In the past, DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD) has conducted trials, as part of its service volunteer programme, involving the chemical blister agent mustard. These studies were not intended to evaluate the long term effects of this agent following short term exposure.

Assessments made by CBD concerning possible long term effects of exposure to mustard have been based on numerous epidemiological studies published in the open literature.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next inspection of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment by the Health and Safety Executive is planned to take place. [49988]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 21 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about inspections by the Health and Safety Executive.

The Health and Safety Executive does not publish a long term programme of its future inspections. DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence sector (CBD) is not therefore aware of the date of its next inspection.

Project Horizon

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of Project Horizon; [51064]

(2) how many Horizon New Generation frigates he intends to purchase. [51254]

Mr. Spellar: The Programme Memorandum of Understanding, MOU, for the Common New Generation Frigate, Project Horizon, was signed by the United Kingdom, Italy and France in July 1994, with its supplement for Project Definition and Initial Design signed in March 1996. The Programme MOU for the vessel's Principal Anti-Air Missile System, PAAMS, and the supplement covering its Full Scale Engineering Development and initial Production, FSED/IP, were also signed in March 1996.

Since MOU signatures, negotiations on PAAMS FSED/IP have made progress and the tri-national contract is scheduled to be placed later this year. Project Definition studies on Horizon are well advanced with further work due to commence shortly and scheduled to be completed next year, with the next stage being the placing of the design and build contract for the nations' three first-of-class ships.

It is currently expected that 12 Horizon frigates will enter service with the Royal Navy.

European Defence Industry

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what international agreements he intends to negotiate to facilitate restructuring of the European defence industry. [51252]

Mr. Spellar: On 6 July 1998, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence signed a Letter of Intent with European Defence Ministers designed to facilitate the restructuring of the European defence industry. This Letter of Intent identifies potential obstacles to industrial restructuring in six key areas, together with possible means of removing them. The six areas are:

Security of Supply

Export Procedures

Security of Information

Harmonisation of Research and Technology

Treatment of Technical Information

Harmonisation of Military Requirements.

Expert working groups are being established to take forward detailed negotiations with the aim of removing the potential obstacles in each area. Solutions to the problems identified by the Working Groups will be set out in subsequent international agreements or arrangements. The legal status of these agreements has still to be decided. That said, I would hope the negotiations would be concluded within the next 12 months.

Russia (Joint Exercises)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Royal Air Force conducted joint exercises with the Russian Air Force during the last five years. [48576]

Mr. George Robertson: The Royal Air Force has not exercised with the Russian Air Force during the last five years, although RAF aircraft have exercised with Russian aircraft belonging to other elements of the Russian Armed Forces. The RAF contributed a C-130 aircraft and 19 personnel from the Tactical Medical Wing to the NATO Exercise, Cooperative Bear between 1–5 September 1997 in Sweden, which also involved a Russian IL 76 aircraft and 32 medical personnel from the Russian Emergency Command.

Spring Quarry, Corsham

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 527, if he will list the functions which have been carried out in the underground part of the site at Spring Quarry, Corsham, since 1968. [51132]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1968, and until its closure in 1995, the underground site at Spring Quarry, Corsham was used by the MOD as a bulk storage area with both military and civil communication facilities. Other functions carried out on the site were in support of these tasks, for example the servicing of transport vehicles for use in the stores.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 569, on AWE, Aldermaston, if he will place a list of the titles of the 14 quarterly analysis reports produced by the Directorate of Quality Assurance at the Atomic Weapons Establishment in the Library, indicating the date on which each paper was produced. [51135]

Mr. Spellar: I am today placing a list in the Library of the House.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department on the use of chrysotile asbestos in environmental projects for which his Department is responsible. [51240]

Mr. Spellar: It is Ministry of Defence policy not to use asbestos in projects or to make purchases containing asbestos. Exceptions may be approved only in rare instances where asbestos is essential for satisfactory performance or where the use of any alternative would be equally or more hazardous. In such instances the Department complies with the Statutory regulations governing the use of asbestos.

Eurofighter

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual budget for the Eurofighter from 1997–98 to 2002–03. [51757]

Mr. Spellar: Up to 31 March 1998 the UK's expenditure on the Eurofighter programme totalled some £3 billion. Future UK procurement expenditure is currently estimated at £12.9 billion. Figures are at average 1997–98 prices.

Year-on-year spending forecasts for particular projects constitute projections and assumptions which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of the defence programme. I am, therefore, withholding this information under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Asset Disposals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his target value for (a) the Defence

Estate, (b) stocks of missiles and ammunition and (c) other stock-holding disposals for the current year and each of the next three years; and how this compares with income from asset disposals in each of the last three years. [51758]

Mr. Spellar: Over the next four years, estimated receipts from the disposal of MOD land and buildings amount to £700 million, including £200 million in the current year. Year by year breakdowns for future years are not yet available. Disposals over the last three years amounted to £75 million, £180 million and £140 million respectively.

Receipts from the sales of equipment, spares and munitions over the last three years have amounted to some £80 million per annum. This level is expected to be maintained over the next four years.

Departmental Holdings

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 22, on Departmental holdings, if he will also include in such consultations representatives of the Scottish and Welsh National Farmers Unions and the Farming Union of Wales. [51227]

Mr. Spellar: We would be happy to seek the views of these bodies and they will also be contacted later in the year.

TRACER Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money the United Kingdom has spent on the TRACER project to date. [51061]

Mr. Spellar: Expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on the Tactical Reconnaissance Armoured Combat Equipment Requirement, TRACER, programme currently amounts to £7.3 million at 1998–99 prices. This does not include the cost of government research into systems which may come to be incorporated in the design of the vehicle, nor any costs incurred by the private sector.

Casualty Receiving Ship

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the in-service date of the primary casualty receiving ship which he proposes to purchase. [51065]

Mr. Spellar: Options for the procurement of two new primary casualty receiving ships are currently being explored. It is expected that a decision on the way forward, including estimated in service dates will be made early next year.

Smart Procurement Policy

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce longer tours of duty for officers overseeing defence projects under his Smart Procurement Policy. [51076]

Mr. George Robertson: This option is already being looked at as part of the implementation of the Smart Procurement Initiative.

European Aerospace Industry

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the proposals which he has received from European companies on the restructuring of the European aerospace industry. [51060]

Mr. Spellar: On 9 December 1997 the heads of Government in France, Germany and the UK issued a trilateral statement which recognised the urgent need for the European aerospace and defence electronics industries to rationalise, and urged industry to present their plans for restructuring and integration.

Proposals from industry on the restructuring of the European aerospace industry have been received in the strictest confidence. Details cannot, therefore, be divulged, in accordance with Exemption 13 to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The proposals are being carefully considered by officials who, while recognising that the detailed structure is for industry to establish, will seek to do all they can to help facilitate the process.

Multi-role Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the progress of the MRAV project; [51253]

(2) how many multi-role armoured vehicles he intends to purchase. [51255]

Mr. Spellar: Following the joint announcement with France and Germany on 22 April of our intention to proceed with collaborative development and initial production of the Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle, MRAV, and of the selection of the trilateral consortium "Eurokonsortium" as the preferred bidder, we have set work in hand to prepare a Memorandum of Understanding between the three nations. Detailed contract negotiations with the consortium are also proceeding. The initial production order will include 200 vehicles for each nation. No decisions have been taken on the final numbers required.

Procurement Policy

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the McKinsey report into defence procurement. [51072]

Mr. Spellar: No. This report constitutes advice to Ministers, and I am withholding it under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

European Collaboration

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future development of the Organisme Conjointe de Co-operation en Matière d'Armament. [51059]

Mr. Spellar: The UK is playing a full part in the continuing development of the Organisme Conjointe de Cooperation en Matière d'Armament, OCCAR, which provides an opportunity to improve the way we conduct collaborative business with our European partners. With our partners, we are currently seeking legal status for the Organisation and are exploring various options to achieve this. Legal status would allow OCCAR to place and manage contracts under agreed procurement procedures on the basis of best practice. OCCAR already manages existing Franco-German collaborative equipment programmes and agreement has been reached for the integration of projects involving the UK.

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the Joint Strike Fighter. [51073]

Mr. Spellar: The US-led Joint Strike Fighter Concept Demonstration Phase, in which the UK is participating as a collaborative partner, aims to reduce risk prior to entry into full development. Steady progress is being made towards the first flights of the Concept Demonstration aircraft which are scheduled for the year 2000.

Combat Engineer Tractor

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress his Department has made on the replacement for the Combat Engineer Tractor. [51069]

Mr. Spellar: Feasibility Studies into the replacement for Combat Engineer Tractor, known as Terrier, have been successfully completed and we are currently considering the case for moving to Project Definition.

Defence Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Centre, Winterbourne Gunner

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when work will commence on new buildings at the Defence NBC Centre at Winterbourne Gunner; and what contingency plans have been made with police, fire and emergency planning authorities. [51251]

Mr. Spellar: On current planning, contracts for the work to be undertaken at the Defence NBC Centre, Winterbourne Gunner are expected to be let in October 1998, with a view to construction starting in November 1998. Construction work will take place on areas that have been cleared of old buildings. Archaeological and technical surveys of the site have not revealed anything which would require specific contingency plans other than the normal responses from the emergency services.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress his Department has made in the development of unmanned aerial vehicles. [51161]

Mr. Spellar: Good progress continues to be made on the Phoenix unmanned air vehicle and on training the regiments that will use it. I expect the system to be in service by the end of this year, providing target acquisition support to our artillery systems. We are also examining the potential of unmanned air vehicles in the context of meeting longer-term requirements, including battlefield reconnaissance and the future offensive air system.

Future Escort Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department on the Future Escort Project. [51068]

Mr. Spellar: The Future Escort, which will replace the existing Type 22 and 23 frigates, is currently in the pre-feasibility phase, with a Staff Target planned for late 1999. We are examining all aspects of the proposed warship, including her hull design. A number of hull forms are being considered, including the trimaran. A contract is to be let shortly by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency for a Trimaran Demonstrator vessel which will be used to determine the operational characteristics of this type of hull form through sea-going trials scheduled to be completed by 2002. Initial trials results will be available mid 2001 to enable the MOD to make a decision as to whether the trimaran hull form will be adopted as the basis of the Future Escort design.

Landing Ship Logistics Vessels

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for the procurement of the two new landing ship logistics vessels. [51075]

Mr. Spellar: We are investigating options for the procurement of two new landing ship logistics. We expect to make a decision on the way forward, including target in service dates, in the early part of 1999.

Submarines

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to place a firm order for two further Astute Class submarines. [51063]

Mr. Spellar: On current plans, we expect to place an order for two new Astute Class submarines early in the next century.

Future Carrier-borne Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what options he is assessing for the Future Carrier-Borne Aircraft. [51067]

Mr. Spellar: No decisions have yet been taken on a future carrier borne aircraft but a version of the Joint Strike Fighter programme currently underway in the United States remains a strong contender. We are currently participating in the concept demonstration phase. Several other possible solutions are also under consideration. These include Short Take Off but Arrested Landing; conventional carrier aircraft with steam catapult assisted take off and arrested landing; and a further development of the Harrier aircraft.

Container Ships

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the in-service date of the four additional roll-on roll-off container ships he intends to purchase. [51071]

Mr. Spellar: It is anticipated that the four additional roll-on roll-off ships will be available for operational service from 2000. Options for the procurement of these vessels are currently being considered.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the budget and (b) the personnel numbers available to the Defence Medical Services in each of the last 10 years. [44216]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 8 June 1998]: I have written to the hon. and learned Member and a copy of my letter is being placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Domestic Violence

11. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals his Department has to protect women from domestic violence. [49924]

Mr. McLeish: Tackling domestic violence is a priority for the Scottish Office. We are now setting up a Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence to bring together all the key interests in developing a strategy and in promoting better services for abused women.

Investment

12. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland to discuss prospects for investment in Scotland. [49925]

Mr. Dewar: I maintain regular contact with CBI Scotland on a range of issues. I believe the prospects for investment in Scotland remain excellent.

Dounreay

13. Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to visit the Dounreay reprocessing plant to discuss its operation. [49927]

Mr. Dewar: Operational matters at Dounreay are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. I have no plans to visit the reprocessing plant to discuss its operation.

Higher Education

14. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of waiving the fourth year of fees liable to be paid by students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland attending undergraduate courses at Scottish universities. [49929]

Mr. Wilson: The total estimate is some £2 million based on the latest student numbers and estimates of their family income. Of course, students from less well-off families will not pay fees in any of the four years.

21. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has received on the waiving of the fourth year of fees liable to be paid by students from England, Wales or Northern Ireland attending undergraduate courses at Scottish universities. [49936]

Mr. Wilson: I have received representations on the waiving of fourth year fees of those liable to pay, from student organisations, higher education representatives, Members of Parliament and others.

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received (a) in support of and (b) opposing the policy of introducing tuition fees for students. [49928]

Mr. Wilson: I have received several representations both in support of and opposing the policy of introducing tuition fees. The proposal emerged from the report of the Dearing Committee which was established with cross-party support. The Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals, for example, are in favour of the policy as a way of introducing more money into higher education.

Farm Incomes

15. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about trends in farm income in Scotland. [49930]

Mr. Macdonald: Farm incomes tend to fluctuate. The latest Scottish Office Statistics show that 1997 was a difficult year, despite the highest ever amount of direct support being paid to Scottish farmers, but that 1994, 1995 and 1996 were all good years for much of Scottish Agriculture.

26. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning recent trends in farm income in Scotland. [49941]

Mr. Macdonald: Farm incomes were discussed when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend Lord Sewel met the National Farmers Union of Scotland on 26 June.

Naval Establishments

16. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to visit a naval establishment in Scotland to discuss the future of such establishments. [49931]

Mr. Dewar: The future of naval establishments in Scotland is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. I have no plans at present to visit a naval establishment.

Local Government Elections

17. Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the date and electoral boundaries for the next local government elections in Scotland. [49932]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from hon. Members, local authorities, and others both about the date and electoral boundaries for the next local government elections. We believe that the benefits of a combined poll for local authority elections and the Scottish Parliament will outweigh the disadvantages.

Opencast Mining

18. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his review of the planning guidelines for opencast mining. [49933]

Mr. Wilson: The current review of Scottish planning policy for opencast coal will be finalised following the announcement of the conclusions reached on the Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation being carried out by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade.

Town Centres

19. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have for the regeneration of rural town centres. [49934]

Mr. Macdonald: Regeneration of rural town centres is a matter for local authorities and for the enterprise agencies. The Government provide a framework through National Planning Policy Guidelines, which aim to ensure that planning decisions support rural town centres and encourage good practice through projects like the Small Towns Initiative.

Health Service

20. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairmen of health boards to discuss the Carter review of acute services. [49935]

Mr. Galbraith: I met the Chairmen of the East Region Health Boards on Friday 26 June, the day after the publication of the report of the Carter Review of acute services, and that was one of the subjects we discussed.

25. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in connection with the reconfiguration of NHS trusts in Scotland. [49940]

Mr. Galbraith: My right hon. Friend and I have received 206 letters and one petition in connection with the reconfiguration of NHS trusts in Scotland. Copies of all the representations have been passed to the relevant health boards.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS employees have retired early on health grounds in the last five years in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland. [51099]

Mr. Wilson: The number of NHS employees in Scotland who have retired early on health grounds in each of the last five years is given in the table.

Year	Number
1993–94	1,214
1994–95	1,082
1995–96	1,064
1996–97	960
1997–98	972

Figures split by employer are not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Higher Still

22. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the implementation of Higher Still. [49937]

Mr. Wilson: Higher Still will bring important improvements to post-16 education in Scotland which are urgently needed. To ensure that these benefits are delivered to our young people on time, over £20 million will have been directly invested in Higher Still by the time the first classes start in 1999. This investment is providing a comprehensive package of support for all Higher Still courses, as well as funding the national staff development programme.

Increasingly, though, the challenge of implementing Higher Still will become a matter for local authorities, schools and colleges. The partnership approach has led to significant progress in the past year in the development of local implementation plans. I am confident that these plans are achievable and will be achieved.

Employment (Dumfries and Galloway)

23. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to visit Dumfries and Galloway to discuss the employment situation. [49938]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to visit Dumfries and Galloway, but is kept in close touch with developments. I met, last February, Dumfries and Galloway Enterprise to discuss economic development issues.

Special Advisers

24. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek the permission of his Department's special advisers to make public their actual salaries. [49939]

Mr. Dewar: Special Advisers are paid within a national scale at a point which relates to their previous salary in their prior employment. The April 1998 salary range is £24,836-£74,954. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

Caledonian MacBrayne

27. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Caledonian MacBrayne to discuss operational issues. [49942]

Mr. McLeish: I expect to meet the Managing Director of Caledonian MacBrayne and his colleagues on 1 September.

Fishing Industry

28. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the fishing industry in Scotland to discuss the prospects for the industry. [49943]

Mr. Macdonald: My noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries met representatives of the fishing industry on 11 June to discuss the introduction of Fixed Quota Allocations from 1 January 1999.

Accounts Commission

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for improving the (a) status and (b) performance of the Accounts Commission; and if he will make a statement. [50868]

Mr. Macdonald: Our Manifesto commitment confirms that we are willing to consider extra powers for the Accounts Commission, within Best Value, to monitor local authority performance and promote efficiency. The Scottish Office is currently undertaking the quinquennial Policy and Financial Management Review of the Accounts Commission. This will examine how well the Commission is working, provide reassurance that it is producing the required outputs at an appropriate price and identify any areas for corrective action.

Local Government Officers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of local government officers retired before normal retirement age in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [50870]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Local Authorities (Auditing)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each Scottish local authority the number of staff employed in the internal audit department in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997; and if he will make a statement. [50871]

Mr. Macdonald: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the planned Scottish Office expenditure for the financial years 1999–2000 to 2001–2002 in cash and real terms by category of expenditure as expressed in table 1.4 of Serving Scotland's Needs, the Government's Expenditure Plans 1998–99, in 1997–98 prices using the GDP deflator, (b) the cumulative spending planned from 1999–2000 under each category in real terms and the total cumulative spending over this period in 1997–98 prices using the GDP deflator and (c) the difference between these cumulative totals and the amount that would have been spent (i) by category and (ii) for the total Scottish block equivalent assuming that spending was maintained at 1994–95 levels in real terms at current prices using the GDP deflator. [51219]

Mr. Dewar: The tables show the information requested on total Scottish Office expenditure in a format reflecting the new public expenditure control arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1195–201. It is worth noting that direct comparisons of spending levels in 1994–95 with CSR plans are not meaningful. Definitional changes mean that the comparison is not truly like for like, and the 1994–95 levels of spending were not sustainable given the associated levels of public borrowing.

[1] Under the new public expenditure control arrangements and devolution, the Barnett formula used to determine Scottish expenditure applies to the Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) in place of the former Scottish Block. Full details of the definitional changes between the DEL and the Control Total were given in the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998", published in June
[2] Includes provision for the Crown Office, which will be within the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament
[3] Total budget assigned to the Scottish Parliament. There are some differences between the coverage of the Assigned Budget and the former Scottish Block, the main one being the exclusion of non-domestic rates. Figures here include expenditure on Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance of around £37 million per year which is included in the DEL but excluded from the Assigned Budget for control purposes until 1999–2000
[4] Includes around £1 million for the New Deal for Young People in 1997–98 and £3 million for Childcare in 1998–99
[5] Total expenditure financed by the Windfall Tax and administered by the Scottish Office. The majority of expenditure on the New Deal is administered for all of Great Britain by DfEE and DSS. Total expenditure in Scotland on the New Deal is projected to be over £450 million in the period 1997–2002
[6] Figures for future years uprated in line with the RPI
[7] Total Scottish public spending within the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament or administered by the Scottish Executive

[1] Includes non-domestic rate payments, which are outside the DEL
[2] The requirement that local authorities must use 50 per cent. of non-housing capital receipts to redeem debt will be abolished from 1 August 1998. This will allow local authorities to raise an estimated £75 million per annum extra from asset sales
[3] Includes market support under the CAP, which is outside the DEL
[4] Reflects the new Resource Accounting treatment of student loans announced in the "Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998", hence it includes total expenditure on student grants, but only the subsidy element of student loans
[5] Expenditure funded through the Capital Receipts Initiative is now included in the DEL. Housing figures also include Housing Support Grant, which is outside the DEL
[6] This line covers Industry, enterprise and training expenditure administered by the Scottish Office only. Further expenditure administered by other departments on the New Deal is projected to be around £75 million in 1998–99, and almost £90 million per year in each of 1999–2000 to 2001–02
[7] A large proportion of spending on law, order and protective services is included under central government support to local authorities
[8] Includes support to nationalised industries
[9] Includes around £1 million for the New Deal for Young People in 1997–98 and £3 million for Childcare in 1998–99. Additional support for schools' capital expenditure is included in support for non-housing local authority capital expenditure above
[10] The cost of water services in 1994–95 was included in central government capital support to local authorities, but from 1996–97 responsibility switched to the water authorities, whose external finance is included under other environmental services

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 139, on his plans for allocating total expenditure within his responsibility, if he will give a breakdown of the figure for other environmental services. [51562]

Mr. Dewar: The Other Environmental Services programme covers a wide range of activities. The detailed allocation of resources among the various activities is currently being finalised and will be announced in due course.

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming Prior Options review of the Registers of Scotland Executive Agency. [51918]

Mr. Dewar: In accordance with the Government's policy on periodic reviews of Executive Agencies, my Department will shortly commence a thorough review of the Registers of Scotland Executive Agency. The remit for this review will be as follows:

to carry out a prior options review of the Registers of Scotland in accordance with Cabinet Office (OPS) guidance and the agreed timetable, by

(a) re-examining the status options considered before the Agency was created, in the light of experience and of any changes in internal or external circumstances;

(b) testing rigorously whether the Agency function is required at all, and the scope for privatising, contracting-out (which could include market testing), transferring the functions to another body, continuation of Agency status or transferring the functions to The Scottish Office;

(c) consulting widely among the key players in the Agency (management and staff) and The Scottish Office, as well as customers, other interested bodies and other suppliers of similar services;

(d) assessing each option in terms of practicability and value for money; and

(e) making recommendations accordingly to the Secretary of State for Scotland.

In order to help ensure that all options are considered fully, comments from interested parties will be welcome. Comments should be sent by 30 September 1998 to the address below. The results of the Review will be published in late Spring or early Summer.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of pupils assisted under the assisted places scheme in the 1997–98 school session by their area of residence on a parliamentary constituency basis. [51919]

Mr. Wilson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the amount of money that each local authority in Scotland will be able to spend on non-housing capital for each year between 1998–99 and 2001–02 as a result of the abolition of the rule requiring local authorities to use 50 per cent. of non-housing capital receipts to redeem debt. [51670]

Mr. Macdonald: No estimate has been made at an individual local authority level because receipts raising ability varies throughout the country. At an all Scotland level we estimate that local authorities will be able to raise, on average, an additional £75 million per annum following the abolition of the debt redemption rules on non-housing capital.

Employment (Irvine)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to visit Irvine to discuss local employment prospects. [49926]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend visited Irvine on 24 June. While no further visits have yet been arranged, he and I are fully aware of the economic problems in the town and we are keeping in close touch with developments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Territories (Citizenships)

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to make an announcement on the issue of British citizenship for residents of overseas territories. [50943]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Government are looking at the issue sympathetically, but more work needs to be done before any announcement can be made. The results of this review will be made public in the forthcoming White Paper on the Overseas Territories.

East Timor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning a possible phased withdrawal of Indonesian forces from East Timor. [51774]

Mr. Fatchett: Indonesian leaders have referred to the possibility of troop reductions in East Timor as a confidence-building measure in the context of the UN talks.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has made any financial contribution to the Foreign Policy Centre since its establishment. [51791]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: No.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to provide no financial assistance to the Foreign Policy Centre. [51792]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no plans to provide financial assistance to the Foreign Policy Centre.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what direct discussions his Department has had with the SPLA in Southern Sudan. [51772]

Mr. Fatchett: Officials keep in regular contact with the Sudan People's Liberation Army both in London and Nairobi.

I myself met representatives of the SPLM/A in The Hague on 18 June and in Nairobi on 14 July.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department was first informed of the impending famine in Southern Sudan by (a) the Sudanese Government and (b) other sources. [51771]

Mr. Fatchett: We first saw predictions of severe problems in Bahr al Ghazhal in December 1997, with the release of the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) Crop Assessment and the draft UN Coordinated Appeal.

We can find no trace of any earlier warnings from the Government of Sudan.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review, if he will list the outdated premises referred to in the chapter on his Department. [51558]

Mr. Fatchett: There is no definitive list at present. The FCO intends to use the flexibility provided by the Comprehensive Spending Review to rationalise and modernise the estate, at home and overseas. We want to make key British missions overseas showcases for modern Britain.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review if he will list the assets worth £90 million referred to in the chapter on his Department. [51559]

Mr. Fatchett: There is no definitive list at present. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review the FCO now has the flexibility, during the next three years, to recycle up to £90 million gross receipts from the disposal of properties. We will use a series of indicators to measure the performance of all our assets and will use the results to rationalise our estate. Decisions to sell will be taken in the light of value for money considerations including local market conditions, prevailing exchange rates and the cost of reproviding alternate property.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review, if he will list the range of reforms and efficiency improvements referred to in the chapter on his Department. [51560]

Mr. Fatchett: The reforms and efficiency measures we shall be taking include:

- introduction of industry standard IT
- modernisation of the communications network including introduction of global e-mail
- rationalisation of the estate in UK and abroad
- brigading in-house service providers into a unified service organisation
- further devolution of financial resources
- modernisation of financial arrangements for Government Hospitality Fund and review of in-house hospitality and conference provision
- costs/benefits review of creating additional Business Units.

Parking Fines

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish figures recording the number of parking fines incurred by diplomatic missions and organisations in London during 1997. [51895]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: During 1997 the London diplomatic missions and organisations incurred a total of 2,480 unpaid parking fines. In 1996 the figure was 1,674. In April this year the Foreign and Commonwealth Office wrote to all diplomatic missions and organisations to give them an opportunity to pay off all outstanding parking tickets, or appeal to have the ticket cancelled. Since then payments totalling £84,665.00 have been received, compared with £48,640.00 in 1997. The table shows only missions which have 11 or more fines outstanding.

Hong Kong

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the third of the reports to Parliament on Hong Kong and the Implementation of the Joint Declaration. [51896]

Mr. Fatchett: The third report in this series, covering the period January-July 1998, was published today and a copy of the report has been placed in the Library. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend the report to the House.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the sums, identified by the European Commission in document COM (98) 39 as being available for the information strategy for the euro in 1998, is planned to be spent in the UK. [49757]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will continue to talk to the Commission about the scope for further help with our campaign for raising business awareness for 1 January 1999. However, there are no funds from the 1998 Prince budget specifically set aside for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many lecturers from the European Commission group Groupeuro have spoken in meetings in the United Kingdom; and what has been the cost to the EU budget; [49756]

(2) what was the total cost of printing and distributing the information pack InfEuro; [49760]

(3) what sums have been paid by the European Commission to the Association for the Monetary Union of Europe. [49759]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

These questions should be addressed to the European Commission.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the outcome of the review of Social Fund provision for victims of disasters, with special reference to flood victims in Northampton. [51162]

Mr. Denham: We have now completed the review. It identified inconsistencies in the interpretation of current guidance. In particular, on some occasions, too little weight was given to the exceptional stress caused to families by natural disasters. As a result, we have issued a bulletin to Benefits Agency Social Fund staff today, giving advice on a more flexible interpretation of existing Secretary of State's guidance covering the conditions for award of community care grants. This advice will be put into effect immediately.

Persons whose applications have already been decided may, if they remain dissatisfied, seek a review, or a further review where a review has already taken place. Although the primary legislation governing the Social Fund is not being changed, and all awards will have to fall within Social Fund rules, we anticipate that this will improve the extent of help from the Social Fund given to all victims of disasters, including, of course, people affected by floods in Northampton.

Child Benefit (Payment Cards)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 640, how many post offices have been paying child benefit by payment card for more than three months; and if she will estimate the savings which have accrued. [51499]

Mr. Field: All 204 post offices involved in the limited trial have been paying Child Benefit by Payment Card for more than three months. We estimate that the new system, which includes an Order Book Control Service, has, to date, achieved £1 million in fraud savings.

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Christchurch dated 27 April about overpayment of winter fuel rebates; [51494]

(2) when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Christchurch dated 20 March about winter fuel payments. [51493]

Mr. Field: Replies were sent to the hon. Member on 17 July 1998.

Residential Care (Liable Relative Payments)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many spouses whose partner has gone into residential or nursing care are currently required by (a) the Benefits Agency, broken down by region and (b) local authorities, broken down by authority to make a liable relative payment; [51507]

(2) if she will make available the guidance the Benefits Agency uses in order to decide whether to pursue a liable relative payment from a spouse whose partner has gone into residential or nursing care. [51506]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Liable Relative Payments for benefit recipients is a matter Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Codling to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 20 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many spouses whose partner has gone into residential or nursing care are currently required by (a) the Benefits Agency broken down by region and (b) local authorities broken down by individual authority to make a liable relative payment; and if she will make available the guidance the Benefits Agency uses in order to decide whether to pursue a liable relative payment from a spouse whose partner has gone into residential or nursing care. As Mr. Mathison is on annual leave, I am replying.

The statistical information requested is not available. The Benefits Agency (BA) only maintain statistics relating to the number of cases where a liability has been determined and a contribution obtained. The statistics requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. I am unable to comment on whether Local Authorities maintain statistics relating to contributions towards Community Care as this is a matter for the individual Local Authorities.

An issue of liability where a spouse has gone into a residential care or nursing home is considered in the same manner as any other case where there is a question of liability. The decision reached, within the existing legislation, will be dependent on the individual circumstances of the spouse who has not entered care. Factors such as the age, health and financial position are considered in all cases during the negotiation of maintenance payments.

The guidance concerning the issues to be considered when deciding whether to pursue a liable relative payment are not currently in the public domain. They are restricted under Paragraph 4(b) of the Code of Open Government Practice. As with other investigation guides, this is because whilst many liable relatives provide an accurate declaration of their circumstances to allow a balanced decision on whether they are in a position to contribute financially towards the maintenance of their spouse, the availability of this guidance has always been restricted to minimise the possibility of abuse.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Benefits Agency (Letters)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the clarity of language used in Benefits Agency letters sent to claimants. [50080]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 20 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if she will review the clarity of language used in Benefits Agency (BA) letters sent to claimants.

The BA has a commitment to producing documents in plain English.

In 1992 the Agency started to review the language used in 1,200 standard letters which are issued from its offices. The aim was to ensure that they are written in plain English. The exercise was completed in 1994.

The Agency has also produced the 'Letter Writer's Kit' which gives advice to staff on writing letters in plain English. This was issued in 1992 and is available to all staff.

The BA is aware that there is still room for improvement. In line with Active Modern Service, the BA is improving its information material, to make it more customer focused and accessible. Currently, this means making the contents of leaflets clearer and better signposted, targeting the information in a customer rather than a system led way and reducing the number of products overall. Shortly, the project aims to put systems in place to ensure that information is consistent across all information products and that staff give high quality advice and information. This will include improving the quality of letters issued to our customers.

The long term aim will be to sustain the improvements and build effective and appropriate electronic communications and information systems which remain customer focused.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Respite Care

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria benefits agencies are required to follow when making payments of retirement pension and attendance allowance to those who are taking regular respite care; and if she will make a statement. [51426]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Retirement Pension and Attendance Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Codling to Mr. Paul Keetch, dated 20 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what criteria benefits agencies are required to follow when making payments of retirement pension (RP) and attendance allowance (AA) to those who are taking regular respite care. As Mr. Mathison is on annual leave, I am replying.

The Benefits Agency is required to apply the legislation governing the payment of benefits to customers in respite care.

Payment of AA will not be affected by respite care unless the time spent in such care is greater than twenty eight days. If the first period spent in respite care is twenty eight days or less, AA will only be affected if the customer re-enters respite care during the following twenty eight days.

Periods spent in respite care not interrupted by a period of more than twenty eight days are added together. When the time spent in such care totals twenty eight days, AA is withdrawn from the next pay day unless those circumstances no longer apply.

Payment of RP will not be affected unless the time spent in respite care is greater than forty two days, after which time benefit is reduced. A further reduction is made after fifty two weeks in respite care.

If the first period spent in respite care is forty two days or less, RP will only be affected if the customer re-enters respite care during the following twenty eight days.

Periods spent in respite care not interrupted by a period of more than twenty eight days are added together. When the time spent in respite care adds up to twenty eight days, RP is reduced from the next pay day unless those circumstances no longer apply.

I hope that this is helpful.

Disabled Facilities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much each London borough council spent in the provision of disabled facilities in homes in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [50904]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

Expenditure on the provision of disabled facilities in residential care or nursing homes is not held centrally. Gross expenditure reported by local authority social services departments in 1996–97 on disability equipment for people in their own homes, and on adaptations to homes is set out in the table, for the City of London and London Boroughs. Further information on local authority personal social services expenditure in 1996–97 is available in the form of computer tables on the DH World Wide Web pages [Internet reference http:\\www.open.gov.uk/doh/public/pss_stat.htm] for all local authorities in England. Data for 1997–98 are not yet available.

The amount spent by London Borough housing departments on the provision of adaptations and disabled facilities mainly to owners and tenants in the private sector using Disabled Facilities Grants is estimated to have been £15.9 million in 1996–97 and £13.6 million in 1997–98. These estimates are based on data provided to the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions which are however, incomplete. Information is not available on the amount spent by London Borough housing departments on the provision of adaptations and disabled facilities to council housing using their own capital resources.

TREASURY

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1998, Official Report, column 331, on pensions mis-selling, what factors underlay his decision that the mis-selling of personal pensions was not a matter solely for the relevant regulatory body. [51581]

Mrs. Liddell: It is for the regulator to assess the extent of any mis-selling and to decide what, if any, corrective action is necessary.

Departmental Accountants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many accountants are employed in his Department. [51291]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: 25 staff currently employed by HM Treasury are full members or passed finalists for one of the Institutes in the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies.

Marriage Certificates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to require marriage certificates to include details of both parents of groom and bride; and what representations he has received from equal opportunities groups on this issue. [51471]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The Government propose to introduce legislation to phase in new marriage registers and reform the registration services in England and Wales when Parliamentary time allows. A certificate is a certified copy of the entry in the register.

No representations have been received from equal opportunities groups on this matter.

Duty-free Sales

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what transitional measures he has put in place in respect of the abolished duty-free sales. [49973]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The nature of the duty paid regime which will operate following the abolition of intra-EU duty-free sales is under discussion at official level in the EU Excise Committee. Customs and Excise are consulting with UK trade interests to help inform the UK position. Once discussions at Community level are finalised Customs will work with the UK trade to address the necessary practical arrangements for implementation.

PEPs (Pensioners)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt pensioners who do not currently pay tax from changes to arrangements for personal equity plans. [50671]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 16 July 1998]: Existing PEPs held at 5 April 1999 will continue to be free of income tax and capital gains tax after that date. Pensioners and others who currently pay no tax on investments held in PEPs will still pay no tax.

International Debt

Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by country the amounts of (a) interest and (b) principal received by United Kingdom private banks, in each year since 1979, from (i) all developing countries that report under the Debtor reporting System of the World Bank, (ii) Afghanistan, (iii) Antigua and Barbuda, (iv) Bahrain, (v) Cuba, (vi) Gibraltar, (vii) Iraq, (viii) Kiribati, (ix) the Democratic Republic of Korea, (x) Libya, (xi) Namibia, (xii) Saudi Arabia and (xiii) Surinam. [51428]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The Government do not keep records of what UK private banks receive from their debtors.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by country the amounts of debt relief given by the United Kingdom Government since 1979 to (a) each developing country which reports under the Debtor reporting System of the World Bank, (b) Afghanistan, (c) Antigua and Barbuda, (d) Bahrain, (e) Cuba, (f) Gibraltar, (g) Iraq, (h) Kiribati, (i) the Democratic Republic of Korea, (j) Libya, (k) Namibia, (l) Saudi Arabia and (m) Suriname. [51425]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: It would require disproportionate effort to list country by country the amount of debt relief—including debt reschedulings and debt reductions—that ECGD has given since 1979. However. ECGD has given debt write offs since Financial Year 1992/3. The tables shows the principal of debt written off since that date in £ millions. No other countries have received debt write offs from ECGD.

National Savings

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what performance targets have been set for National Savings for 1998–99. [51894]

Mrs. Liddell: National Savings has as its declared aim to add value by helping to reduce the costs to the taxpayer of Government borrowing and by supporting Government savings policies. This is supported by three objectives:

i) to market Government debt to retail investors so as to help minimise the combined cost and risk of the total National Debt and to contribute to the Government's funding needs

ii) to promote Government Savings policies amongst personal investors

iii) in meeting these objectives the Agency will operate cost-effectively and in a competitive and commercial manner without distorting the market[1].

During 1998–99 National Savings will be set the following challenging targets:

i) To work within the terms of the funding remit for 1998–99

ii) To improve the efficiency of customer transaction processes by 3 per cent.

iii) To achieve a 97 per cent. outturn against all NS published timeliness targets

iv) To achieve overall accuracy level of 97 per cent. of purchases and repayments

v) To show 95 per cent. of customers surveyed are satisfied or very satisfied with service provided by NS

vi) To complete the project to deliver Year 2000 compliant systems throughout NS by 31 December 1998

vii) To make a recommendation to the EST about the conclusion of the public-private-partnership project by 31 October 1998

viii) To develop arrangements for future provision of operational services accommodation that maximise value for money by 31 March 1999

ix) To maintain Investors in People accreditation covering at least 95 per cent. of workforce with substantial progress towards 100 per cent. coverage

x) To successfully conclude investigation and resolution of outstanding issues related to NAO report on financial reporting by 30 November 1998

[1] These are the aim and objectives revised as part of the CSR in June 1998. They are different to those set out in the Debt management report and NS Annual Report.

The funding remit sets out the costs and volume assumption that National Savings works to. The remit was published in the Debt Management report issued in March 1998, and has since been amended to reflect the Government's latest financial requirement, as set out in Annex 4B of the EFSR report, Cm 3978.

Working Families Tax Credit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the working families tax credit will count as public expenditure for the purpose of the spending totals announced in his Economic and Fiscal Strategy report 1998. [50129]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of the expenditure on working families tax credit is included in social security expenditure as set out in page 167 of the Comprehensive Spending Review; [51247]

(2) how much he estimates the working families tax credit will cost in terms of (a) expenditure and (b) tax forgone in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [51426]

Mr. Darling [holding answers 20 July 1998]: Following existing national accounts conventions, the element of the Working Families Tax Credits (WFTC) payment that exceeds the tax paid by the individual taxpayer is treated as Government expenditure in Public Sector Current Expenditure, Annually Managed Expenditure, Total Managed Expenditure and General Government Expenditure. The balance is treated as tax forgone. This expenditure proportion is estimated to be 80 per cent. of the total cost of WFTC.

However, as the WFTC is to be part of the Income Tax system and will be paid by the Inland Revenue through the pay package as an Income Tax credit, the Government will, as stated in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, treat the whole of the WFTC payments, as Income Tax credits in the calculation of Net Taxes and Social Security Contributions.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 62, (47484) what would be the circumstances in which a family with an income of £31,000 and above could receive Working Families Tax Credit; and what would be the highest possible income. [50880]

Dawn Primarolo: A family with two children and maximum eligible child care costs of £150 would still be receiving some WFTC with family income of £31,000. However, the highest possible level of family income which will be supplemented by the WFTC depends on the number, and age, of the children in the family. For example, if the family had five children under 11 rather than two, it would still receive some WFTC with family income of around £38,000.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage of working families with children who will be eligible to receive (a) 70 per cent. and (b) some of their child care costs through the child care tax credit in the working families tax credit. [50582]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 553–54. The latest estimate of the cost of the child care tax credit in the WFTC is £200 million in 2000–01 (the first full year of the tax credit).

Landfill Tax

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate the cost to public funds of diverting unclaimed tax credits from the landfill tax, not taken for environmental projects, to other environmental research. [50653]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the landfill tax environmental bodies credit scheme, registered persons who make contributions to approved environmental bodies may claim a credit of landfill tax of 90 per cent. of their contribution, up to a total of 20 per cent. of their annual landfill tax liability. If registered persons choose not to make contributions up to the maximum for which they can claim credit, there is no provision for the Government to allocate the unclaimed credit to other environmental research. The additional cost of such a scheme would vary according to the amount of unclaimed tax credit in any one year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Customs and Excise received from the landfill tax in the first year of its operation; and how much of the 20 per cent. reserved for environmental projects under the Environmental Trust was used for this purpose. [50650]

Dawn Primarolo: Persons registered for landfill tax may claim tax credits of 90 per cent. against contributions made to approved environmental bodies, up to a total of 20 per cent. of their annual tax liability, in each "contribution year". Contribution years are aligned with registered persons' landfill tax accounting periods, and do not necessarily coincide with the financial year. Credits claimed relating to the first contribution year amounted to £69 million. In the same period (1 October 1996 to 30 September 1997), total landfill tax revenue gross of claims to environmental bodies credits was £396 million, giving rise to a maximum credit that could have been claimed of £79 million. Therefore, some 77 per cent. of available credits were taken up.

Tobacco

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action HM Customs and Excise is taking to prevent the illegal import and sale of tobacco products. [50728]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs deploy anti-smuggling staff and specialist Excise Verification Officers to tackle, as a priority, the smuggling and onward sale of illicit excise goods, including tobacco products both at the frontier and inland. These officers are supported by specialist intelligence and investigation staff and work closely with other agencies such as the police and the Benefit Agency in dealing with offenders. Customs detections of illicit tobacco products increased from £17.7 million (duty evaded) in 1996–97 to £41.8 million in 1997–98.

Tougher policies on prosecution and restoration of seized vehicles of offenders were introduced in April. In addition the Comprehensive Spending Review has given additional funding to Customs to implement the recommendations of the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review, which I asked Customs to undertake in consultation with the trade to consider how to tackle this serious problem. Further details of this will be published shortly.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from each of the taxes payable on each category of tobacco products in the last year for which figures are available. [51484]

Dawn Primarolo: The amount of revenue raised in the financial year 1997–98 for each of the taxes payable on each category of tobacco products were:

£ million

	Excise duty	VAT
Cigarettes	8,009.7	1,830
Cigars	139.8	135
Hand rolling tobacco	158.1
Other smoking and chewing tobacco	48.4

Notes:

1. Excise duty receipts are provisional.
2. Value Added Tax has been estimated from Office for National Statistics figures for consumers expenditure on cigarettes and other tobacco. No separate figures are available for the amount of VAT raised on cigars, hand rolling and other smoking and chewing tobacco.

Government Lending (Russia)

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the British Government's contribution to lending to the IMF under the General Arrangements to Borrow for the purpose of providing support to the Russian Government; and what effect such lending will have on the British Government's public accounts. [50922]

Mrs. Liddell: We welcome and support the agreement between the IMF and Russian Government to strengthen Russia's economy. As part of the agreement, Russia will reduce its budget deficit to 2.8 per cent. of GDP in 1999, reform its tax system, and deepen structural reforms in key areas such as corporate governance, the utilities and the banking sector. Russia will also restructure its debt, by converting part of its high-yielding treasury bill debt into lower interest rate dollar debt. Once Russia has fulfilled the necessary prior measures, we are ready to join other countries in providing the significant increase in funds that is needed, and to support the programme at the IMF Board meeting on 20 July. Russia's new fiscal and structural measures, the substantial new financial package, and the debt conversion scheme should significantly improve Russia's financial position and economic fundamentals.

The total financial package is worth $22.6 billion (at the current SDR exchange rate) in 1998 and 1999, of which $17.1 billion is new commitments. The IMF's share of the total is $15.1 billion. Of this, $8.4 billion is likely to be financed by activating the General Arrangements to Borrow (GAB), of which the UK's share is 10 per cent.

This loan to the IMF under the GAB is not public expenditure. It is a liquid asset that is guaranteed by the IMF. It earns interest at the SDR interest rate, which reflects market rates on prime financial instruments in the five countries whose currencies are represented in the SDR basket (US, Germany, Japan, France and UK) weighted by their shares in the SDR basket.

A loan under the GAB would be issued out of the National Loans Fund and will score as part of the UK's official reserves.

Civil Servants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise. [50896]

Mrs. Liddell: Five civil servants in HM Treasury are recorded as having degrees in physics. No post in the Department specifically requires scientific expertise.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to establish a co-ordinating committee for those EU members not participating in Stage Three of Economic and Monetary Union. [51265]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have no plans to establish a co-ordinating committee for those EU Member States not participating in Stage Three of Economic and Monetary Union. Under the terms of the Treaty, ECOFIN, which involves all Member States, is the primary decision making body on all economic and financial matters.

Earnings

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list for (a) Scotland, (b) each of the Scottish unitary authorities, the average weekly earnings and weekly median earnings for (i) manual workers, (ii) non-manual workers and (iii) all workers; [50972]

(2) if he will list for (a) Scotland, (b) each Scottish unitary authority and (c) Great Britain, the percentage of workers on adult rates of pay in part-time employment whose average hourly earnings (i) including and (ii) excluding overtime are less than (1) £4.61, (2) £6.15, (3) £6.60 and (4) average hourly earnings for (A) male manual, (B) male non-manual, (C) male, (D) female manual, (E) female non-manual, (F) female, (G) manual, (H) non-manual and (I) all workers; [50970]

(3) if he will list for (a) Scotland, (b) each Scottish unitary authority and (c) Great Britain the amount of average earnings in the (1) bottom and (2) top decile for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all workers; [50973]

(4) if he will list the average weekly earnings, (a) including and (b) excluding overtime, for part-time workers in (i) Scotland, (ii) each unitary local authority area in Scotland and (iii) Great Britain, broken down for (1) men and (2) women in (A) manual employment and (B) non-manual employment indicating the total figures for all workers. [50971]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Alasdair Morgan, dated 21 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary questions (50970, 50971, 50972 and 50973) on earnings in the Scottish unitary local authority areas, Scotland and Great Britain.

The information requested can only be provided at disproportionate cost. There is a considerable amount of data (from the New Earnings Survey 1997) available in the House of Commons library. This includes various distribution ranges of hourly earnings excluding overtime, by location. Areas covered range from parliamentary constituencies and local authority districts to Government Office regions and Great Britain.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in Derbyshire currently earn less than the proposed national minimum wage, broken down by (a) gender, (b) age, (c) ethnic origin and (d) full or part-time employment. [51054]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 21 July 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the estimated number of people in Derbyshire who earn less than the proposed minimum wage.

The national minimum wage (NMW) will become effective in April 1999 and has been set at £3.60 for employees aged over 21. A development rate of £3.00 per hour will apply for employees aged 18 to 21. The proposals also include a provision for a rate of £3.20 which will apply to those over 21 years receiving accredited training during the first six months of a new job with a new employer, but we are unable to provide data on this. Workers aged 16 and 17 and all those on apprenticeships will be exempt.

The Low Pay Commission, in arriving at their recommendations, had to adjust 1999 pay rates to 1997 values. Their methodology produces £3.40 and £2.80 as the 1997 values of the government's preferred rates and I have provided supplementary data for these levels.

The New Earnings Survey (NES) does not collect information on the ethnic origin of employees, therefore figures for this element of the question cannot be given.

The preferred method for assessing the coverage of the proposed NMW is to present adjusted NES and Labour Force Survey (LFS) data for the number of employees earning less than the proposed NMW rates. This method adjusts for the fact that the NES is based on a one per cent. sample of employees in the PAYE system and is therefore likely to under-represent relatively low paid staff, earning below the tax-threshold, and in particular those who work part-time. It is not possible to use this method for small areas and, where available, data, solely from the NES have been provided in the attached tables.

The extent of the bias in the NES data may be estimated for the East Midlands by using the adjusted NES and LFS data for all employees. This suggests that the estimate of the overall proportion of full-time employees aged over 21 years earning below £3.60 could understate the true position by as much as 4 percentage points. However, because the bias has been estimated on the basis of all employees, it would be wise to treat this figure as broadly indicative rather than as a precise estimate for full-time employees.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the average weekly payments for the tax year (1) 1996–97, (2) 1997–98 and (3) 1998–99 for (i) national insurance contributions and (ii) income tax for a single person on (a) 87 per cent., (b) 116 per cent. and (c) 174 per cent. of median gross male full-time earnings; [47110]

(2) if he will provide latest estimates of the average weekly payments for the tax year (1) 1996–97, (2) 1997–98 and (3) 1998–99 for (i) national insurance contributions and (ii) income tax for a married couple, male earning and female not earning, with two children, on total family earnings of each of (a) 87 per cent., (b) 116 per cent. and (c) 174 per cent. of median gross male full-time earnings; [47109]

(3) if he will provide latest estimates of the average weekly payments for the tax years (1) 1996–97, (2) 1997–98 and (3) 1998–99 for (i) national insurance contributions and (ii) income tax for a married couple, male earning and female not earning, with no children, on total family earnings of (a) 87 per cent., (b) 116 per cent. and (c) 174 per cent. of median gross male full-time earnings; [47111]

Dawn Primarolo: The data requested are given in the table. Changes in tax and NICs payments reflect earnings growth over the 2 years. The numbers do not include the working families tax credit and NICs changes announced in the Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–1112.

2. Earnings are based on £342.3 in 1996–97, £358.6 in 1997–98 and £374.8 in 1998–99.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to reply to the questions on direct taxes by household types tabled on 18 June 1998 by the hon. Member for Horsham. [51658]

Dawn Primarolo: I have done so today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications and Broadcasting (Convergence)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to consult on the regulatory implications of the convergence of telecommunications and broadcasting. [51808]

Mrs. Beckett: I have today, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, published a Green Paper 'Regulating Communications: Approaching Convergence in the Information Age' (Command Paper 4022).

Gas and Electricity Charges

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to ensure that low-income consumers will benefit from the introduction of competition in the gas and electricity supply industries. [51747]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply gave him on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 402.

Business Links

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to encourage a secondment scheme from private sector firms to Business Links. [50016]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Many local Business Link partners have developed relationships with banks, accountants, and other professional bodies, which have resulted in successful local secondment arrangements.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to refocus the network of Business Links to offer specialised financial advice to small business. [50017]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The Business Link Service Guide already requires all Business Links to provide an impartial and independent "Financial Packaging Service" to small and medium businesses. This provides initial financial health checks and managed access to appropriate private sector providers of financial services. The key to all Business Link services is that they are tailored to the individual needs of the clients.

The Department is working closely with Business Links and others to continue to develop these services.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Erewash (Liz Blackman) of 2 June 1997, Official Report, column 19, what proposals she has to reform the Business Links network to make it more responsive to the needs of small and medium businesses; and if she will make a statement. [50012]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 July 1998]: At the Business Link National Conference on 7 October 1997, I launched my strategy for enhancing Business Links, "A Vision for the 21st Century". It sets out an Agenda for Action which seeks to raise overall standards and bring all Business Links up to the level of the best. The Vision set out five key areas for improvement, including ensuring that they provide an appropriate service for all small and medium businesses.

Exports (China)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government are taking to help British industry boost its exports to China. [50730]

Mrs. Roche: Following the designation of China as a priority market under the DTI's Export Initiative, an independent review was carried out of China trade promotion. I am placing a copy of the review in the Library of the House. The review's recommendations about strengthening the support provided to business by the DTI and the China Britain Trade Group are being considered. We intend, over the next few months, to upgrade significantly the quality of support and advice provided to ensure that British companies are in the strongest possible position to tackle this important and challenging market.

Companies House

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what impact the relocation of Companies House to Bloomsbury Street will have on the number of staff employed by the Insolvency Service at that site. [49969]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 17 July 1998]: I am advised that relocation of the London Search Room of Companies House, as a result of its lease expiring at City Road, will have no effect on the number of staff currently employed by The Insolvency Service at Bloomsbury Street.

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 640, when, and for what reasons, the plans for an implementation date of 1999 for the ICL Pathway Project were changed; and if she will make a statement. [51496]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It was always expected that the original planning assumptions for this project would be tested and reviewed as the programme moved forward.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for the future of the Pathway initiative for the electronic payment of social security benefits through sub-post offices. [50924]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My officials, together with those from the Department of Social Security and HM Treasury, are monitoring the progress of this important PFI project, as is normal with projects of this kind. The Post Office and the Benefits Agency continue to work closely with ICL Pathway to bring the project to a successful conclusion.

Car Prices

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department has taken to establish the factors underlying differences in the retail price of identical models of new cars as between the United Kingdom and (a) other EU countries and (b) the USA; and if she will make a statement. [50857]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 16 July 1998]: Following an initiative by the Government at the meeting of the European Finance Ministers in March at York, the European Commission is carrying out an investigation in to prices disparities between different EU markets for a range of products and services, including cars. My Department is not currently undertaking a detailed investigation in relation to the USA.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many letters per day her office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50693]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159. Few if any staff in the Department are employed solely to answer correspondence: a large number of staff will do so as part of their normal duties.

Timber Industry

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total amount of timber imported into the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years by country of origin. [50814]

Mrs. Roche: Information on imports, on a country of origin basis, is not available. The table lists the main sources of UK imports of timber in each of the past ten years on a country of despatch basis.

Sub-post Offices

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from the Federation of Sub-Postmasters regarding the development of automated or electronic social security payments through sub-post offices. [51399]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The National Federation of Sub-Postmasters has made clear to my Department its strong support for the Horizon project and the introduction of the proposed Benefit Payment Card. The Federation believes that automation of the counters network is key to its future commercial success and to that of the Federation's members.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on sub-post offices in rural areas of the introduction of electronic or automated social security payments through sub-post offices. [51397]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am satisfied that automation of the Post Office Counters network, which will enable us to introduce a modern, fraud resistant means of paying social security benefits, will also assist the Post Office to secure a viable future for a nationwide network of post offices, to which we remain committed.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had regarding the Pathway private finance initiative and its impact on sub-post offices. [51398]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have had a number of discussions with colleagues and other interested parties about this project which my officials, together with officials from the Department of Social Security and HM Treasury, are continuing to monitor closely.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what change there would be under her minimum wage proposals in the take-home pay of an employee currently on £3 an hour, working a 40 hour week and in receipt of housing benefit and working families tax credit, where the employee is the sole earner in a four person family. [47544]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 June 1998]: The Working Families Tax Credit and the reforms to National Insurance Contributions announced in the Budget will substantially reduce the numbers of families facing very high marginal deduction rates—meaning families will keep more of any increase in their earnings. These reforms, together with the national minimum wage, will boost the returns from work for low paid workers and help to 'make work pay'.

It is not possible to estimate the change in net income in this instance, since that will depend on a number of factors, including: the age of the employee (and therefore the appropriate minimum wage rate applying); the rent they pay; whether they are in receipt of council tax benefit; the age of their children.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish an updated version of his 1998–99 cash expenditure plans as shown in Cm 3904 in the light of the publication of the Comprehensive Spending Review; and if, using the same format, he will publish equivalent data for the next two financial years. [51228]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Ministry's expenditure plans for 1998–99 are not affected by the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review which covers the three years from 1999–2000 to 2001–02. Outline plans for those years will be announced as soon as possible and will be set out in detail in the 1999 MAFF/Intervention Board Departmental Report.

Barn Owls

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to protect barn owls in West Dorset against unintentional poisoning by pesticides. [51671]

Mr. Rooker: The risk to non-target plants and animals, including barn owls, is carefully evaluated before any pesticide is approved for use. Approval is granted only if the risk is sufficiently small, and users are required to follow strict instructions for use which are printed on every product's label.

The need to follow these instructions is emphasised in the Code of Practice for the Safe Use of Pesticides on Farms and Holdings (the "Green Code") which was comprehensively revised and re-issued on 26 March this year. The Code also provides specific advice on the precautions that should be taken to safeguard wildlife and the environment.

We run the Wildlife Incident Investigation Scheme to monitor the impact of the use of agricultural pesticides. Anyone who believes that a wild animal has been unintentionally poisoned by pesticides should report the facts using the freephone number 0800 321 600 so that the incidents can be investigated.

Nobel House, Smith Square

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is the present holder of the lease for Nobel House, Smith Square. [51221]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The lease for Nobel House is vested in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions as is most other leased office accommodation occupied by Government Departments. However, responsibility for all matters connected with the Nobel House lease and management of the property has been devolved to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The landlords of the property are Prudential Property Management.

Turkeys

Mrs. May: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specification governs the use of the terms traditional and free range when applied to turkeys; and to what extent these differ from the specification for the French term Label rouge. [50851]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The distinctions between free range and traditional free range as laid down in the EC Poultry Meat Marketing Regulations are as follows:

Minimum criteria	Free range	Traditional free range
Size of open air runs comprising of an area mainly covered in vegetation, and minimum access during lifetime.	Minimum of 4m² per turkey for at least half their lifetime	Minimum of 6m² per turkey from the age of 8 weeks
Minimum age at slaughter	70 days	140 days. The birds must be of a strain recognised as slow growing
Indoor stocking rate (liveweight per m²)	25 kg maximum	35 kg maximum. The poultry house may not contain more than 2,500 turkeys

We do not have any details of the voluntary Label Rouge term for turkeys but it is our understanding that the criteria may be based on traditional free range or the free-range total freedom term under the regulations. The minimum requirements for the latter term are the same as traditional free range but the birds must have continuous daytime access to open-air runs of an unlimited area.

Rural Affairs

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 499, how many copies of his address, An Integrated Strategy for Rural Affairs, were circulated with the draft title Towards a Ministry of Rural Affairs. [50764]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 July 1998]: None.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from UK fishermen on the need for assistance in the installation of satellite monitoring equipment. [50542]

Mr. Morley: There have been a number of requests from the UK fishing industry for aid to be made available for the purchase and installation of satellite monitoring equipment on fishing vessels.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff and what financial resources were devoted by his Department to fisheries monitoring and protection in the past five years; and if he will estimate the financial resources in each year as a proportion of the overall value of fish landed in each year. [50545]

Mr. Morley: Information about the staff and financial resources devoted to fisheries enforcement and protection by the Ministry is set out in the following table.

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Number of staff (Fishery Inspectors and support staff)	120	122	126	120	114
Estimated cost of enforcement including aerial and surface surveillance	£9,840,670	£10,094,271	£10,655,624	£11,171,718	£10,837,647
Value of landings into England and Wales	£176,213,000	£181,630,000	£191,594,000	£188,674,000	£188,677,000
Expenditure on enforcement as a percentage of the overall value of landings	5.58	5.56	5.56	5.92	5.74

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49809]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Ministry is looking at ways of using Information Technology to improve the way we communicate, particularly with those who have business connections with the work of the Department. While we currently have no formal plans to switch to electronic communication with hon. Members and members of the public, our technology already allows anyone with access to the Internet to correspond electronically with the Department via e-mail.

A wide range of information on the work of the Ministry is available on the Department's internet website which can, of course, be accessed by hon. Members and members of the public. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315.

Ritually Slaughtered Meat

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that hind end ritually slaughtered meat should be labelled. [50334]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 30 June 1998, Official Report, column 152.

Mink

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink were transported from the mink factory farm at Ponteland, Northumberland on 6 July; to what location they were transported; how long they spent on the lorry which transported them; and if they were given food and water during the trip. [49985]

Mr. Morley: The State Veterinary Service were aware of the movement of a number of mink to another licensed premises. Transportation of mink must be in accordance with the requirements of the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997 which, inter alia, lays down that animals such as mink must be suitably fed and watered at appropriate intervals throughout a journey. There is no legal requirement, either under the welfare legislation or the Mink Keeping Order 1997 for any such movements to be notified to the Ministry.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Disability Rights Commission

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to announce the Government's proposals for a Disability Rights Commission. [51840]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government are today publishing a White Paper entitled Promoting Disabled People's Rights: Creating a Disability Rights Commission fit for the 21st Century, setting out their proposals on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission. This has been laid before the House and copies have been placed in the Vote Office.

In our manifesto we stated our support for "comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people."

Accordingly, in October 1997 we announced that we would:

- set up a Task Force to report to the Government on how best to secure those rights;
- implement the remaining provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act; and
- establish a Disability Rights Commission.

The Disability Rights Task Force was set up in December 1997. The Government are very grateful to all the members of the Task Force whose recommendations on a Disability Rights Commission form the basis of this White Paper.

In June, we announced that we would be bringing in the provisions within the Disability Discrimination Act which will require service providers to make reasonable adjustments to make their services accessible to disabled customers in two main stages, in 1999 and 2004.

Our move to establish a Disability Rights Commission is another major step towards fulfilment of our commitment to comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people.

We envisage that the role and functions of the Disability Rights Commission will be broadly similar to those of the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality. Our proposals aim to take account of over twenty years of experience gained by equality Commissions here and abroad in combating discrimination. We want to create a Disability Rights Commission fit for the 21st century.

The Commission will make a large contribution to ending discrimination against disabled people and enabling them to play a full part in society. Discrimination against disabled people remains all too extensive and is totally unacceptable. The Commission will provide disabled people with support to sustain the rights which the law creates for them. It will promote conciliation and, where necessary, enforcement. But its role will also be to promote good practice and educate, and it will provide a central source of information and advice to employers and service providers to assist them in meeting their duties.

We emphasise that we expect that the Commission should not work in an adversarial or oppressive way. There need be no tension between the interests of disabled people and the interests of employers and service providers. The Commission should be seen as supportive of both disabled people and businesses alike. We are proposing that there should be a single Commission in Great Britain but with offices in Scotland and Wales. The Commission will comprise between 10 and 15 Commissioners. Their appointment will comply with the guidance issued by the Office of the Commissioner of Public Appointments.

The Commission must be credible with all stakeholders. The body of Commissioners between them will need to have sufficient diversity of experience to be able to take account of the interests of all disabled people and to reflect the interest of all key stakeholders, including those of small businesses. We intend that at all times a majority of the Commissioners should be disabled.

The Commission will be an independent executive non-departmental public body, subject to the formal management and reporting arrangements and accountabilities laid on such bodies.

The Commission's main duties will be to:

- work towards the elimination of discrimination against disabled people;
- promote the equalisation of opportunities for disabled people with those of non-disabled people;
- promote good practice; and
- advise the Government on the operation of the Disability Discrimination Act and other relevant existing legislation, and any future legislation dealing with discrimination against disabled people, and whether changes need to be made to it.

We will expect the Commission to work in partnership with other organisations and networks which have expertise relating to disability discrimination.

Within this framework of general duties, the Commission's specific functions will be to:

- provide a central source of information and advice, particularly to disabled people, business, and the public and voluntary sectors;
- assist individuals in securing their rights under the Disability Discrimination Act and other relevant domestic legislation, under any legislation resulting from the implementation of relevant European Union directives and under Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights which makes it unlawful to discriminate against disabled people in the enjoyment of their rights under the Convention;
- prepare and review statutory codes of practice containing practical guidance on what is necessary to comply with legislation. The Commission will have a duty to publish a draft of any codes which it prepares for consultation;
- arrange for the provision of an independent conciliation service in respect of access to goods, facilities, services and premises and monitor the performance of that service. The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) will continue to provide conciliation on employment issues.

The Commission will have also the power to undertake formal investigations. Such investigations would normally be reserved for serious and complex situations or issues. There will be adequate safeguards in place to ensure that the rights of those under investigation are not transgressed.

Finally, the Commission will be able to carry out research about issues that fall within its purview.

We believe that a Disability Rights Commission is essential in tackling discrimination against disabled people and promote an inclusive and just society. We invite comments on our White Paper by 16 October and will introduce legislation to establish the Commission as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows.

Sixth Forms

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has commissioned to identify (a) the minimum and (b) the optimum size of sixth forms in schools for the purpose of (i) maintaining a broad and balanced curriculum and (ii) achieving economies of scale. [51144]

Dr. Howells: We have not directly commissioned any research. OFSTED have commented on the minimum number of students needed in a sixth form to provide economically a basic and broader curriculum, most recently in their report on Secondary Education 1993–97 and in more detail in the Effective Sixth Forms report published in 1996.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each maintained 11 to 18 school with a sixth form of fewer than 150 pupils, grouped by local authority. [51145]

Mr. Byers: The 1997 Secondary School Performance Tables contain the number of pupils aged 16 and over (which gives an indication of the size of a school's sixth form) in each maintained 11 to 18 school in each LEA area in England. Copies of the tables are available in the Library.

Deaf People

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps are being taken to explain the benefits of life-long learning to deaf people; and if a video in sign language and sub-titled has been commissioned. [51143]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment published his proposals for the development of lifelong learning for all in the Green Paper, The Learning Age: A Renaissance for a New Britain (Cm 3790), on 25 February. We welcome comments on these proposals from all quarters, including deaf people and organisations which represent them, by 24 July, when the period for consultation closes. We will consider how best to explain further to all groups the benefits of lifelong learning, including the possible use of videos and other materials, in the light of the comments received and other advice.

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a financial contribution to individual learning accounts over and above the £150 from the TEC will be made available to deaf participants to cover the cost of communication support; and what will be the maximum amount available through any such funds to individuals with special needs. [51141]

Dr. Howells: We are currently consulting on the arrangements for individual learning accounts, which will be available to everyone including people with disabilities. The TEC contribution of £150 will be available for the first million accounts and will encourage individuals to take up learning. Some TECs already provide additional funds to help people who need extra assistance to access and benefit from training. There is no reason why this additional funding cannot be used in a learning account to contribute towards the provision of a communicator for deaf people.

Drug Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has (a) to introduce drug awareness lessons to students in primary schools and (b) to increase the time allocated for drug education in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [50926]

Ms Estelle Morris: Certain aspects of drug education are already a statutory requirement of the National Curriculum at all key stages, including the primary key stages. In support of the Government's recently published new 10 year anti-drugs strategy, the Department will be issuing further guidance on the provision of drug education to teachers, youth workers and other professionals later this year. The guidance will outline the vital role that primary schools can play in the very early stages of a child's school career in concentrating on the development of the skills they need to resist before they are drawn into experimentation.

Beyond the requirements of the National Curriculum, it is for individual schools to consider whether, and if so how, they might wish to extend provision for drug education. In addition, within the statutory framework, schools are free to decide for themselves how best to organise drug education for their pupils. We have set up an advisory group on Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) which will advise the Government on strengthening the place of PSHE in the curriculum. Drug education is an important part of PSHE. Our planned guidance will aim to encourage schools to extend their programmes of drug education and develop the approaches which best meet their local situation, taking note of best practice.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the future funding of drug education in secondary schools; and if he will make a statement. [50925]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has made increased support of £7 million available to schools and the youth service this year, to assist primary and secondary schools and the youth service to deliver effective education about drugs. This builds on the £18 million of support made available through the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme in the three years since 1995–96.

We continue to attach great importance to the provision of effective drug education in all schools, and we will continue to work closely with other Government Departments in taking forward the work programme of the new UK anti-drugs strategy, in which education has a major focus, and where we are encouraging a more integrated approach to Personal, Social and Health Education in schools.

New Deal

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how rough sleepers will be (a) recruited to the New Deal and (b) helped off the streets by the New Deal. [51246]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Young people aged 18–24 who are claiming Jobseeker's Allowance and are rough sleepers can choose to enter the New Deal Gateway early, before reaching six months unemployment. The New Deal Gateway includes help from specialist agencies to tackle problems associated with homelessness at the same time as young people are looking for work and, where appropriate, preparing to take a New Deal option.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when statistics for the New Deal will be available on a constituency basis. [50840]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Figures for the New Deal Units of Delivery, reflecting the local partnerships who are delivering the New Deal, are placed in the Library each month. North Dorset constituency falls within the Dorset Unit of Delivery. The Employment Service District Manager in Weymouth and Yeovil, Neil Symons, is happy to discuss with you New Deal in the local area and your constituency.

The hon. Member may also find the Library research paper 'Unemployment by Constituency' published monthly, to be of interest.

Education Spending Statistics

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent per pupil in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each local education authority in 1997–98. [51748]

Mr. Byers: Information on the expenditure per pupil in primary and secondary schools in England at the end of the financial year 1997–98 is not yet available centrally. It will be available when local education authorities publish their out-turn statements in the Autumn. I will write to the hon. Member in due course, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to integrate disabled children into mainstream schools; what resources have been made available to local education authorities under the Schools Access Initiative; and what guidance he has issued in respect of teacher training and retraining in relation to the needs of disabled children in mainstream schools. [51435]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The Green Paper "Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs" set out the Government's view that some children currently educated in special schools would benefit, educationally and socially, from being in mainstream schools, and consulted on priority measures to achieve this. We are considering responses to the Green Paper and expect to publish an action programme for special educational needs (SEN) after the school summer holidays. We have made available support totalling £11 million in financial year 1998–99, to local education authorities, the Funding Agency for Schools and voluntary aided school governing bodies, for projects under the Schools Access Initiative. Our national standards for the award of Qualified Teacher Status, in effect from May 1998, will mean that all newly qualified teachers will be capable of identifying children with SEN and able to differentiate teaching practice appropriately. The Green Paper consulted specifically on how we might raise, through in-service teacher training, the level of teachers' expertise in meeting SEN.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of educating children with special educational needs in mainstream schools. [51436]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The great majority of those commenting on the Green Paper "Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs" supported the principle of greater inclusion of pupils with special educational needs (SEN) within mainstream schools, but emphasised the importance of ensuring that schools were properly equipped for this purpose. We shall take account of all responses, and of the findings of a research project we have commissioned to look at the relative costs and outcomes of different school placements for children with SEN, in drawing up our action programme for special educational needs.

Free School Meals

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of primary school children in Derbyshire are eligible for free school meals; and what was the figure in 1979. [51082]

Mr. Byers: Provisional figures show that 13.6 per cent. of pupils in maintained primary schools in the Derbyshire Local Education Authority area in January 1998 were known to be eligible for free school meals.

Figures for 1979 are not available centrally.

Nursery Grants

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to (a) review the operation of the nursery grants system and (b) replace yearly grants with termly grants; and if he will make a statement. [51632]

Ms Estelle Morris: Specific nursery education grant is paid to local education authorities and early education providers in the private and voluntary sectors termly, allocated on the basis of a termly headcount of the number of eligible four year olds educated at each setting named in an Early Years Development Plan. Every child is eligible for specific grant for three terms before they reach compulsory school age, irrespective of the age at which they are admitted to school.

From 1999 2000 we will be extending the specific grant arrangements to cover three year olds. We will be making £390 million available over three years, almost doubling the number of free places currently available for three year olds.

Independent Schools

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the charitable status of independent schools. [51564]

Mr. Byers: Just over one half of independent schools are charities. Decisions on charitable status for individual bodies are a matter for the Charity Commission within the framework of charity law. We have no plans for legislation to affect the charitable status of independent schools.

Civil Servants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise. [50893]

Dr. Howells: The number of civil servants in the DfEE whose staff records show either a Bachelor or Master of Science degree is 226. Information on whether they have held a position using that expertise can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49845]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Department is able to respond electronically to hon. Members although some hon. Members do not have electronic facilities. There is also some reluctance from some hon. Members to accept letters with an electronic signature. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315, concerning the variety of different methods being tested for the electronic handling of Written Parliamentary Questions.

With regard to communicating electronically with the public, there has been enormous progress. During 1997 the Department received 116,000 letters, and at least 11,000 of those were dealt with electronically. It is anticipated this will increase this year. Not only has the Department responded to inquiries electronically but it has for example, communicated electronically to consult with organisations on policy; deal with applications for work permits; handle requests for funding from the European Social fund and to liaise with Local Education Authorities.

The Department aims to be the flagship in the use of IT in the public sector and anticipates over the coming months that it will continue to expand its electronic communications facilities.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50681]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363, which sets out Departments' and Agencies' performance for 1997. Performance has been monitored against the Central Government service standards and the figures will be made available to the House shortly.

In response to the question on the number of staff employed to deal with the correspondence of the Department. Indeed most staff in the Department deal with correspondence as part of their normal duties.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers have retired on the grounds of ill health in each six month period since 1995. [51164]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of teachers who have retired on the grounds of ill-health, from the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sectors in England and Wales, in each six month period since 1995 are shown in the table.

Retirement date	Ill-health retirements
1 April 1995–30 September 1995	3,300
1 October 1995–31 March 1996	1,900
1 April 1996–30 September 1996	2,900
1 October 1996–31 March 1997	2,600
1 April 1997–30 September 1997	2,400
1 October 1997–31 March 1998	1,100
Total	14,200

HEALTH

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the total cost to the NHS of ensuring millennium compliance in computer systems and other equipment. [47241]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service required health bodies to complete detailed project plans including budget estimates by 31 March 1998.

The returns submitted by health authorities and NHS trusts at the end of March 1998 put the overall cost of remedying Year 2000 problems at around £170 million for information technology and estates infrastructure, with a further £150 million required as a contingency to deal with non-compliant medical equipment (pending compliance information from suppliers).

Maternity Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will include in the Summer guidance on Consultation on Primary Care Groups a statement on how midwives will be included in consultations and subsequent local structures of primary care groups; [49175]

(2) what arrangements he intends to put in place to ensure that midwives are integrated into clinical governance arrangements for primary care groups; [49172]

(3) what arrangements he intends to put in place to ensure that primary care groups develop effective mechanisms for providing women's choice in NHS maternity services; [49174]

(4) what arrangements he intends to put in place to ensure that midwives can take on lead operational roles regarding maternity services in primary care groups; [49171]

(5) if he will issue advice to all health authorities and trusts that midwives should be included in consultations and subsequent local structures of primary care groups; [49176]

(6) what arrangements he intends to put in place to ensure that primary care groups develop effective mechanisms for quality assurance in NHS maternity services. [49173]

Mr. Milburn: Midwives will have important contributions to make to the functions of Primary Care Groups. Guidance on Primary Care Groups to be issued this summer will include advice to health authorities, National Health Service trusts and all involved in forming Primary Care Groups on how midwives will be included in consultations and subsequent local structures. The guidance will make clear that Primary Care Group tasks must be undertaken by those with the greatest knowledge and experience of the field concerned: midwives will clearly need to be involved in planning and providing maternity services. The principle of high-quality woman-centred maternity care is now embedded in mainstream maternity services, and midwives working with their Primary Care Groups will be well placed to pursue this. We have made it clear that we expect the principles of clinical governance to be applied in primary care as well as in the acute hospital sector; and that Primary Care Groups will need to demonstrate progress in this area as a condition of progressing to trust status. Clinical governance arrangements should involve all groups of staff engaged in the provision of clinical care.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) mechanisms and (b) legal requirements there are for (i) members of the public and (ii) representatives of organisations to speak at meetings of health trust boards. [48946]

Mr. Milburn: We have introduced a statutory requirement for trust board meetings to be open to anyone who wishes to attend. It is a matter of discretion for the trust chairman to decide whether members of the public or representatives of organisations are invited to speak at trust board meetings. All National Health Service trusts are additionally required to hold an annual public meeting at which members of the public may speak.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish mechanisms for residents within an area covered by a health trust to seek the removal of (a) the Chairman and (b) other non-executive members of the trust. [48949]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has the statutory authority to remove trust chairmen or non-executives from office if he determines that it is not in the interests of the health service that the individual involved should continue in post.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce local democratic accountability to health trusts in the communities which they serve; and if he will make a statement. [48948]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave on 28 April 1998, Official Report, columns 140–41.

Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many names were considered for the Chairmanship of the Essex Rivers Healthcare NHS Trust when the post was filled (a) on the last occasion and (b) on the previous occasion; and when the current period of office ends. [48945]

Mr. Milburn: Prior to the chairmanship becoming vacant on 1 December 1997, only three potential candidates had been identified through national advertisement and nomination. To ensure a more competitive field the post was readvertised locally. In the interim period Professor Salmon was reappointed for three months. Following the readvertisement, 8 candidates were initially considered by a sifting panel as a result of which 2 candidates were interviewed for the post. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State subsequently accepted the recommendation of the regional chairman that Professor Michael Salmon should be reappointed from 1 March 1998 until 30 November 2001.

Riluzole

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities currently prescribe the drug Riluzole for the treatment of motor neurone disease on the NHS. [51019]

Mr. Milburn: In 1997 Riluzole was prescribed by general practitioners in over 90 per cent. of health authorities. Information about Riluzole prescribed in hospitals is not available.

Consultants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of (a) cancer, (b) respiratory, (c) geriatric and (d) gastro-intestinal consultants in the NHS. [50918]

Mr. Milburn: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Hospital medical consultants in selected specialities England at 30 September 1996

	Number
Medical oncology	70
Diagnostic radiology	1,310
Radiotherapy	240
Morbid anatomy and histopathology	630
Respiratory medicine	270
Geriatric medicine	620
Gastroenterology	270

Cancer Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the recent taxol trials in the United States of America; [50916]

(2) what guidelines his Department has issued to health authorities regarding new drug treatments for (a) cancer and (b) ovarian cancer. [50913]

Mr. Boateng: Some clinical trials on the place of "Taxol" in the treatment of ovarian cancer have already reported results but other are still underway. The latest results were presented at the meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology in May this year and have undergone close scrutiny by the profession. They will shortly be discussed by the Standing Medical Advisory Committee and following that advice will be issued to the National Health Service.

Over the last two years the NHS Executive has produced three sets of guidance for commissioners in the "Improving Outcomes" series on breast cancer, colorectal cancer and lung cancer. Each gives advice on chemotherapy.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the five-year survival rates for (a) breast, (b) bowel and (c) lung cancer in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) other EU countries. [50919]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 21 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on survival rates for cancer.

The latest available cancer survival estimates for England and Wales, Scotland and other countries in Europe are given in Cancer survival in England and Wales: 1981 and 1989 registrations, Monitor MB1 98/1, ONS/ICRF, 1998; Cancer registration statistics Scotland, 1986–1995, ISD Scotland, 1998; and Survival of cancer patients in Europe—The EUROCARE Study, IARC Scientific Publications No. 132, Lyons, 1995. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

Continence Services

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to issue new guidance for continence services. [51020]

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue national or draft guidance on continence services. [51580]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 7 May 1998, Official Report, columns 501–02.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to advertise for membership of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [51965]

Ms Jowell: There will be a number of vacancies in membership of the authority later this year. We are considering how best to ensure that applications for these vacancies are invited from as wide a field of suitable people as possible. This will include advertising in the national press shortly. We also intend to maintain a list of potential candidates for vacancies that arise in future years.

Homelessness

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of the health risks faced by homeless people; [51085]

(2) what guidance he has issued to health practitioners concerning the treatment of homeless people; and if he will make a statement. [51084]

Mr. Boateng: We are well aware of the health needs of homeless people and have taken steps to identify the actions required to bring the health standards of the most disadvantaged up to those of the best. Last year we established an independent Inquiry into inequalities in health led by Sir Donald Acheson, former Chief Medical Officer to the Government, which is covering homelessness as one of many factors which need to be addressed. The Inquiry is due to report later this year.

The treatment of homeless people, like the treatment of others, is a clinical matter and as such is for the attending individual general medical practitioner or health practitioner to decide.

It is not necessary to have a permanent address to register with a general practitioner. The Department encourages permanent registration of homeless people wherever possible. Should any patient have difficulty in registering with a doctor, health authorities have the power to assign the patient to a GP. Where homeless people do not stay in any one area, they may still have access to GP services as temporary residents or on an "immediately necessary" basis.

The Social Exclusion Unit's report on rough sleeping, published on 7 July, announced that the Department will be sponsoring a research project to identify areas where rough sleepers and homeless people are having persistent problems gaining access to GPs. The report will be completed and published by summer 1999.

Scanners

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics he collects on the provision of scanners within the NHS. [51095]

Ms Jowell: Statistics are not collected centrally on the provision of scanners in the National Health Service. However, we estimate that there are approximately 150 magnetic resonance imaging and 350 computed tomography scanners in the NHS.

Residential Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of people in residential and nursing homes who find that their capital has fallen below £16,000 before the responsible Social Services Department has completed an assessment; and what estimate he has made of the savings that accrue to local authorities as a result of not backdating in these cases; [51571]

(2) if he will make it his policy to require social services departments to backdate financial assistance for residential and nursing home placements to the date the person applied for an assessment or the date their capital reduced to £16,000 whichever is the sooner. [51570]

Mr. Boateng: The Department does not collect information on the number of people who are in residential and nursing homes who request back dating for financial assistance following an assessment of their care needs. We have no plans to introduce backdating provisions. The Community Care (Residential Accommodation) Act 1998 which comes into force from 11 August clarifies the point at which local authorities should provide financial assistance. We will issue guidance to accompany the Act shortly that will clarify the responsibilities of local authorities for assessing people requiring residential care whose capital has reduced to the upper capital limit of £16,000.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of his Department's guidance, LAC(98)8, on people in residential care who wish to fund a more expensive placement than the local authority would fully fund; [51573]

(2) what reasons his Department issued circular LAC(98)8 to replace the guidance set out in LAC(92)27. [51572]

Mr. Boateng: We issued the new guidance in Local Authority Circular (98)8 to clarify the fact that residents cannot choose more expensive accommodation than the local authority would normally expect to fund, unless a third party can contribute to the extra cost, because the previous guidance, LAC(92)27, was ambiguous on this point. The legal basis for this was set out in the consultation paper 'A New Partnership for Care in Old Age' in May 1996, which is that there is no provision under the National Assistance Act 1948 for a resident placed by a local authority to make up the difference between what the authority is prepared to pay and a home's charges out of their capital below £16,000. No information is collected centrally on the number of people wishing to fund more expensive placements.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in drawing up the National Carers Strategy, he will make it his policy to ensure that the Government's commitment to family-friendly policies cover those who care for adults. [51763]

Mr. Boateng: The national strategy will address the concerns of informal carers of people of all ages.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role the reference group will play in the development of the National Carers Strategy; and when its membership and terms of reference will be published. [51762]

Mr. Boateng: We are looking at the detail of the consultative arrangements which will underpin the strategy and we are determined that all interested parties will be involved with the project as it progresses. Further details of the consultative arrangements will be announced in due course.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reasons underlie the differences between the guidance his Department issued concerning the boundaries of primary care groups and that issued by the Secretary of State for Wales. [51569]

Mr. Milburn: The respective guidance reflects the separate arrangements for Primary Care Groups in England and Local Health Groups in Wales. Configuration of the groups will reflect the different geographical and historical patterns of health care delivery in each country.

Medicines Act 1968

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 454, concerning section 118 of the Medicines Act, what factors led him to conclude that the need for repeal or amendment of the section should be assessed after the introduction of freedom of information legislation. [51582]

Ms Jowell: The freedom of information White Paper outlines the Government's intention, where appropriate and consistent with European Union law, to repeal or amend the statutory bars to disclosure of information first identified in the 1993 Open Government White Paper (Cm 2290) and bring them into line with the harm and public interest tests. Section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 is one of a number of pieces of legislation currently under review.

Chiropody Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue national or draft guidance in respect of chiropody services. [51574]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans at present to issue central guidance in respect of chiropody services. Officials are currently looking at ways in which the National Health Service Executive might support developments in NHS chiropody services. This work is in its early stages.

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Christchurch dated 12 June concerning cystic fibrosis; [51492]

(2) when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Christchurch dated 1 June about prescription costs. [51495]

Mr. Milburn: I replied to the hon. Member on 20 July 1998.

Organophosphates

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned to study the effect on humans of simultaneous exposure to organophosphates, carbonate and synthetic pyrethroid pesticides at low levels; and what conclusions were reached. [50912]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The regulatory process does make allowance for combination effects. In particular, when pesticides contain more than one active substance, the potential interactions of these substances are considered and approval is not granted unless these are acceptable. In addition, substantial margins are provided by the use of uncertainty factors in deriving acceptable exposures for individual pesticides.

The Advisory Committee on Pesticides has begun a review of all approved organophosphate and carbamate pesticide active substances. This review will consider the possibility of combination effects between the different substances, and the need for further research will be considered in the light of those findings.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many letters per day his Department receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50685]

Mr. Hoon: Few staff are solely employed to handle correspondence, and for most staff this is part of their normal duties. In respect of his other queries, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Assembly

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the estimated timetable for the appointment of Ministers of the Northern Ireland Assembly and the transfer of responsibilities from her Department. [50404]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The right hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) and the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) were elected as First Minister designate and Deputy First Minister designate of the New Northern Ireland Assembly at its first meeting, on 1 July. I expect the rest of the Shadow Executive Committee to be appointed by the autumn. A Bill to enable the transfer of legislative and Executive authority to the Assembly and to Northern Ireland Ministers is currently before Parliament. Subject to that, and to progress on other aspects of the Belfast Agreement, I would expect the transfer of powers to take place during the first quarter of 1999.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many letters per day her office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50694]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary at the Office of Public Service.

With regards to the question of how many staff are employed to answer such letters, I can advise that this would be part of the normal duties of most staff and that few are solely employed to handle correspondence.

Class Sizes

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average primary school class size (a) by school and (b) by education and library board, in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [50729]

Mr. Worthington: I shall write to the hon. Member on (a) and place a copy of the letter in the Library. The information on (b) is as follows:

Average primary school class size

Education and Library Board	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Belfast	25.4	25.2	25.0	24.9	24.7

South-Eastern	24.0	23.9	24.2	24.5	24.8
Southern	23.5	23.4	23.2	23.3	23.0

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average class size for pupils in Key Stage 1 in primary schools in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years, by Education and Library Board. [50755]

Mr. Worthington: The information is available only for 1997–98.

Education and Library Board	Average class size for Key Stage 1
Belfast	24.2
Western	22.0
North-Eastern	23.3
South-Eastern	24.3

Social Security Spending

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the amount by which DHSS spending in Northern Ireland would increase in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03 if the real annual rate of increase were the same as the average rate of increase over the period 1978–79 to 1997–98. [51024]

Mr. Worthington: If the real annual rate of increase were the same as the average rate of increase over the period 1978–79 to 1997–98, DHSS would get, in 1999–2000, an extra £316 million, in 2000–01, an extra £647 million, in 2001–02, an extra £999 million and in 2002–03, an extra £1,372 million, each compared to DHSS total net planned expenditure in 1998–99.

Income Support

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of her Department towards income support applications from those currently involved in the Drumcree protest. [51220]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under it's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Thompson, and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. David Winnick dated 16 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question seeking information about the policy towards Income Support applications from those currently involved in the Drumcree protest.

An application received from a person involved in the Drumcree protest will be dealt with in the same way as any other benefit claim, that is, it will be assessed by an independent Adjudication Officer strictly in accordance with social security law and payment will be made only where there is valid entitlement.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Prison Service

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the number of prison officers currently employed by the Northern Ireland Prison Service. [51081]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 July 1998]: As at today's date there are 2,214 prison officers currently employed in the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Power Generation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the main sources of energy for power generation in Northern Ireland, indicating the percentage of the market supplied by each source. [51088]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 July 1998]: In 1997–98 the main sources of energy for power generation in Northern Ireland were natural gas (49.1 per cent), coal (45.0 per cent.) and heavy fuel oil (4.5 per cent.).

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. Notes:

Non Departmental Public Bodies

When providing cars for their staff, NDPBs are expected to take into account two overriding principles: concern for the environment and value for money. Guidance on these two principles has been given to NDPBs and, within these principles, NDPBs are free to manage the provision of cars in the way they consider best for the body. Information about cars owned or leased by NDPBs is not held centrally

Government Offices for the Regions

The cars held by the GORs are not automatically replaced but their replacement is considered by the three parent departments (Departments for the Environment, Transport and the Regions; Trade and Industry; Education and Employment) when the cars are more than 4 years old or more than 3 years old having already travelled more than 60,000 miles

Other bodies listed in the DETR National Asset Register

The Office of Water Services (OFWAT) has one leased vehicle, diesel, 1900cc, which is due for replacement in 2000–2001. Neither the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF) or the Office of the Rail Regulator (ORR) have owned or leased vehicles

I have placed a breakdown of the Department's vehicles in the Library.

Building Regulations

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to enable individual local authorities to set their own level of fees for building regulations. [50881]

Mr. Raynsford: Draft regulations—"The Building (Local Authority Charges) Regulations 1998"—were issued for consultation on 5 June. They are designed to devolve the charge setting process for building control functions to individual local authorities.

Responses to the consultation have been requested by 17 July. After I have considered these, I will decide whether it is appropriate to proceed to lay the regulations.

Bus Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by bus company the subsidy paid by London Transport for franchised bus services operated in the London area for each of the last five years. [51188]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested will take time to compile. I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Car Clocking

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions his Department has undertaken since 1 May 1997 to reduce the incidence of car clocking. [51177]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are keen to see better information made available to consumers. DETR and DVLA meet regularly with representatives of the motor industry and the police to discuss this and other issues of concern to the motorist. In particular, as announced in the Integrated Transport White Paper published on 20 July, my right hon. Friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, has asked the DVLA to consider ways of introducing new services to help the motorist. These would include the provision of further information on second-hand vehicles.

Housing

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of local authority and housing association dwellings in Gloucestershire, by district, was earmarked for the elderly in the most recent five years for which records are available. [51128]

Mr. Raynsford: The available information on numbers of local authority and housing associations dwellings in the district councils of Gloucestershire as at 1 April, together with the percentages for use by the elderly, is as follows:

Council Tenants (Housing Benefit)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes in the subsidy arrangements for housing benefit for council tenants have been brought about as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51510]

Mr. Raynsford: From 1999–2000, we propose to introduce a change to the system of rent rebate subsidy limitation to help authorities that rebate more than the average proportion of rental income from their own tenants. We will consult authorities on this proposed change in due course.

Driving Tests

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many car driving tests were conducted during the last five years for which figures are available. [51277]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The numbers of car driving tests conducted during the last five financial years are as follows:

Year	Number
1993–94	1,492,230
1994–95	1,504,605
1995–96	1,498,194
1996–97	1,553,675
1997–98	1,102,986

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce energy performance testing of buildings occupied by Government departments and to evaluate and publish their environmental performance. [51437]

Angela Eagle: As part of the continuing energy efficiency campaign on the Government estate, new benchmark targets are being developed to be based on the standard of the top quartile of buildings of a particular type, such as naturally-ventilated offices. These will be settled once pilot studies have been completed. The reporting of environmental performance will be further considered by Ministers in the light of the recent report of the Environmental Audit Committee.

Pollution (Fines)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy towards levels of fines for companies that persistently pollute the environment; what discussions he has had with (a) other Government Departments and (b) outside bodies about the advantages of imposing higher fines on such companies; and if he will make a statement. [51634]

Mr. Meacher: The Courts are independent of the Government, and it is for them to exercise their discretion in sentencing. It is up to them to ensure that the penalties they impose on conviction fully reflect the gravity of offences which damage the environment, and the seriousness with which society views them. The maximum penalties fixed by Parliament are there to be used in appropriate cases. People who blatantly or persistently damage or risk damaging the environment, and who show little or no regard for the law, need to be stopped. My Department has had discussions with officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Judicial Studies Board about fines imposed for environmental and certain other offences, and will be meeting the Magistrates' Association.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a breakdown by collecting authority of the money collected under the unified business rate; and how it was redistributed via Government grant for each of the last three years. [51315]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the amounts calculated by billing authorities as their final contributions to the non-domestic rates pool for 1996–97, and their calculations of the provisional contributions for 1997–98 and 1998–99. I have also placed a table showing the amounts of redistributed non-domestic rates payable to each receiving authority in England for 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99.

The two tables cannot be compared directly because (i) contributions to the non-domestic rates pool are made by billing authorities—for example London boroughs and district councils, whereas redistributed non-domestic rates are paid to all receiving authorities (including preceptors such as county councils and police authorities); (ii) the total redistributed from the pool includes amounts other than those received from billing authorities—that is payments in lieu of rates from Crown properties, payments from properties on the Central List, and Exchequer contributions to compensate the pool for income foregone as a result of transitional schemes.

Vehicle Registration Plates

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received with regard to spacing in the new format of vehicle registration plates; and if he will make a statement. [51583]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has received a number of representations from one number plate manufacturer expressing concern about the proposed spacing of characters in the new vehicle registration format. As explained in the answer I have to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 470, the Department will be considering these detailed aspects as part of its further research into the memorability of the new format.

NHS Employees

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many reports under the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 were received each year since 1991 in respect of NHS employees in Wales. [51585]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to her question on 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 323–24.

Integrated Transport White Paper

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will allow local authorities an extension of the time allowed for them to submit their transport policies and programme bids for 1999–2000 to enable them to take account of the contents of the Integrated Transport White Paper. [52152]

Dr. Strang: The guidance we issued to local authorities in April on the submission of their bids is consistent with the main messages in the White Paper. If authorities wish to take some time to ensure that their TPPs reflect those messages they will not be penalised. Under the TPP procedures they are always allowed a period in which to amend their TPPs. This year authorities have until 10 October to make changes to their bids.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish details of his public expenditure plans for his Department's environmental protection programmes. [52015]

Mr. Meacher: Yes. I am today publishing details of the provision for my environmental protection programmes, as agreed in the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review. In addition to the extra £174 million for energy efficiency announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–211, provision for my other environmental protection programmes is being increased by £80 million over the next three years.

£150 million of the new energy efficiency money is added to the existing £75 million a year expenditure on the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme creating a new expanded fuel poverty programme to help another 1,000,000 vulnerable households whose homes cannot be heated to the minimum level for good health.

Support for the Energy Saving Trust is increased from £19 million this year, to £22 million for 1999–2000, and to £25 million for each of the later years. An extra £1.5 million is provided for Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme in 1999–2000 and further increases are planned to provide, among other things, new programmes of advice to businesses to help improve energy efficiency.

The extra £80 million for environmental protection will enable me to:

(a) make £50 million available to local authorities to support implementation of the new provisions for contaminated land in Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (inserted by Section 57 of the Environment Act 1995), which we intend to bring into force in July 1999. The funds will support local authorities in developing inspection strategies, carrying out investigations of individual sites and taking forward necessary enforcement action; and

(b) increase grant to the Environment Agency by a total of £13 million over three years to help implement new European Directives, and to support the Agency's role in the new contaminated land regime; and

(c) increase funding for environmental research, for a number of small programmes which promote environmental improvements and for pneumoconiosis compensation grant.

Details are set out in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission Office, London

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of awards granted by the European Commission Office in London to organisations promoting the concept of Europe. [49644]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are not aware of any awards by the European Commission Office in London to organisations promoting the concept of Europe. The relevant budget lines—established by the Council and the European Parliament—are administered by the Commission headquarters in Brussels.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will introduce measures to enable residents of the Cayman Islands to have the same freedom of movement throughout the European Union as is available to citizens of French and Dutch overseas territories; and if he will make a statement. [51553]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The possibility of granting citizenship to the citizens of the Overseas Territories, thereby conferring on them freedom of movement throughout the European Union, is under active discussion between all Departments involved. We are looking at the issue sympathetically, but more work needs to be done before any announcement can be made. The result of this review will be made public in the forthcoming White Paper on the Overseas Territories.

Police and Military Forces (Support)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 May 1998, Official Report, columns 520–22, on support for the police and military forces, if he will provide a breakdown of the expenditure in 1997–98 under the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme in support of the armed forces in Sri Lanka; and if he will list the training establishments involved and the nature of the training. [51801]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1997–98 the United Kingdom Military Training Assistance Scheme was used to fund the following military training for the Sri Lankan armed forces:

Military officers sent on UK training courses at Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst and the Royal College of Defence Studies (£27,741).

Assistance in setting up and running an Army Staff College (£54,645) aimed at middle ranking officers.

Advisory visit (£4,535) by military instructors to assess the suitability of the Sri Lankan Armed Command Regiment to receive VIP protection assistance.

Drill training (£1,085) for the Sri Lankan Army in preparation for the 50th Anniversary of Independence Parades.

Once adjustments made by the MOD billing agency in Liverpool have been added (£2,210) this brings the total to £90,216.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49806]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Department currently has only a limited facility for the handling of correspondence from hon. Members and members of the public on stand-alone work stations. There is a limited e-mail facility on the Department's main Information Technology Network.

The Department is putting plans in place to connect selected parts of the office to the Government Secure Internet (GSI) at the end of 1998, followed by full interconnection between the core network and the GSI in the first half of 1999. That will enable a full e-mail between the office, Members of both Houses and members of the public.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50680]

Mr. Straw: On the targets, performance and volume of letters I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

It is not possible to say how many staff are involved in answering correspondence in my Department because it is part of the normal duties of a large number of them.

Elmley Prison

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the chemicals used for (a) gardening and (b) farming at Elmley Prison, Eastchurch, Isle of Sheppey. [50481]

Ms Quin: The following five commercial chemical products are used in gardening at Elmley prison: Casoron G; Mosstox; Roundup Biactive; Supertox 30; and Trik. These products are used for the control of weeds and moss within the prison perimeter wall as flower and shrub beds, lawns and paths, and the base of the perimeter fence. Most of these products are used on an annual basis and in relatively small quantities. There is no farming conducted at Elmley.

All three Isle of Sheppey prisons have a "good neighbour policy", and would be happy to discuss any environmental issues with interested parties.

Probation Service

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the Probation Service provides an equal level of service in urban and rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [51028]

Ms Quin: The funding formula used by the Home Office to allocate specific current grant to each of the 54 English and Welsh probation services takes account of demographic factors, including the sparsity of population. The formula is now subject to review, in consultation with the Association of Chief Probation Officers, Central Probation Council and the Local Government Association. Once the allocation has been made, it is for the responsible probation committee in each area to decide how its service's budget should be spent.

Fire Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the cost-effectiveness of national use of virtual reality simulations for operational command training in the fire service; [50900]

(2) what assessement he has made of the national requirements for operational command training in the fire service; [50902]

(3) what assessment he has made of national trials of virtual reality operational command training in the fire service. [50901]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson), on 21 July 1998. Official Report, columns 435–36.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the London Fire Service has spent on the services of lobbying companies in (a) the last and (b) the current financial year; and which companies have been engaged. [51467]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority that they spent £11,326 on the services of a Parliamentary Adviser in 1997–98, and have spent £4,659 on such services in the current financial year. The services are provided by GJW Government Relations Limited.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the issue of lenient sentences for road traffic offences to the new Sentencing Advisory Council. [51407]

Mr. Michael: The Court of Appeal has already established detailed sentencing guidelines for serious road traffic offences, in the cases of R. v. Boswell (1984) and AG Ref. 14 and 24 of 1993. Once the new Sentencing Advisory Panel has been established, we will consider whether there are particular categories of offences which should be referred to it and with what degree of priority.

Police Numbers

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number and rank of (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff employed in the administration support units of (i) the Metropolitan Police and (ii) each other police force in England and Wales. [51468]

Mr. Michael: The information collected annually by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary on the numbers of police and civilian staff deployed to various duties is not at a level which allows the identification of the number or rank of staff assigned to Administration Support Units. This information could be obtained from the 43 forces only at disproportionate cost.

Election Candidates

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the article in Council Magazine by Julian Malins QC on candidates at general elections. [51485]

Mr. George Howarth: The article by the hon. Member's brother gives a useful account of the problem of misleading candidates' descriptions on ballot papers. Since the article was written, the Registration of Political Parties Bill has been introduced. The Bill provides that only a candidate authorised by a registered political party may include a description on the ballot paper which is likely to lead voters to associate the candidate with that party. It also enables candidates representing registered parties to include the party's emblem on the ballot paper.

Sentences

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about provisions contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] relating to maximum sentences in magistrates' courts. [49901]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 21 July 1998]: There are no provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] to change the current maximum sentences available to the magistrates' courts (six months custody for a single offence or 24 months in a Secure Training Centre for 12–14 year olds). The new Detention and Training Order (DTO) will enable magistrates to impose a maximum custodial DTO sentence of 24 months for 12–17 year olds.

The Magistrates' Association have written to me on the question of increasing the general maximum penalty of six months available to the magistrates' courts. They have been invited to supply further information.

Mary Bell Case

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the investigation into his officials' handling of the Mary Bell case. [52075]

Mr. Straw: I have now received the Permanent Secretary's report into the circumstances in which Home Office officials had for some time known of the possibility of a book from which Mary Bell would profit financially, but had not informed Ministers. This was, at my request, an investigation to identify lessons for the future, not a disciplinary inquiry.

Since her release in 1980, Mary Bell has remained under life licence under the supervision of the probation service. Throughout this period, officials in my Department's Lifer Review Unit have received regular reports from the probation officers responsible for her supervision. These have frequently included accounts of attempts by literary agents and the media to induce her for substantial sums to tell her story. Indeed, there are records of such approaches to her even before she left prison.

The probation service is responsible for supervising those subject to life licence and for reporting, on a regular basis, on each individual to the Lifer Unit on their progress. The service has a particular responsibility to ensure that the public is protected from people who have previously committed very serious offences. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation has received a copy of the report of the investigation carried out by the Chief Probation Officer of the Durham Probation Service into their handling of Mary Bell's case, and offered me his own independent assessment of it. In the light of this,

I am satisfied that the probation service kept my officials properly informed of the plans to publish a book. Given the exceptional difficulties of the case, it is also clear that the service has played a major and positive role in helping Mary Bell keep to the conditions of her licence in the 18 years since her release.

Between 1984 and 1987, my officials were informed that Mary Bell had become interested in producing her own account and had spent some time preparing a manuscript. The supervising probation officer notified them of discussions with a literary agent in 1985 about a possible autobiography. Officials advised the probation officer that the Home Office did not favour publication but had no power to prevent it and would not attempt to put pressure on Mary Bell. Ministers were not informed of these developments and, in the event, the project foundered. Officials heard no more about the possibility of a book until August 1995, when they were informed of her renewed interest in producing her own account.

The probation service notified officials in January 1996 that serious negotiations were under way between Mary Bell, Gitta Sereny and a literary agent. In July, there were informed that a contract had been signed and an advance payment made. Officials responded to these developments along the same lines as their predecessors more than a decade previously, namely by questioning the wisdom of the venture but confirming, correctly, that they had no power to prevent it. Great care was taken throughout to try to protect, through maintenance of an injunction long in force, the anonymity of Mary Bell and her family, in the interests of her young daughter.

Following a probation service letter of 6 March this year, advising that the book would appear shortly and was likely to arouse controversy, officials recognised the need to forewarn Ministers. Because their information was that serialisation of the book would not begin until 2 May they did not, in the event, do so until 23 April, by which time (unbeknown to them) news of the book was already emerging. The initial briefing to Ministers concentrated on the contents of the book, and did not make it clear that officials and the probation service had known about the contract from the outset. Ministers were given a full brief on the history of the case only on 30 April, the day after newspaper serialisation had started and some days after widespread controversy had arisen over the financial benefit to Mary Bell.

The Lifer Unit of the Prison Service Headquarters is responsible for casework on nearly 4,000 life sentence prisoners and around a further 800 lifers now on supervision under licence in the community. Their primary task is to ensure that the lifer system operates in a way which minimises risk to the public. They bear a heavy load and I am satisfied that I have been very well served—as, I believe, have my predecessors—by the conscientious advice they provide on the exercise of my statutory powers in individual cases. The possibility of financial benefit to Mary Bell for a book about her crimes did not involve questions of public risk or any breach of the law or the terms of her life licence. Officials accordingly concluded, as early as 1985, that there was nothing they could do to prevent it and did not therefore believe it necessary to submit to Ministers.

Ministers are entitled to expect that officials will try to spot events involving their cases which are likely to arouse controversy and provoke concern over the adequacy of the law. I believe that officials acted in this case throughout in good faith and in accordance with a correct interpretation of the law. With hindsight, it is clear that there were a number of occasions on which Ministers might reasonably have been informed of developments in the Mary Bell case. The Permanent Secretary has accordingly recommended to me procedural and other improvements which will help guide Home Office staff in assessing future cases where Ministers may need to be kept informed of developments, even where there is no question of the exercise by them of statutory powers. He and the Director General of the Prison Service are specifically preparing revised internal operating procedures for the handling of lifer cases and arranging for supplementary guidance to be provided to lifer caseworkers and supervising probation officers.

I have asked officials separately to consider whether the law relating to criminal memoirs might sensibly be strengthened.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on Number 2 Area (North West) of the Metropolitan Police; [52076]

(2) if he will make a statement on the report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on Number 1 Area (Central) of the Metropolitan Police. [52077]

Mr. Michael: Yes. I have today placed in the Library a note of the recommendations from the report, together with the Commissioner's response and the police authority responses, which take into account the advice my right hon. Friend and I have received from the Metropolitan Police Committee.

Prisoners

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the outcome of the review of arrangements for the release on temporary licence of prisoners. [52078]

Mr. Straw: Following a review initiated by the Director General of the Prison Service, I have decided to make a number of changes to the arrangements for release of prisoners on temporary licence, to support the Government's policy of developing constructive regimes for prisoners. The current system, put in place in 1995, has significantly reduced the numbers of temporary release failures, and the stringent risk assessment process will remain in place in order to ensure protection of the public. The Prisoners (Return to Custody) Act 1995 made it an offence to fail to return to custody after a period of temporary release. However, the current system places too great a limit on opportunities for governors to develop activities aimed at supporting constructive regimes and preparing prisoners for resettlement in the community.

From 1 September, governors will be able to develop challenging activities for young offenders outside the establishment, including schemes such as the Duke of Edinburgh Award Scheme. Young offenders will be allowed limited participation in team sports in the community, where they are able to represent the establishment and build local contacts. Many establishments already undertake reparational and community work, and overnight stays away from the establishment will be permitted for selected young offenders where this is necessary to support such projects.

A number of measures will assist prisoners in finding work or training on release and in maintaining family ties, factors central to reducing reoffending. Short-term young offenders will be eligible for release on facility licence for interviews to obtain housing or employment on release, and for hostel assessments. Prisoners aged 18–24 will be eligible for release on facility licence, including overnight stays where necessary, for employment related interviews under the Government's New Deal scheme. Further opportunities will be made available, for both adult prisoners and young offenders, to gain experience of employment prior to release. The current restrictions on prisoners obtaining paid work in the community will be amended to allow governors greater freedom to develop "working out" schemes, to allow prisoners experience of regular employment. Release on resettlement licence will also be extended for young offenders, once they have reached the latter stages of their sentences, to assist in their resettlement in the community.

Consideration will be given to extending some of these changes to all adult prisoners if the evaluation suggests it is safe to do so. These changes will be carefully evaluated.

A copy of the relevant Prison Service Instruction, giving full details of the changes, will be placed in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the instructions to Immigration and Nationality Directorate staff dealing with asylum applications. [52201]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to announce that a copy of the Asylum Directorate's Instructions (ADIs) is being placed in the Library. The material is subject to periodic review and revision. We shall arrange to provide the Library with any necessary amendments or new instructions as they become available.

The ADIs contain internal guidance to staff on the handling of asylum and related casework. They are being made available in accordance with the principles of openness in the White Paper on Freedom of Information and in the existing Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. A small amount of material cannot be disclosed, either on grounds of national security or because disclosure would prejudice the effective operation of immigration controls.

As with the Immigration Directorates' Instructions (IDIs), this information will be made available on the Internet as soon as possible. Consideration is also being given to other suitable ways of making this information available and members of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's After Entry User Panel will be consulted about this.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50687]

Mr. Chris Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Disabled People

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the impact of reforms of the National Lottery on access to projects by disabled people. [50762]

Mr. Banks: New Policy Directions given to the Lottery distributors on 1 June require them to take into account the need to promote access for people from all sections of society. Distributors must produce strategic plans which show how they intend to do this, and these will include measures taken to encourage access for disabled people.

The National Lottery Act 1998 creates a new distributor, the New Opportunities Fund, one of whose first initiatives is to provide money to establish a network of healthy living centres, which will be of particular interest to disabled people.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Minister is the head of the task force on alternatives to tobacco sponsorship announced on 25 November 1997; who are its members; on what dates it has met; what meetings are currently planned; and if he will make a statement on its progress to date. [50703]

Mr. Banks: The EU Tobacco Directive provides up to three years for domestic legislation to be implemented, and a further two years for the ban on sports sponsorship by tobacco companies to be enforced. Up to a further three years may be allowed in exceptional circumstances for existing sponsorship of events organised at a global level, provided sponsorship levels and associated advertising are reduced.

With this timescale in mind, I will chair a Task Force to help sports in receipt of tobacco sponsorship to identify alternative sponsors. The Task Force has not yet been formally constituted, although I have had an initial informal meeting with sports and business interests, and will hold a further meeting in the autumn when the current exercise to collect sponsorship information from the sports concerned should be completed.

Sir Rodney Walker

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the directorships and other declarable interests in sports-related companies held by Sir Rodney Walker, Chairman of the UK Sports Council. [50741]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 16 July 1998]: Sir Rodney Walker has the following directorships and other declarable interests in sports-related companies:

Chairman: Rugby Football League

Chairman: Leicester City Plc

Chairman: Brands Hatch Leisure Plc

Trustee: London Marathon Charitable Trust

Governor: Sports Aid Foundation

Vice President: Youth Charter for Sport.

The Council has procedures for hon. Members to declare potential conflicts of interest when decisions come before them and to make appropriate arrangements to handle any potential conflicts which arise.

Cricket

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of people in the United Kingdom regularly playing cricket. [51318]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 20 July 1998]: According to the England and Wales Cricket Board, there were more than 2 million cricket participants at 6,500 affiliated clubs in 1997 throughout this country, including some 150,000 junior club members. The Government, through the English Sports Council, actively encourage all governing bodies of sport to have programmes in place which promote our policy of "sport for all" and increase participation levels in all sports, from grass roots through to elite competitors.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Efficiency Review

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to publish the efficiency review on managing attendance in the public sector. [52204]

Dr. David Clark: This report was commissioned as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, and copies have today been placed in the libraries of both Houses. The report's findings on best practice will be used to develop a programme to help improve attendance across the public sector.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many letters per day her office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50690]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, Column 363.

Population and Development Conference

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to include a parliamentarian in the delegation to the five year assessment conference, Cairo+5, on Population and Development, in The Hague in February 1999. [51623]

Mr. Foulkes: The United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) which is responsible for organising the forum and issuing invitations, has not yet formally announced the arrangements for the composition of delegations. We fully expect that the contribution of parliamentarians to the review will be reflected in UNFPA's plans for the meeting.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to involve voluntary organisations in the issues to be raised at the five year assessment conference, Cairo+5, on Population and Development, in The Hague in February 1999. [51624]

Mr. Foulkes: We will work closely with civil society organisations (CSOs) throughout the quinquennial review of the Cairo International Conference on Population and Development. A meeting of Department for International Development's sexual and reproductive health forum has already been held and we will shortly be establishing a joint DFID/CSO working group to co-ordinate in detail the UK's contribution to the review.

PRIME MINISTER

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 598, if, during his discussions with the US Government, he was informed of their intention to transport to Dounreay the additional quantity of nine kilograms of low enriched uranium; and if he will make a statement. [48805]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry on 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 371.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister when he was first notified of the recommendation to close the commercial reprocessing facility at Dounreay; when the Government received the report recommending the closure; which (a) ministers and (b) officials received this report; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [46262]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 June 1998]: On 17 March 1998, the UKAEA Board considered the future of reprocessing at Dounreay and recommended that no new commercial work be accepted as part of a phased rundown to a complete cessation of reprocessing. The Chief Executive of UKAEA advised officials in the Department of Trade and Industry of the Board's proposed course of action by letter on 19 March 1998. DTI officials then had a number of discussions with UKAEA to check points in the analysis, and they submitted advice to DTI Ministers on 1 May 1998. I was first notified when the President of the Board of Trade consulted colleagues by letter on 29 May.

The Government made the announcement on 5 June that UKAEA would accept no new contracts for commercial reprocessing at Dounreay.

The Minister for Industry, Energy and Science has asked the Chairman of UKAEA to supply the information and analysis that went into the decision announced on 5 June, and he will place the Chairman's response in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what plans his Office has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49821]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 389. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315.

My office is taking part in the pilot study of the development of the Government Secure Intranet (GSI).

SCOTLAND

School Sizes

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the number and percentage of primary school children who were taught in classes of 31 or more in the years (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94, (d) 1994–95, (e) 1995–96 and (f) 1996–97 in each local authority area. [50249]

Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts paid by each local authority to COSLA in 1997. [50869]

Mr. Macdonald: The information requested is not held by The Scottish Office.

Timber Industry

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the impact of current levels of imports of timber from the Baltic states on the United Kingdom timber processing industry. [50815]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend and his ministerial colleagues have received several representations from individuals and from representative groups about the effect of imports of timber from the Baltic states on the forestry and timber processing industries.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Forestry Industry Committee of Great Britain regarding the current level of supply of sawn timber. [50819]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend received a letter from the Forestry Industry Council of Great Britain in February this year about current factors affecting the forestry industry, including the level of supply of sawn timber.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average selling price of softwoods harvested in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [50816]

Mr. Macdonald: The average selling prices of conifers sold standing by the Forestry Commission in Britain over each of the last 10 years are given in the table. Information on sales by the private sector is not available.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the acreage of softwoods (a) planted and (b) harvested in each of the last 10 years. [50818]

Mr. Macdonald: The areas of conifers planted and felled or approved for felling in Britain in each of the last 10 years are given in the table. All areas are in thousands of hectares.

Notes:

1. The areas planted include both areas of felled woodland which were replanted and the areas of new woodlands which were created
2. The Forestry Commission does not record the areas felled by private woodland owners, but it does record the areas approved for felling. However, approvals are valid for a five year period, and many areas which are approved for felling are never felled

Higher Education

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, (1) pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister for Education and Industry of 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 155, if he will place in the Library the legal advice he received that European students from the United Kingdom may be charged more for university fees in Scotland than mainland continental EU students; [50907]

(2) if he will make a statement on the external legal advice his Department received on university fees in Scotland. [50908]

Mr. Wilson: No. It is not usual practice to disclose legal advice obtained.

Legal Advice

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances his Department discloses the contents of external legal advice which it has received. [50909]

Mr. Dewar: It is not normal practice to disclose the contents of legal advice received, and it is not possible to comment in abstract on any exceptional circumstances in which that practice might be departed from.

Health Service

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many whole-time equivalent NHS consultants there are in post in occupational health, and how many of these are (i) full and (ii) part-time in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland. [51110]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is shown in the table.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unfilled NHS consultant or approved training posts there are in occupational health in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland. [51114]

Mr. Galbraith: There were no unfilled NHS consultant posts in occupational health in Scotland at 30 September 1997.

Vacancy data for approved training posts are not collected centrally.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those NHS trusts which have access to an occupational health service, and which of those services are led by a consultant in occupational health. [51111]

Mr. Galbraith: Current guidance (updated 1995) requires that Health Boards, Trusts and independent contractors ensure that all their staff should have access to Occupational Health Services either provided by the employer or obtainable from another provider. In addition, arrangements should be made to provide every Occupational Health Team with access to and advice from a consultant occupational physician as required.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his duties in respect of the safety of (i) staff employed in the NHS, (ii) patients and (iii) visitors to NHS premises. [51105]

Mr. Galbraith: There is no statutory duty which places responsibility on the Secretary of State for Scotland to ensure that Trusts meet the provisions of the health and safety legislation. Staff employed in the NHS have the same statutory protection as all employees to whom the Health and Safety at Work legislation applies.

In so far as patients and visitors to NHS premises are concerned, both in terms of statute and at common law, the obligation is placed on the "occupier" of the premises to ensure their safety. The Occupiers Liability (Scotland) Act 1960 requires the occupier to show such care as is reasonable in order that a person entering the premises will not suffer injury or damage by reasons of the state of the premises. The obligations and duties are thus placed on the legal entity occupying/controlling the premises and not the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many working days were lost through sickness, ill health or injury by NHS staff in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the estimated total cost of those lost days. [51102]

Mr. Galbraith: The answer could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the NHS Management Executive in Scotland is taking to monitor the compliance with health and safety legislation of NHS trusts. [51097]

Mr. Galbraith: The NHS in Scotland Management Executive is reviewing Occupational Health and Safety Services for NHS and associated staff in Scotland with a view to implementing recommendations early in 1999.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to ensure that NHS trusts have adequate arrangements for recording accidents at NHS premises; what encouragement is given to staff to report accidents; and what steps the NHS Management Executive in Scotland has taken to improve the safety performance of NHS trusts. [51103]

Mr. Galbraith: The NHS in Scotland Management Executive has regularly reminded NHS Trusts of their responsibilities in ensuring they are taking steps to meet fully their statutory Health and Safety obligations.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to make occupational health services available to staff working in primary care. [51113]

Mr. Galbraith: Current guidance (updated 1995) requires that Health Boards, Trusts and independent contractors ensure that all their staff should have access to Occupational Health Services either provided by the employer or obtainable from another provider.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what responsibility the NHS Management Executive in Scotland has for ensuring that trusts meet the provisions of health and safety legislation. [51109]

Mr. Galbraith: There is no statutory duty which places responsibility on the NHS Management Executive to ensure that Trusts meet the provisions of the health and safety legislation. The ME does, however, issue directions/guidance to Trusts on health and safety issues.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of NHS staff have access to an occupational health service in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland. [51112]

Mr. Galbraith: Current guidance (updated 1995) requires that Health Boards, Trusts and independent contractors ensure that all their staff should have access to Occupational Health Services either provided by the employer or obtainable from another provider.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to protect staff against violence on health care premises. [51098]

Mr. Galbraith: The first HR Strategy for the NHS in Scotland "Towards a New Way of Working" gives an undertaking to develop practical measures aimed at improving the personal safety and security of staff.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many NHS employees were killed or injured at work in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland in each year since 1991; [51101]

(2) how many reports under the reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 were received in each year since 1991 in respect of NHS employees in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland. [51100]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply:

Notes:

1. NHS is identified by using HSE industry environment code 951 for 1991–92 to 1995–96 and client status 06 for 1996–97 and 1997–98[1]. Injury data in respect of individual health boards cannot be identified from HSE's computer databases. Data are available by local authority
2. Years commence 1 April
3. Injuries are reportable to HSE under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 (RIDDOR 95). Prior to the figures for 1996–97, injuries were reportable under RIDDOR 85, which used a different definition for reportable non-fatal injuries. Figures for non-fatal injuries reported under the different legislation are therefore not directly comparable

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the NHS trusts which have been found, since 1991, to be in breach of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 indicating in each case the nature of the breaches; [51107]

(2) if he will list the NHS trusts which (a) have been prosecuted and (b) have received prohibition or improvement notices under health and safety legislation since 1991. [51106]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

Between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1998, the Greater Glasgow Health Board was prosecuted by the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) Field Operations Division (FOD) on 21 February 1992 for a breach of Section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work Act. No other prosecutions have been taken in Scotland.

Improvement Notices have been issued against the following NHS trusts by HSE's FOD in Scotland between 1 April 1996 and 31 March 1998:

Dumfries and Galloway Community Health NHS Trust

East and Midlothian NHS Trust

Southern General NHS Trust

Dundee Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust

Western Isles Health Board.

There have been no Prohibition Notices. Prior to 1996–97, notices against the NHS cannot be identified from HSE's computer databases. HSE holds no information on the number of "breaches" which do not result in a prosecution or the issuing of an Improvement or Prohibition Notice.

Transport Policy

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's transport policy in Scotland. [51819]

Mr. Dewar: I have today published "Travel Choices for Scotland" the Government's White Paper on Integrated Transport in Scotland. The White Paper fulfils our manifesto commitment and sets out the Government's aims for a sustainable, effective and integrated transport system appropriate for the needs of Scotland's people, environment and economy. The White Paper is complementary to the United Kingdom White Paper presented to the House by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 784–88.

We will encourage each local authority to develop an integrated Local Transport Strategy suited to local circumstances and needs, drawing together all the resources and planning functions of the authority and in co-operation with local public transport operators, the community and business. We will consult on the details of implementation. We will also publish consultative draft planning guidance on Transport and Planning.

We will establish a Scottish Public Transport Fund from which local authorities can bid for assistance for key value for money developments for their local public transport network consistent with their Local Transport Strategy.

For buses, legislation will be brought forward to allow bus Quality Partnerships between local authorities and operators to have a statutory basis. Where these arrangements have been shown to be unable to bring about satisfactory improvements to service levels and quality, legislation will allow for local authorities to introduce Quality Contracts to ensure provision.

To help address the problems of traffic congestion and poor local air quality legislation will be brought forward to enable local authorities to introduce local road user charges and a levy on workplace parking as part of their Local Transport Strategy. An appropriate proportion of the net revenues raised would be available for authorities to invest in value for money improvements to the local transport network, increasing opportunities and choice. We will consult on the details before any legislation is brought forward.

Legislation on road use charging will be framed to allow for charging on motorways and trunk roads. We will establish a new Trunk Roads development budget to fund technical studies and other preparatory work to allow the legislation to be implemented as speedily as practically possible. Net revenues raised from any such charging could be used to help meet cost of improvements and upgrading to the network that might not otherwise have been affordable.

We will assist the development of informal Regional Transport Partnerships to improve and co-ordinate transport planning across individual local authority boundaries. We will consult on the way forward for these partnerships and on the role of the National Transport Forum at a Scotland level. We will also discuss with the National Transport Forum targets for measuring progress in delivering our agenda.

The GB Strategic Rail Authority will be established with the Scottish Executive having a major influence over rail services in Scotland. The Authority will help deliver improvements in terms of fares and the quality and reliability of services. We are committed to improving the opportunities for rail freight.

We will work with transport operators and user groups to produce a Scottish National Public Transport Timetable and to develop better through ticketing arrangements.

We will commission a Scottish Airports and Air Service Study to contribute to the development of a UK airports policy. We will continue long-term support for operation and development of Caledonian MacBrayne ferries and secure the long-term provision of lifeline ferry services to Orkney and Shetland. We will bring forward legislation to extend Freight Facilities Grants to coastal shipping.

We will develop a process to ensure that all new major policy initiatives or changes are consistent with our transport policy. We will also ensure that transport policy reflects policies on health promotion, on increased walking and cycling, on economic development and on social exclusion including exploring the scope to apply discounted fare schemes more widely.

The proposals in the White Paper represent a first critical step in developing a transport system that covers peoples' transport needs across Scotland. It will begin a new chapter in the history of Scottish transport.

Further Education

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his report on the discharge of his duties for further education in Scotland as required under section 1 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992; and if he will make a statement. [52146]

Mr. Dewar: My Report on Further Education in Scotland for 1997 has been published today and has been laid before each House of Parliament.

Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The Report, entitled "Further Education in Scotland 1997: Report by the Secretary of State for Scotland" shows this Government's commitment to increasing participation in further education and providing opportunities for lifelong learning for all. We want to widen access to groups of people who are under-represented in the ranks of FE students, for instance by reason of age or social or economic background. Much has been achieved, with the figures for 1996–97, revealing for example, a marked increase in the number of students aged 25 or over. We are building on that progress.

We want to see, through development of a strategic framework focusing on both access and collaboration, a situation in which colleges see each other as partners rather than rivals in the provision of FE, working together to plan to offer a balance of FE provision which better reflects both student and labour market demands.

Further Education is entering a new era. It is positioned at the cross-roads of both Scottish education and of many of the Government's key policies and initiatives. Big challenges lie ahead but the FE sector has always demonstrated its ability and determination to respond to such challenges. The new era was launched last week when I announced an additional £214m for FE over the next 3 years to address historic underfunding, stabilise the sector's financial position and support further increases in student numbers.

My intention is to work with the FE colleges towards the shared objective of the opportunity of quality further education for all of Scotland's people, to enable them to fulfil their potential, not only contributing to but sharing in our future economic prosperity.

Marine Dredging Licences

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about progress on new procedures for the licensing of marine dredged minerals in Scotland. [52147]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government intend to introduce new regulations to license the extraction of minerals by marine dredging in Scotland by March 1999. The new procedures should make the process for obtaining licenses more open and efficient. The regulations will also address environmental concerns over the impact of dredging by implementing the requirements of EEC Directive 85/337/EEC (as amended by EC Directive 11/97/EEC) on Environmental Impact Assessment in so far as they apply to the extraction of minerals by marine dredging. There will be appropriate consultation on the provisions in due course.

The decision to introduce the regulations by March 1999 means that it is no longer necessary to put in place an interim scheme to administer the very limited dredging activity that takes place in Scotland as was announced to the House on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 212.

DEFENCE

Copthorne Barracks, Shrewsbury

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time military personnel are based at the Copthorne Barracks, Shrewsbury. [50549]

Dr. Reid: There are 104 full-time military personnel and 15 non-regular permanent staff currently based at Copthorne Barracks. There are in addition some 234 Territorial Army personnel based at the barracks.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the Copthorne Barracks in Shrewsbury in each of the last three years. [50550]

Dr. Reid: The costs of Copthorne Barracks, including pay and related costs of units based there, were some £13.5 million in 1997–98. Comparable figures for the previous two years are not available but are estimated to have been of a similar order.

Animal Experiments (Porton Down)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the animals subjected to experiments at Porton Down in each of the last five years died as a result of the experiments; and what happened to those animals that did not die. [50626]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of animals which died as a result of experiments at Porton Down.

A total of 44,913 procedures were carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down over the last five years. At the end the majority of the experiments, surviving animals were killed humanely using an approved method as specified in the project licence issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. Information on the number of procedures resulting in the deaths of animals is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

In 1990, a revision to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 required the number of procedures to be recorded rather than the number of animals involved. In most cases, the number of procedures equates to the number of animals. However, in some cases more than one procedure was carried out on a single animal. For example, during the last five years, a few horses and sheep were used to produce blood products and every blood sample taken was recorded as a procedure. These animals were not euthanised as part of the procedures. The number of procedures quoted above therefore overestimates the number of animals involved.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what species and breeds of animals have been subjected to experiments in each of the last five years at Porton Down. [50638]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your letter about the species and breeds of animals used in experiments at Porton Down in each of the last five years.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals have been subjected to experiments at Porton Down in each of the last five years. [50636]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of animals involved in experiments in each of the last five years.

The number of procedures conducted during each calendar year at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down since 1993 are shown in the table below:

Year	Number of procedures
1993	6,697
1994	7,416
1995	8,747
1996	11,097
1997	10,956
Total	44,913

In 1990, a revision to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 required the number of procedures to be recorded rather than the number of animals involved. In most cases, the number of procedures equates to the number of animals. However, in some cases more than one procedure was carried out on a single animal. For example, during the last five years, a few horses and sheep were used to produce blood products and every blood sample taken was recorded as a procedure. These animals were not euthanised as part of the procedures. The number of procedures quoted above therefore overestimates the number of animals involved.

Fast Jet Pilots

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fast jet pilots he estimates will leave on voluntary retirement before normal retirement age before EFA 2000 is in service; and if he will make a statement. [50839]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The Eurofighter is scheduled to enter service in mid 2002.

In the four financial years until then we estimate that the number of fast-jet pilots who will have left the RAF before the normal retirement age (55) will have been as follows:

Point of exit during service career	Forecast number[1]
8 years service[2]	15
12 years service[2]	25
Age 38/16 years service[2]	100
Age 44/22 years service[2]	5
Premature Voluntary Release	90
Total	235

Specialist Procurement Services Agency

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Specialist Procurement Services Agency for the financial year 1998–99. [52202]

Mr. Spellar: The Chief Executive of the Specialist Procurement Services (SPS) Agency is responsible for providing cost forecasting and pricing advice, quality assurance surveillance and asset accounting services to the Ministry of Defence as defined within the Agency Framework Document. During 1998–99 the SPS will be set the following key targets:

1. 20 per cent. improvement in SPS services identified by customers;
2. 90 per cent. of SPS reports delivered within dates agreed with customers;
3. Asset Accounting centre to audit:
   a. 96 per cent. of core accounts within the 12 month period;
   b. 100 per cent. of major accounts over the three year period;
4. Cost forecasting advice will be available to 93 per cent. of Category A and B equipment projects, as agreed within the agreed MOD Equipment Approval Committee programme.

Disposal Sales Agency

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Disposal Sales Agency for the financial year 1998–99. [52203]

Mr. Spellar: The Disposal Sales Agency was established as an agency within the Ministry of Defence on 1 October 1994. Its role is to provide a disposal sales service for surplus equipment stores, spares and other material belonging to the Ministry of Defence and other public sector organisations.

The Chief Executive of the Agency has been set the following key targets for the financial year 1998–89:

1. To achieve disposal sales income of £30M from Government to Government sales of surplus capital equipment and stores.
2. To achieve disposal sales income of £30M from commercial sales of MOD's surplus items.
3. To extend the Agency's disposal services to other public sector organisations and to secure an additional £1M of sales income as a result.
4. To develop, contract for, and introduce new IT systems by 31 March 1999, taking account of the Year 2000 requirements for equipment and software.
5. To put in place the mechanisms fully to test the level of customer satisfaction for the Agency's services, and those services provided by its appointed contractors.
6. To reduce the unit cost of generating £1M of sales to £65,000 from a baseline figure of £90,500 achieved in 1994–95.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for licences for the export of (a) paramilitary, (b) security and (c) police equipment to Ethiopia have been (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) revoked, (1) between February 1995 and May 1997 inclusive and (2) since May 1997; and what was the export licence category in each case. [50584]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained. Between 1 February 1995 and 1 May 1997, 19 Individual Export Licences were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Ethiopia of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, the so-called Military List: 18 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and one Open Individual Export Licence (OIEL). Between 2 May 1997 and 19 June 1998, 2 SIELs were issued covering the export to consignees or end-users in Ethiopia of goods subject to export control by being listed in the Military List. In the same period, no OIELs covering such exports were issued.

No SIELs or OIELs covering such exports were revoked and no applications for SIELs or OIELs covering such exports were refused in either period.

The entry in the relevant legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Individual licences may cover a range of goods with various ratings. Where this is so, the licence is included in the table in the total for all of the relevant ratings.

Individual Export Licences issued between 1 February 1995 and 19 June 1998 covering the export to Ethiopia of goods on the Military List

Rating	Number of SIELs issued between 1 February 1995 and 1 May 1997 covering goods with this rating	Number of OIELs issued between 1 February 1995 and 1 May 1997 covering goods with this rating	Number of SIELs issued between 2 May 1997 and 19 June 1998 covering goods with this rating
ML11	9	1	2
ML22	0	0	1

This information does not cover any Media OIELs that may have been issued during this period. Media OIELs authorise the export to all destinations of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists, when working in areas of conflict.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

It is not possible to break down these data in the manner requested as the equipment covered by many entries in the Military List could be used by military, paramilitary or police end-users.

In addition, goods on the Military List may have been exported to Ethiopia under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences valid at any time during the period are in the Library of the House.

Eurostar

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the competition issues arising from the equity participation by British Airways in Eurostar. [51289]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has announced, London and Continental Railways (LCR) will retain ownership of Eurostar (UK) Ltd. (EUKL)—the UK arm of the Eurostar international passenger train service. LCR will award a management contract to operate EUKL to a consortium comprising National Express Group, the national railways of France and Belgium, and British Airways. Those arrangements, details of which have yet to be settled, will be considered by the relevant competition authorities. In the first instance, it will be for the Director General of Fair Trading to consider whether those arrangements may give rise to a qualifying merger under the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Post Office

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of receipts from the sale of surplus assets by the Post Office in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [51579]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 20 July 1998]: I understand from the Post Office that the total proceeds received from sales of property were £40 million in 1995–96, £42 million in 1996–97, and £23 million in 1997–98.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total estimated value of Post Office surplus properties currently on the market. [51576]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 21 July 1998]: I understand from the Post Office that the total estimated value of their freehold properties currently on the market is £4 million. This excludes property under offer or on which contracts have been exchanged.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many potential purchasers of Post Office surplus properties who subsequently defaulted on the contract to buy were subject to legal action by the Post Office in 1996–97. [51578]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 21 July 1998]: I understand from the Post Office that there have been no such cases.

Aerospace Industry (Lancashire)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the aerospace sector in Lancashire. [51629]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Government are aware of the major economic importance of the aerospace industry for Lancashire, and for the North-West region more generally. This region is the largest single centre of UK aerospace activity, supporting 60,000 jobs. The Government work closely with the Consortium of Lancashire Aerospace to enhance this sector's competitiveness further.

Inventions, Designs and Trade Marks Protection

Ms Corston: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for assisting business in protecting its inventions, designs and trademarks. [52150]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am delighted to announce that I have today caused three Statutory Instruments to be laid which, subject to Parliamentary approval, will from 1 October 1998 substantially reduce the fees charged by the Patent Office in connection with patents, trade marks and registered designs. These reductions, coupled with others connected with international trade marks being introduced administratively, will in a full year amount to some £12 million, equal to 20 per cent. of the Office's present income from fees. The reductions have been made possible by major improvements in quality of service and substantial cost savings achieved by the Patent Office since its relocation to Wales in 1991. A number of fees are to be abolished altogether and this will be a major benefit in particular to small firms and private individuals. In addition we are reducing renewal fees on granted patents by an average of 18 per cent. with larger reductions in the earlier years when the full commercial potential of an invention may not have been realised.

This is a significant contribution to enhancing the competitiveness of British Industry and commerce and is very good news for all users of the Patent Office, especially small and medium-sized firms.

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish her Department's Competitiveness White Paper. [50226]

Mrs. Beckett: The White Paper will be published in the Autumn.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what were the results of the consultation on the Working Time Directive in respect of the inclusion of an explanatory code for the definition of working time; and if she will make a statement; [51637]

(2) if she will include, within the legislation for the Working Time Directive, provision for an explanatory code for the definition of working time. [51636]

Mr. Ian McCartney: A number of respondents to the consultation exercise asked for further guidance on the definition of working time. This will be provided in the guidance that we intend to publish during the Summer.

Export Explorer Programme

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress she has made in setting up the Export Explorer programme; what assessment she has made of its value to small businesses; and if she will make a statement. [50227]

Mrs. Roche: A full programme of Export Explorer visits is planned from September to March 1999, and will be run in conjunction with Business Links, trade associations, and other business support agencies. The pilot stage of the programme has demonstrated that the Export Explorer is welcomed by business, and can play an important part in helping small and medium enterprises to develop their international potential.

HEALTH

Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the Government's response to the Third report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement. [52151]

Mr. Milburn: I am very pleased to tell the House that the Government accept the main recommendation of the Third Report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee (MWSAC), that the annual intake of medical students in the United Kingdom should be increased by about 1,000.

The Government intend to phase the increase, so that approximately 5,450 students will be admitted by the year 2001 and approximately 6,000 will be admitted by 2005. This will allow the expansion in facilities dedicated to medical education to take place in a planned and orderly manner, and will allow the increase to be reviewed over time, in the light of other work on medical productivity, the recruitment and retention of doctors, and more generally, the future role of doctors and other professionals.

In parallel with the phased increase, the Government will seek to engage the medical profession and others in discussions about the future shape of the healthcare workforce, including such issues as productivity and skill substitution, and the implications for education and training.

The full response to the MWSAC recommendations has been placed in the Library.

NHS Ambulance Trusts

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment his Department has made of the age of ambulances in United Kingdom NHS ambulance trusts; and if he will publish the results. [51802]

Mr. Boateng: The Department recently conducted an informal assessment of the age of accident and emergency vehicles in National Health Service ambulance trusts in England. When the information is analysed, copies of the results will be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teacher Training Courses

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teacher training courses have been withdrawn, or have suspended recruitment, broken down by subject, for 1998 starts. [51820]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following providers will be ceasing to offer the following courses to prospective students from September 1998:

Greenwich University—history, mathematics, English, religious studies, information technology, modern foreign languages, business and information technology and science

King Alfred's College Winchester—design and technology

North East Essex Coastal Confederation—geography

Nene College—mathematics, English, science and geography

Loughborough University of Technology—design and technology.

The following providers have temporarily suspended recruitment for all the subjects they offer; these are:

Douay Martyrs Consortium—history, geography, English, mathematics, modern foreign languages, science and religious education courses

East Midlands Initial Teacher Training—design and technology, mathematics and science courses.

School Inspections

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what differences there are in the criteria he expects OFSTED to use in assessing EBD and non-EBD schools. [51633]

Mr. Byers: This is a matter for OFSTED. I have asked HM Chief Inspector, Chris Woodhead, to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Internet

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those private and public organisations involved in UK Net Year; how many schools have so far been connected to the Internet in 1998; and if he will make a statement. [51313]

Dr. Howells: UK Net Year is a private sector initiative developed and funded by industry. Details of the organisations involved with the initiative can be found on its website, at http://www.uknetyear.org.

The Department will publish towards the end of this year the results of a survey of ICT in provision in schools which will indicate how many schools were connected to the Internet by March 1998. Subsequent annual surveys will indicate the change in growth of schools with such connections.

WALES

Car Costs

10. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the costs of running a car in the rural parts of Wales. [50277]

Mr. Hain: Responses to the consultation exercise launched last year on the development of an integrated transport policy included a number relating to the interests of rural areas.

Primary Schools

11. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on funding for primary schools from September. [50278]

Mr. Hain: It is for individual local authorities to decide on their budgets for primary schools and to support schools in improving standards year by year. Resources are distributed in accordance with each authority's local management of schools scheme. We have provided an additional £50 million for revenue funding for all schools in 1998–99 plus £3.7 million to fund an additional 278 infant class teachers from September 1998.

Education Funding

12. Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of funding for education per pupil (a) in Denbighshire and (b) in Wales as a whole. [50279]

Mr. Hain: Estimated net current expenditure per pupil for 1998–99 is £2,331 in Denbighshire and £2,433 in Wales. It is for each authority to decide on funding for individual services; taking account in the case of schools of the priority we attach to driving up standards and securing improved outcomes for all pupils.

Welsh Development Agency

13. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of the comprehensive public expenditure review upon the budget and activities of the Welsh Development Agency. [50280]

Mr. Ron Davies: On 14 July, I announced an additional £2.2 billion to the Welsh budget over the next three years. A consultation paper will be issued in September inviting views on the detailed allocations within the Welsh budget; decisions will be announced later in the year.

Cardiology Services

14. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to develop paediatric cardiology and cardiac surgery services in Wales. [50281]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We are committed to the provision of high quality cardiac services for the children of Wales. The Department, in consultation with the health authorities, is currently considering the maintenance and development of the service.

Secondary Schools

15. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning class sizes in secondary schools in Wales. [50282]

Mr. Hain: None.

NHS Hospitals

16. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his plans for (a) NHS hospitals and (b) NHS staffing, following the comprehensive spending review. [50283]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Following the Government's Spending Review announcement, my right hon. Friend announced, on 17 July 1998, over £1 billion over the next three years for the NHS in Wales. We shall consult in September on the detailed allocations for the three years ahead.

Drug Rehabilitation

17. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to increase access to drug rehabilitation programmes in Wales. [50284]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Access to drug and alcohol rehabilitation programmes is primarily a matter for local authorities and health authorities as the main purchasers of these services on behalf of individual clients. In the light of concern about the level of referrals by purchasers to residential rehabilitation services in Wales, the Department has commissioned an independent review of purchasing requirements for, and the provision of, drug and alcohol residential and community facilities in Wales. A report of the outcomes of this review should be available in September. In the meantime, the Department provides direct funding in support of voluntary organisations which provide residential facilities offering treatment and rehabilitation to those misusing drugs and alcohol.

EU Structural Funds

18. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which parts of the Principality he expects to have their status altered as regards EU structural funds. [50285]

Mr. Hain: The Commission's draft regulations for the Structural and Cohesion Funds which are part of the Agenda 2000 package were published on the 18 March 1998. The Regulations must now be agreed by all fifteen Member States and approved where appropriate by the European Parliament.

Our overriding concern in the long negotiations ahead is to ensure that these draft Regulations are fair, affordable and durable, particularly to the UK and its regions. We do not expect the Regulations for the Structural and Cohesion Funds to be adopted until early 1999. It would therefore be premature to speculate on which areas might qualify or on the amount of any aid which they might receive once the new Regulations come into effect.

Class Sizes

19. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools currently have class sizes of over 30 for five, six and seven-year-olds; and how many will have such class sizes after September. [50286]

Mr. Hain: In September 1997 there were 563 schools with 1,063 infant classes of over 30 children. School census data for January 1998 will be available shortly. Grants totalling £3.7 million for 1998–99 have been awarded to 280 schools, mainly for additional teachers. This will reduce the number of infant classes with over 30 children by 683. Information on the number of schools with infant class sizes of over 30 in the 1998–99 school year will be collected by the January 1999 School Census.

Economic Strategy

21. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the economic strategy for Wales "Pathways to Prosperity", which was published on 7 July. [50288]

25. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the economic strategy for Wales published in early July. [50292]

Mr. Ron Davies: "Pathway to Prosperity—A New Economic Agenda for Wales" represents an important first step in addressing the economic challenges which face Wales. I was most grateful for the opportunity to debate its contents in the meeting of the Welsh Grand Committee which took place on 13 July 1998.

Welsh Assembly

23. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the level of staff and office salaries and allowances for the National Assembly for Wales. [50290]

Mr. Ron Davies: The National Assembly Advisory Group has considered the issue of support for Members in its consultation paper, "The National Assembly for Wales: Have your Say On How It Will Work" a copy of which is in the Library of the House, but have not addressed the levels of staffing support, salaries and allowances for Members. The Group will make its final recommendations to me in due course. I have not received any other representations on members' support staff or associated costs.

I have asked the Senior Salaries Review Body to consider the salaries and initial allowances to be paid to enable Members of the National Assembly to carry out their duties effectively; I expect that it will report its recommendations to me early next year.

Minimum Wage

24. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the implications of the minimum wage for employees in Wales. [50291]

Mr. Hain: I have received 27 representations concerning the implications of the minimum wage for employees in Wales.

Hill Farming

26. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on hill farming incomes in Wales. [50293]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In 1996–97 average net farm incomes for cattle and sheep farms in the Welsh Less Favoured Areas fell by 22 per cent. compared with the previous year, to £14,300. In 1997–98 they are forecast to fall by just over 40 per cent. compared with 1996–97, to £8,500. The Government recognise the seriousness of the situation and has taken significant steps to help livestock farmers.

Farmers (Financial Aid)

27. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning future financial aid for farmers in Wales. [50294]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I have received a considerable number of representations, both written and oral, in respect of future financial aid for farmers in Wales. We are fully aware of the problems facing farmers and are keeping the matter under review.

Further Education

28. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his strategy for further education in Wales. [50295]

Mr. Hain: My strategy for further education in Wales is inextricably linked to our lifelong learning proposals set out in our Green Paper 'Learning Is For Everyone' (LIFE), on which we are consulting. Together, the outcome of the LIFE consultation and the work of the Education and Training Action Group (ETAG) will help shape the future of post-16 learning in Wales.

Inward Investment

29. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what inward investment in Wales has been announced since May 1997. [50296]

Mr. Ron Davies: Since this Government came into office, 145 inward investment projects have been recorded for Wales promising almost 10,000 new jobs, over 4,000 safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £660 million.

Methadone

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to reduce the number of deaths from methadone in Wales. [50289]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Methadone can be obtained only on prescription. The North Wales Health Authority operates a project where the administration of the drug is supervised by the pharmacists. The Dyfed Powys Health Authority will shortly embark upon a similar scheme which, in common with the North Wales Health Authority scheme, will promote the need for care amongst misusers and encourage close working between health professionals and other agencies. The results will be evaluated and, if successful, consideration will be given to applying the projects in other parts of Wales.

Health Service Deficit

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the aggregate net deficit of the Welsh health authorities and hospital trusts on 31 March; and what estimate he has made of the likely aggregate net deficit on 31 March 1999. [51232]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The net deficit of the Welsh health bodies for 31 March 1998 and forecast position for 31 March 1999 is as follows:

£ million

	Cumulative position as at 31 March 1997	[1] [2]Deficit 1997–98	[3]Forecast deficits 1998–99
Health authorities	(14)	(10)	(12)
NHS trusts	1	(9)	(23)

[1] 1997–98 Unaudited Annual accounts of health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales. These figures should be treated as provisional
[2] Health Authorities are not under a duty to remain in balance in income and expenditure terms but must remain within their cash limit. No health authority breached its cash limit in 1997–98
[3] Figures are estimates provided by health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales

The 26 trusts are forecasting a total end of year deficit of £23 million in their financial returns for May 1998. The prospective health authority deficits for the current year are subject to review but may be in the region of £12 million. These forecasts are, in some instances, prior to formal contracts having been signed between the trusts and their main commissioners for 1998–99. Additionally, these estimates are before any financial support which may be offered by the Welsh Office has been taken into account.

Health Economists

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health economists are employed by each health authority in Wales. [51195]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Only North Wales Health Authority employs a health economist; it is a joint appointment with the University of Wales, Bangor.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the estimated total expenditure in its first year of operation and the population to be served by each proposed new NHS trust in Wales. [51197]

Mr. Win Griffiths: While recognising that trusts do not operate within artificial boundaries, the main areas and population and estimated expenditure for each of the proposed new trusts, if approved, are shown on the following table.

Proposed trust	Unitary authority areas served	Population (mid 1996)	Total estimated expenditure £000

[2] Includes Cynon Valley population served by North Glamorgan NHS Trust

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what cost-benefit analysis was undertaken prior to the proposal to establish a single NHS trust for Gwent; and if he will publish that analysis. [51196]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Gwent Health Authority undertook a review, between October 1997 and January 1998, of the current configuration of NHS trusts within its area, including informal local consultation with all interested parties and an analysis of all the possible options for change. Final recommendations were submitted to me in February 1998 and a copy of the Gwent Health Authority's report is being placed in the Library of the House. Further details about Gwent Health Authority's recommendations can be obtained from its Chief Executive.

Nursery Places

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in Wales in the provision of nursery and pre-school places under his childcare strategy. [51211]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I am giving careful consideration to the early years development plans for 1998–99 submitted by Welsh local authorities. From 1 September an early years education place should be available to all four year olds whose parents want one. The Government's objective for future years is to increase the level of provision available to three-year-olds through a combination of local authority, private and voluntary sector settings. The additional resources I announced for education on 15 July will have a part to play in this.

We are also making resources available under the National Childcare Strategy in Wales to ensure that all providers of nursery and pre-school care are able to play their part in meeting our objectives for child care and early education. In 1998–99 £50,000 will be available for good pre-school playgroups which are threatened with closure. And we will make available £250,000 to ensure that child care provision can expand to complement early years education places for four-year-olds. Details of how this money will be made available will be announced shortly.

Strategic Development (Powys)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for future Government funding for the strategic development scheme in Powys; and if he will make a statement. [51027]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office, in consultation with the Welsh Local Government Association and other groups, is reviewing the arrangements for delegated Strategic Development Scheme funding to local authorities. This review will help inform the Secretary of State's expenditure decisions later in the year.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review, if he will list the assets to be sold over the next three years by the Welsh Office and the National Assembly for Wales. [51469]

Mr. Ron Davies: There are many properties which will be offered for disposal over the next three years. The majority are health service assets and these are listed. Following the merger of the Welsh Development Agency (WDA), Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales we will receive detailed proposals about accommodation arrangements and these might involve a rationalisation of existing accommodation. Non-Departmental Public Bodies such as the WDA will continue to dispose of sites when appropriate.

Clinical Standards

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the development of clinical standards in Wales. [50273]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Measures to improve clinical standards in Wales were set out at the beginning of this year in the White Paper "Putting Patients First". We will shortly be publishing a consultation paper detailing proposals for raising the quality of care and ensuring consistently high standards of clinical excellence. We will do this in partnership with the Royal Colleges and other professional bodies and draw on the work of the Clinical Effectiveness Initiative over the last three years.

Health Care Staff

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to protect staff against violence in health care premises in Wales; and what steps are being taken to make occupational health services available to staff in primary care in Wales. [51586]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Tackling violence is one of the main human resource management priorities for the NHS and research is currently being undertaken to identify good practice examples of ways in which violence against staff working in the community can be reduced. This will form the basis of guidance to be issued shortly. Occupational health in primary care is a matter for general practitioners but some health authorities are exploring ways of setting up a service on a local basis.

Occupational Health

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which NHS trusts in Wales have access to an occupational health service; and which of those services are led by a consultant in occupational health. [51587]

Mr. Win Griffiths: All NHS trusts in Wales have access to an occupational health service. Nineteen of the NHS trusts provide their own occupational health service and the remainder contract with other healthcare providers. Of those that have their own occupational health service, ten have direct consultant input and of the remainder four have a Senior Clinical Medical Officer who is fully trained and on the Specialist Register of the Faculty of Occupational Medicine.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of NHS staff in Wales have access to an occupational health service. [51588]

Mr. Win Griffiths: 100 per cent. of hospital and community based staff have access to an occupational health service, but no information is collected for staff employed in primary care.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to ensure that the guidance, Occupational Health Services for NHS Staff (94)51, is being implemented in each NHS trust in Wales. [51589]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The guidance is not routinely monitored since it is a matter for NHS trusts as employers to ensure that their statutory duties are fulfilled. However, the Department has recently completed a survey and the results will be discussed with trusts over the next few months.

NHS Trusts (Health and Safety)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if health care purchasers are required to stipulate health and safety performance standards in their contracts with NHS trusts. [51590]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Health care purchasers are not required to stipulate health and safety performance standards in their contracts with NHS trusts.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what duties the NHS Executive has to ensure that Welsh trusts meet the provisions of health and safety legislation. [51591]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The NHS Executive is a part of the Department of Health and has no such remit in Wales. It is the duty of individual trusts to comply with Health and Safety legislation.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps the NHS Executive is taking to monitor compliance with health and safety legislation by NHS trusts in Wales. [51592]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The NHS Executive is a part of the Department of Health and has no such remit in Wales. The Health and Safety Executive monitor and enforce compliance by all employers, including NHS trusts.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if NHS trusts are required to include reports on their health and safety record in their annual reports. [51593]

Mr. Win Griffiths: NHS trusts have been asked to provide such information in their Annual Reports for 1997/98.

NHS Employees (Early Retirement)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NHS employees in Wales have retired early on health grounds in each of the last five years. [51584]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is kept by the NHS Pensions Agency but not in the form requested. Information on retirements of all types has been kept on a geographical basis only since April 1997. The figures prior to that date could be obtained only at disproportionate costs and, because of changes to Health Authorities and NHS trusts within that time the Agency could not guarantee their accuracy. In addition, not all NHS employees are in the NHS Pension Scheme and no data are held centrally for these staff.

However, I will write to my hon. Friend setting out the information from April 1997 as soon as possible, and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46685]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 June 1998]: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, the Chancellor's Departments routinely consult the public, interested parties and client groups by way of consultation papers, White Papers and a variety of other avenues on a wide range of policies and proposed legislation. My reply is therefore confined to research studies into public reaction to Government policy or potential new policies.

The projects funded by the Chancellor's Departments since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to Government policies and potential new policies are as follows:

Self Assessment for tax public information campaign:

To track levels of awareness and understanding of SA; to monitor understanding of the help available from the Inland Revenue to cope with the new system; and developmental research into elements of the campaign.

SA Budget Payment Plans:

Research into taxpayer views on payment methods.

Two alcohol and tobacco smuggling surveys:

To measure public perception and understanding of smuggling; and to assess the potential effectiveness of anti-smuggling publicity strategy proposals.

The results of these surveys have been placed in the Library.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 303, and for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) on 1 July 1998 Official Report, column 181, concerning research into presentational aspects of the individual savings account and the working families tax credit and into various surveys of PEP/TESSA holders.

Pensions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for assistance in future years for retired people in respect of their fuel bills. [49284]

Mr. Darling: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced to the House on 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–05, Winter Fuel Bonuses of £20 for every pensioner household in the country will be paid from next year. These are in addition to Cold Weather Payments, which will continue to be paid at the rate of £8.50 a week during periods of cold weather to pensioners receiving Income Support.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50677]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Public-private Partnerships

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) the Accountancy Standards Bureau and (b) others about the treatment of public-private partnerships in the national accounts. [51511]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 22 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the national accounts.

There have been no representations received by the Accountancy Standards Bureau or others regarding the treatment of public-private partnerships in the national accounts.

Wage Increases

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the quarter-on-quarter increases in wage rates in the private sector, expressed as a percentage of increases in the public sector for each quarter since 1995. [51423]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 22 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on increases in wage rates in the private and public sectors.

I have provided available information, calculated from the monthly Average Earnings Index (AEI), in the attached table. It should be noted that the AEI is a measure of change in gross earnings per head and does not directly measure wage rates. Furthermore, it takes no account of changes in average hours worked, changes in the balance between full-time and part-time employees, nor changes in the proportion of high and low paid employees.

Average earnings index, seasonally adjusted 1990 = 100

	Quarter on quarter increase		Private sector increase as a % of public sector increase
	Private Sector	Public Sector
March 1995	0.9	0.6	158
June 1995	1.1	0.5	227
September 1995	0.7	0.6	112
December 1995	1.0	0.6	155
March 1996	1.0	0.8	121
June 1996	1.2	0.7	173
September 1996	1.2	0.3	398
December 1996	1.1	1.1	103
March 1997	1.5	0.4	360
June 1997	0.7	0.7	101
September 1997	1.3	0.8	168
December 1997	1.6	0.8	206
March 1998	2.0	0.3	654

Notes:

Data are rounded to one decimal place

These estimates do not directly measure wage rates. Growth rates can be affected by changes in average hours worked, in the balance between full-time and part-time workers, and in the proportion of high and low paid workers.

Charities

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the review of tax treatment for charities. [51656]

Dawn Primarolo: There has been an excellent response to the first phase of the Review of Charities' Taxation. Over 3,000 letters were received.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been considered as part of the review of the tax treatment of charities. [51725]

Dawn Primarolo: Over 3,000 responses were received to the first phase of the Review of Charities' Taxation. All these contributions are currently being analysed and will inform a public consultation document.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been proposed in the review of the tax treatment of charities; and if he will make a statement. [51726]

Dawn Primarolo: No changes have yet been proposed by the Review of Charities' Taxation. Decisions on the scope for change will be taken following a public consultation exercise, due to start later this year.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an analysis of the figures used under Accounting and other adjustments on page 107 of the Comprehensive Spending Review report in each of the years listed in Table A2. [51475]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The table provides a breakdown of the accounting and other adjustments shown in table 2 and table A2 of the Comprehensive Spending Review, with accompanying brief explanatory notes.

Mrs. Liddell [holding answers 20 July 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive for National Savings. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question 51439 about what assessment the Agency has made of the performance of EDS and Siemens Business Services in public sector outsourcing contracts.

National Savings has gained a detailed knowledge of EDS and Siemens Business Services' performance in the areas of contractual compliance, behaviour towards transferring staff and business performance. In addition to financial and published analysis, NS has gained information from over 30 public sector organisations who are, or have been, receiving services from one or other of these companies. A wide range of private sector customers has also been approached, and CCTA have provided us with intelligence reports on both firms.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question 51434 about the number of staff in National Savings Operational Services who have taken early retirement and voluntary redundancy in 1995–96, 1996–97

Staff surpluses over the period 1995–96 to 1997–98 led to the release, on redundancy terms, of 735 individuals in total. The table below gives the figures for each year for the two relevant categories: early release and voluntary severance.

	Early retirement (50 and over)	Voluntary severance (under 50)
1995–96	268	317
1996–97	32	117
1997–98	1	0

Casual Contracts

1 April 1995: 2.2%

1 April 1996: 0.2%

1 April 1997: 0.8%

these figures include full and part-time permanent staff, staff on Fixed Term Appointments and those employed on casual contracts.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 22 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question 51432 about the level of reduction in staffing in National Savings Operational Services included in the Business Re-engineering Plan.

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question 51431 about the timetable for implementation of the Business Process Re-engineering plan in National Savings.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the European Commission to complete its investigation into price discrepancies for goods within the EU initiated at the York meeting of ECOFIN. [51667]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The European Commission are developing an extended scoreboard of indicators of effective market integration including price differentials, as set out in the Broad Economic Guidelines report agreed at the Cardiff European Council on 15 to 16 June. The Government expect the Commission to report on its work on price differentials at the Cologne European Council at the end of Germany's Presidency of the EU in spring 1999.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Drift Nets

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will publish the outcome of research into the catching of non-target species cetaceans by the tuna drift net fishing industry; [50405]

(2) what research his Department has undertaken to evaluate the advantages and disadvantages of the use of sonar equipment to deter cetaceans from swimming into tuna drift nets. [50406]

Mr. Morley: A study of the cetacean bycatch in the UK tuna drift net fishery in 1995 was deposited in the Library of the House in December 1995. The refusal of drift net fishermen to co-operate prevented a follow-up study taking place.

The Ministry has not undertaken research on the use of sonar equipment on tuna drift nets.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50683]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent monitoring his Department has carried out in known explosive dumping grounds to establish the levels of contamination of the marine environment. [51160]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The Department does not carry out any monitoring specifically in relation to munitions dumpsites. However, an extensive programme of monitoring for a wide range of contaminants is carried out in the seas around England and Wales. The results of this are published annually and copies placed in the Library of the House.

EU Agriculture Council

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 20 July; and if he will make a statement. [52143]

Dr. John Cunningham: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the European Union Council of Agriculture Ministers in Brussels on 20 July 1998.

The Austrian Presidency introduced its programme of work for the Council, the centrepieces of which are Agenda 2000 including wine reform, reform of the agrimonetary regime and animal welfare legislation.

In a debate on the Presidency's detailed plans for Agenda 2000, I welcomed their intention to press ahead with the negotiations in accordance with the timetable laid down by the Cardiff European Council, urging them to include detailed discussions on member states' ideas on the future of dairy quotas and compensatory aids and the application of subsidiarity to the proposed ceiling on direct payments to farmers.

During a brief discussion of the proposed reform of the agrimonetary regime, I stressed the need for equitable treatment between those countries entering the Single Currency next year and those not doing so, and for an early decision which would enable our farmers and traders ample time to prepare for introduction of the new regime on 1 January 1999.

In a debate on a possible EU trade agreement with the Mercusor countries and Chile, on which a Commission proposal is expected shortly, I noted the economic advantages which such agreement could open up, whilst drawing attention to the need to avoid complications in relation to the negotiations on Agenda 2000, the forthcoming WTO Round and EU enlargement. The Commission's proposal should be judged on its merits against this background.

Performance Targets

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what key performance targets Agriculture Ministers have set the Intervention Board for 1998–99. [52144]

Dr. John Cunningham: In agreement with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I have set the following targets for 1998–99:

	Target
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	99.0%
Percentage of claims processed correctly	98.5%
Cumulative running cost efficiency gains	2.5%
Improvement in index of productivity	4.0%
Ratio of disallowance to EAGGF funds handled	0.4%
To maintain expenditure within vote provision, cash and running cost limits
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	7.0%
Yield: cost ratio of anti-fraud activities	3.0:1.0

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to safeguard GMO trials from interference by third parties. [51458]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The responsibility for safeguarding field trials of genetically modified organisms lies with the holder of the consent issued by the Secretary of State under the relevant legislation.

The police are investigating these incidents when requested to do so by the company concerned. Officials in my Department are co-operating fully with the police inquiries.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the impact of rent caps for housing benefit purposes on rent levels. [51803]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are assessing the impact of the Local Reference Rent and Single Room Rent restrictions on claimants, landlords and the private rental market as a whole. We are gathering information from a variety of sources to make that assessment.

Pensions

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will state in respect of each financial year since 1990 (a) the level of the basic state retirement pension, (b) the level of the basic state retirement pension if upratings had always been made upwards to the nearest 5p and (c) the level of the basic state retirement pension if upratings had always been made upwards to the nearest 1p; [50621]

(2) what is her estimate of the additional cost to public funds of uprating the basic state retirement pension and the married woman's pension each year if rounding up (a) to the nearest 5p and (b) to the nearest 1p the percentage increase; [50623]

(3) if she will state in respect of each financial year since 1990 (a) the level of the married woman's pension, (b) the level of that pension if upratings had always been made upwards to the nearest 5p and (c) the level of that pension if upratings had always been made upwards to the nearest 1p; [50622]

(4) what is her estimate of the net additional cost to public funds in each financial year since 1990 if the basic state retirement pension and the married woman's pension had been uprated each year by rounding the percentage increase up (a) to the nearest 5p and (b) to the nearest 1p. [50624]

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the increases for the poorest pensioners will be a net increase; and if he will make a statement on the implications for housing benefit payments arising from increases. [51821]

Mr. Denham: From next April, Income Support rates will be increased to give the poorest pensioners a guaranteed minimum income of £75 per week for a single person. Couples and older pensioners will receive more: the full details of the increases are shown in the table.

Existing recipients, and pensioners who become entitled to Income Support as a result of these changes, will qualify for maximum eligible Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. Those with income above the new levels will also benefit, as the increases in the Income Support rates will apply in the calculation of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, resulting in a reduction in the amount of income taken into account.

Child Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average housing cost included in the protected income of absent parents under the current child support formula; [50712]

(2) what is the average amount of housing cost included in the protected income of absent parents with incomes under £200 per week. [50711]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As at 28 February 1998, the latest date for which information is available, the average amount of housing costs included in the protected income of a non-resident parent was £44.23 per week. For those cases where the net income of the non-resident parent is under £200 per week the amount was £36.66 per week.

Non-resident parents have a responsibility to support their children, including paying for their upkeep.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate how many, and what proportion of, absent parents would pay more maintenance under the formula for assessing maintenance proposed in the Green Paper on Child Support than they do currently broken down into those earning (i) £0 to £99, (ii) £100 to £149, (iii) £150 to £199, (iv) £200 to £249, (v) £250 to £299 and (vi) £300 to £400 per week. [50709]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All non-resident parents have a responsibility to support their children, including paying for their upkeep. We estimate that around 70 per cent. of non-resident parents will have a lower maintenance assessment under the proposals for a simpler formula set out in the Green Paper "Children First: a new approach" (Cm 3992).

The information requested on those facing a higher assessment is in the table.

Gross income (£/week)	Numbers with higher assessed liability (000s)	Percentage
£100-£149	20	5
£150-£199	25	7
£200-£249	20	6
£250-£299	10	3
£300-£400	10	3
Over £400	5	1
All	90	25

Notes:

1. Figures provided are for all those non-resident parents who are not in receipt of Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. The percentage figures show these as a proportion of all these non benefit non-resident parents
2. Estimates are based on the 1997–98 caseload
3. Figures rounded to the nearest 5000 and therefore may not sum

These figures relate to assessed liability and not to amounts actually being paid. Changes in liability will be phased in.

The Green Paper also proposes that most of the current provisions for exemption from the minimum payment should be abolished. We estimate, in current terms, that this would result in an additional 60,000 non-resident parents becoming liable for the minimum payment.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if letters to hon. Members in the name of the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency are signed personally by her. [51568]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. David Winnick, dated 21 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the letters from Honourable Members to the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency.

I should explain first that many Members prefer to write direct to the head of the local Business Unit directly responsible for the case in question, or to follow up questions through the dedicated MP help lines which we have set up in each of our Centres. That approach minimises delay where action is needed to resolve an individuals problem. I have asked for regular reports to be prepared for senior managers and for me, summarising main types and causes of such problems in order to ensure that, wherever possible, action is also taken over time to improve our general systems and training so as to minimise their re-occurrence.

Where Members prefer to write to myself the Parliamentary Correspondence Unit handle all my Parliamentary post and ensure deadlines are observed or urgent cases identified to give a rapid response.

In the majority of cases my Correspondence Unit will refer the letter to the relevant Business Unit or specialist central unit within the agency to provide the level of detail required to complete a response. Increasingly we expect the Unit to contact the Members office by telephone proactively where this may help to ensure that the problem is resolved as quickly as possible.

Once a final response has been prepared, this and the supporting background information are checked by managers fully accountable to me to ensure all points raised are covered and the response is factually and legally correct. I personally check the quality of responses regularly and I recently instituted a formal review of them during which a sample of 48 Members were asked about their style and usefulness. As a result of that feedback we intend to undertake an exercise over the next year to make those replies more personalised, briefer and more in "Plain English", and to further review the arrangements for their signature. At present some of those letters are personally signed by myself. In order to avoid excessive delay (during my necessary absence on other business) others are signed on my behalf either electronically by my Correspondence Unit; or by senior members of my management Board under formal delegation.

I hope this is helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will set out the terms of reference of each of the reviews in which the future of the income support residential care allowance is being considered; [51138]

(2) if she will list the reviews in which the future of the income support residential allowance is being considered; and when she expects each of these reviews to be completed; and when she expects to announce their conclusions. [51137]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government have established an independent Royal Commission to consider the future funding of long-term care and to make recommendations. Issues such as benefit provision for people in residential care fall within the scope of the Royal Commission's deliberations. The Royal Commission will report at the end of the year.

We have also asked officials to consider whether the residential allowance is meeting objectives for community care. This is not a formal review with specific terms of reference and work is at an early stage. It is too early to give an indication as to whether, or when, changes will be introduced.

Crisis Loan Scheme

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total amount of money given under the crisis loan scheme by her Department during the last 12 months. [51244]

Mr. Denham: Gross expenditure on crisis loans during the last financial year, 1997–98, was £54 million.

Full details of Social Fund expenditure during 1997–98 were published on 22 July in the Annual Report by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the availability of (a) stationery and (b) printed forms at Benefits Agency offices; and if she will make a statement. [51563]

Mr. Keith Bradley: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 21 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what assessment has been made of the availability of (a) stationery and (b) printed forms at Benefits Agency (BA) offices.

On 6 April 1998, a new system was introduced for ordering forms, leaflets and envelopes called the Customer Direct Initiative (CDI). The intention behind CDI is to reduce the cost of print and storage by introducing a direct service to the customer and placing ownership of stock with suppliers.

There have been some initial problems with the new system which has led to BA offices experiencing difficulties in obtaining forms and printed material. We have been working closely with suppliers to address these early problems and improvements are now being seen, such as the increased availability of stock to between 88% and 97% of the total requested and the continued reduction in supply chain problems. We expect these improvements to continue but will manage the situation carefully so that we can be satisfied that the system is working properly.

In addition, we have identified forms and stationery that are essential for our core business and suppliers have given assurances that these products will always be available and this position is being monitored daily.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Lone Parents

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in Kilmarnock and Loudoun were on income support in the periods (a) May 1995 to 1996, (b) May 1996 to 1997 and (c) May 1997 to 1998. [51631]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Desmond Browne, dated 21 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many lone parents in Kilmarnock and Loudoun were on Income Support (IS) in the periods May 1995 to 1996, May 1996 to 1997 and May 1997 to 1998.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency (BA) collates IS statistics by BA District. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries, Local Authority areas or specific geographical areas.

Such information as is available is provided in the attached annex. It relates to the BA's South West Scotland District which is made up of offices in Irvine, Kilmarnock, Ayr, Dumfries and Stranraer. The information is provisional and may be subject to change.

I hope that this is helpful.

Number of lone parents on Income Support in BA's SW Scotland District

Year	May	August	November	February
1995	9,610	9,804	9,581	9,673
1996	9,660	9,842	9,575	9,609
1997	9,649	9,712	9,363	9,401
1998	9,322	—	—	—

The figures represent only those lone parents who are in receipt of the lone parent rate of family premium.

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the number of lone parents in Kilmarnock and Loudoun who have taken up in-work benefits in the periods (a) May 1995 to 1996, (b) May 1996 to 1997, (c) May 1997 to 1998 and (d) May 1998 to July 1998. [51630]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of in work benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Desmond Browne, dated 21 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for an estimate of the number of lone parent families in Kilmarnock and Loudoun who have taken up in work benefits in the periods (a) May 1995 to 1996, (b) May 1996 to 1997, (c) May 1997 to 1998 and (d) May 1998 to July 1998.

The information is not available in the format requested. In work benefits, namely Family Credit (FC) and Disability Working Allowance (DWA), are administered centrally by the Benefits Agency's (BA) Income Related Benefits Directorate based at Preston.

Statistics are produced on a national basis and provide a snapshot of the number of families in receipt of FC or DWA within a particular BA office area at a given date. These statistics do not provide a breakdown of the numbers of single and two parent families in receipt of the benefits. However, national figures indicate that 53% of all recipients of FC and DWA are single parent families.

Using the above information, the details provided below estimate the number of single and two parent families in receipt of in work benefits in Kilmarnock at the dates shown.

Date	FC/DWA lone parent awards	FC/DWA two parent awards
July 1995	704	625
August 1996	795	705
August 1997	811	720
April 1998	795	706

I hope this information is useful.

Social Fund

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of the Social Fund has been taken up by administration costs in each of the last five years; [51443]

(2) how much was allocated under the Social Fund in the form of (a) loans and (b) community care grants in each of the last five years in (i) Coventry and (ii) the West Midlands. [51445]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 21 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what proportion of the Social Fund (SF) has been taken up by administration costs in each of the last five years, and how much was allocated under the SF for loans and community care grants (CCGs) in each of the last five years in Coventry and the West Midlands.

No proportion of the SF is taken up by administration costs. The administration of the SF scheme is an integral element of the Benefit's Agency (BA)'s overall staffing and development costs. A breakdown of those related to the SF is detailed in Annex 1. However, you may be interested to know that, from April 1999, there is provision for the introduction of a new, discrete and simplified SF Budgeting Loan scheme. This will bring tangible benefits to customers as well as the prospect of real efficiencies and reductions in administrative costs.

Information on SF allocations in Coventry and the West Midlands is not available in the format requested because BA District and Area boundaries are not co-terminus with those of Local Authorities or Parliamentary constituencies. The BA's Midlands Area Directorate is made up of the Birmingham Chamberlain, Birmingham Heartlands, Birmingham North West, Birmingham North East, Birmingham South East, Birmingham South West, Coventry, Hereford and Worcester, and Warwickshire Districts. In addition, because of a reduction in the number of BA Area Directorates nationally, the Districts of Wolverhampton, Shires, Sandwell, and Walsall were added to the Midlands Area Directorate in 1996.

Information on the grant and loan allocation for the Midlands Area Directorate and the Coventry district are displayed in Annex 2. Current and historical details of grant and loan allocations for all BA Districts are available in the Library.

I hope that this is helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the levels of fraud in applications to the Social Fund; and what measures are proposed to eliminate fraud. [51444]

Mr. Field: Tackling fraud and abuse is a top priority for the Government and part of the Government's intention to deliver a first class "pukka" service. The Social Security Act 1998 contains measures that will enable discretionary Social Fund payments obtained through misrepresentation or failure to disclose a material fact to be recovered by deductions from prescribed benefits. This legislative change, which will be introduced later this year, will close a loophole that has allowed some people to benefit from fraud.

Assessment of the levels of fraud in Social Fund applications is the responsibility of Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 21 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what assessment she has made of the levels of fraud in applications to the Social Fund (SF); and what measures are proposed to eliminate fraud.

The Benefits Agency (BA)'s Benefit Review Programme aims to measure how much benefit is being paid incorrectly (including fraud) and establish causes of incorrect payments. So far Benefit Reviews have been carried out on Income Support, Unemployment Benefit, Housing Benefit, Retirement Pension, Invalid Care Allowance, Disability Living Allowance and Child Benefit, but not on the SF. Therefore, no formal assessment has been made of the level of fraud in SF applications.

During 1995, as part of the risk management work carried out by the BA, an exercise was undertaken on known weaknesses within the SF processes, both IT and clerical. This resulted in the formation of a Security Action Plan for SF, which seeks to address these risks and take account of any new ones that come to light. The plan has been reviewed regularly up to November 1997 and has resulted in several risks and weaknesses being removed.

The Government takes fraud against the Social Security system very seriously. The Green Paper Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future, published by the Secretary of State on 13 July 1998, set out a comprehensive approach to tackling fraud, and as part of our work to deliver it we are looking at our future work programme, including Benefit Reviews, which help inform our knowledge on the nature and scale of fraud and incorrectness.

I hope that this is helpful.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish her annual report on The Social Fund for 1997–98 and the Social Fund Commissioner's annual report; and if she will make a statement. [52142]

Mr. Denham: The Secretary of State's annual report on the Social Fund for 1997–98 (CM4003) was published today and has been laid before Parliament.

The report records that total gross expenditure in 1997–98 was £520.5 million. This included almost two million non-repayable grants and interest free loans worth £462 million and 48 thousand funeral payments, 197 thousand maternity payments and 55 thousand cold weather payments worth a total of £58.6 million. In addition, seven million pensioner households received winter fuel payments worth nearly £200 million.

The report also looks ahead to the changes contained in the Social Security Act 1998 which support our aim of an active modern service. These include the introduction, in 1999, of a fact-based budgeting loan scheme that will be simpler, fairer, easier for applicants to understand and quicker for staff to operate. Decisions under the simplified scheme will be more transparent as they will be based on a common set of specified personal circumstances.

The Social Fund Commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies placed in the Library.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish the first annual report of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate; and if she will make a statement. [52145]

Ms Harman: I have today published the first annual report by the Director General of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate (BFI).

Countering fraud is high on the Government's agenda. The green paper published last week, "Beating Fraud is everyone's business: Securing the future" (CM4012), sets out our overall strategy for tackling fraud. The fight against fraud is not just about investigating and detecting fraud when it happens; it is about stopping it getting into the system in the first place. The BFI, which I launched on 5 November, has a unique role to play here in driving up standards, by ensuring that DSS agencies and local authorities are doing their job properly, by actively promoting good working practices and in contributing to future policy development.

This new organisation is still at an early stage in its development but this first year has been one of significant achievement. BFI has established teams of inspectors based at four separate sites and its inspection process has been developed and rigorously tested in a programme of trial inspections, including work in the Benefits Agency. The report of the first live inspection of Blackpool Borough Council, published earlier this year, made valuable recommendations on a range of counter-fraud activities, especially highlighting improvements in work aimed at combating Housing Benefit fraud by landlords.

Copies of the published BFI Annual Report are available in the Library. Further copies are available on request.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Director of Public Prosecutions

Maria Eagle: To ask the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions will publish her annual report. [52517]

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has today published her annual report and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Government Lawyers

Mr. Cranston: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the role of Government lawyers in England and Wales. [52368]

The Attorney-General: Lawyers employed by the Government have a central role in assisting Ministers in the discharge of their functions. They are civil servants, and are accountable to Ministers, but nevertheless they are professionally independent and have responsibilities to the Courts and their professional bodies. In recognition of the special nature of the work of Government lawyers, and in consultation with the Treasury Solicitor, I have decided to publish a Guidance Note concerning their role.

The Note provides guidance to Government lawyers as to:

1. The inter-relationship between their obligation as civil servants and as members of the legal profession;
2. Their role regarding other civil servants and the Ministers or office-holders to whom they are accountable.
3. The special position of prosecutors in the decision-making process; and
4. The inter-relationship between the role of Legal Advisers to Departments and that of the Law Officers in the provision of legal advice to the Government.

I am placing a copy of the Guidance Note in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49225]

The Attorney-General [holding answer 6 July 1998]: This answer covers the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department (and the Government Property Lawyers Agency), the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office.

(i) The Government Car and Despatch Agency owns vehicles used by this Department and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 446.

(ii) In addition, the Crown Prosecution Service leases a total of 33 vehicles; 26 of which have diesel engines and 7 have unleaded petrol engines. The engine cubic capacities for these vehicles are as set out.

1500	1
1600	3
1700	7
1800	12

2400	1
2400	3

13 vehicles fall due for replacement in 1998–99, 12 in 1999–2000 and 8 in 2000–2001.

DEFENCE

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48665]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what target his Department sets for the maximum time to respond to letters from hon. Members; what proportion of letters meets that target; and what is the average time taken to respond to a letter from an hon. Member. [49847]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1.

Executive Agency Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletter produced for the staff of (a) the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency, (b) the Army Training and Recruiting Agency and (c) the Defence Codification Agency; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [51133]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. A. Bradshaw to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 23 July 1998:

Defence Codification Newsletter—DCA News

1. I am replying to your question to the Secretary for Defence about the newsletter produced by the Defence Codification Agency (DCA), as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive DCA.

2. The Agency publishes a newsletter called 'DCA NEWS'. This is a document which is published quarterly, it has no classified information content and therefore carries no protective marking. The first issue was dated June 1994.

Letter from P. D. Foxton to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 23 July 1998:

I am replying to the recent questions you tabled to the Secretary of State for Defence for those matters that fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Supply and Distribution Agency (ABSDA). You asked about the current security classification of the Agency newsletter produced for the staff, how often it is produced and when the first edition was produced.

The ABSDA staff newsletter, "Baseline", does not have or require any security caveat and it is produced on a bi-monthly basis. The first edition was produced in January 1995, three months prior to the formation of ABSDA, to inform staff of the changes that were to take place.

I trust I have answered your questions satisfactorily.

Letter from P. A. Wilson to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 23 July 1998:

I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the classification and frequency of publication of the newsletter produced by this Agency, as this matter falls within the responsibility of the Army Training and Recruiting Agency.

The Agency produces a bi-monthly publication, ATRA News, which is unclassified. The first edition was published in April 1997.

Asset Sales

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the proceeds of asset sales by his Department have been offset against the estimates of total defence spending published in paragraph 197 of the Strategic Defence Review; [50845]

(2) what are the assumed receipts from asset sales by his Department in each of the years 1998–99 to 2001–02; [50844]

(3) if the figures in paragraph 197 of the Strategic Defence Review for total defence spending reflect the deduction of the proceeds of asset sales. [50846]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The future provision for defence, set out in paragraph 197 of the Strategic Defence Review White Paper, reflects forecast receipts from a continuing programme of asset sales. This includes defence estate disposals, receipts from which should exceed £700 million over the next four years. Additional one-off receipts are expected to be available in 2001–02. Details of assumed receipts form part of my Department's internal plans: these represent projections and assumptions which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of the defence programme. Accordingly, I am withholding the information requested under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Joint Defence Centre

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Joint Defence Centre will be co-located with the Joint Services Command and Staff College; [51300]

(2) if (a) the Commandant of the Joint Defence Centre and (b) the Commandant of the Joint Service Command and Staff College will be required to have attended the Higher Command and Staff Course; [51294]

(3) what savings will be achieved in single service doctrine centres by the establishment of the Joint Defence Centre; [51295]

(4) who the Commandant of the Joint Defence Centre will report to in the chain of command; [51296]

(5) what are the projected costs of the Joint Defence Centre. [51299]

Mr. George Robertson: [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Following the Strategic Defence Review (Cm 3999) I have established a study team to consider the detailed responsibilities, organisation, location, resources and costs associated with the formation of a Joint Defence Centre. The team is due to report at the end of the year. It would be premature to comment in advance of their findings.

The work of the Joint Defence Centre will be overseen at the highest level; detailed arrangements for the command and management of the centre are also being examined by the study team.

I intend that the Joint Defence Centre will be central to development of our joint Service vision and integral to our strategic planning process. As such I place greatest emphasis on the experience and calibre of those appointed to command and staff the centre, as I would for any officer holding a key joint appointment.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected cost of the construction of the Joint Services Command and Staff College at Shrivenham. [51298]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Defence Management (Watchfield) Ltd. is contracted to provide a complete service in support of the teaching and accommodation facilities at the JSCSC at Watchfield, for which it will be paid a monthly service charge on the basis of usage. The Net Present Value of the payments is assessed to be about £200M over the 30 year contract period. My Department does not make a specific payment to cover construction costs.

RAF Northolt

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the future of RAF Northolt; and if he will list them. [51755]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Pound) on 18 July 1998, Official Report, column 264.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has (a) made and (b) evaluated relating to the use of RAF Northolt as a possible feeder or reliever airport for Heathrow Airport. [51201]

Dr. Reid: The Ministry of Defence has neither undertaken nor evaluated any studies relating to the use of RAF Northolt as a possible feeder or reliever airport for Heathrow Airport.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights other than RAF flights have used RAF Northolt in the last five years; and if he will list them by category. [51203]

Dr. Reid: The information that my hon. Friend requested for the period 1993 to 1997 is set out in the tables. The figures shown are the number of movements, where one movement is defined as an aircraft either landing or taking off. Until 1995 information was collated only in terms of military and civil movements as shown in the first table. Since 1996, military movements at RAF Northolt have been further sub-categorised as RAF, other military, or civil aircraft on Government business. This more detailed classification is reflected in the second table.

Year	Military movements	Civil movements
1993	8,310	4,650
1994	7,319	5,425
1995	7,981	6,492

Year	RAF	Other military	Civil aircraft on Government business	Civil
1996	5,474	1,878	548	6,469
1997	5,129	1,623	498	6,976

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what projections his Department have made of the use by general aviation traffic of RAF Northolt airport in the next three years. [51202]

Dr. Reid: None. It is current Ministry of Defence policy to limit use at RAF Northolt to 7,000 civil movements per annum. In addition, the Ministry of Defence has limited opening hours to between 8am and 8pm on weekdays with weekend use permitted only when the station is open for operational reasons. Furthermore, only quieter aircraft which have a maximum capacity of 30 passengers are allowed to use Northolt.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects a decision to be made on the future of RAF Northolt. [51754]

Dr. Reid: Early proposals on the future of RAF Northolt are highly unlikely. There are several strands of work currently under way which must be taken into account. Firstly, the Ministry of Defence is drawing up a strategic development plan for the defence estate in the Greater London area, which will include RAF Northolt. In addition, there is work which has been set in hand by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on business aviation in the south-east. Finally, the Integrated Transport White Paper published on 20 July 1998 provides a framework for further work on airports policy.

War Graves

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance is available from his Department to help in the cost of a person visiting a war grave in a European war grave cemetery. [51241]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1985, the Royal British Legion have operated the War Widows Pilgrimage Scheme on behalf of the Ministry of Defence to provide financial assistance to any Service widow, whose husband died and was buried overseas between 1914 and 1967, to visit the grave.

The Scheme, which entitles any Service widow to make one visit to the grave, is funded by a Grant-in-Aid from the Defence Budget which contributes $\frac{7}{8}$ of the cost of a pilgrimage; the remaining $\frac{1}{8}$ of the cost is borne by the widow. There are no plans to expand the Scheme to include other family members.

As I announced in the House of Commons on 5 May 1998, Official Report, column 282, following an approach by the Royal British Legion, I agreed to an extension of the War Widows Pilgrimage Scheme until 31 March 2001. I intend to conduct an automatic review every two years; as long as there are Service widows eligible to visit their husband's grave, this Government will continue to renew the Scheme.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the contracts between the Nuclear Accident Response Organisation and the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency; how much each contract is worth; how long each contract lasts; and when each was signed. [46821]

Dr. Reid: The single contract between the HQ Nuclear Accident Response Organisation and the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency is for the provision of radiological protection services. The contract is renewed annually, runs between 1 April and 31 March and is worth around £75,000.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of currently available space for storage of radioactive waste is currently used; and what percentage he estimates will be used by (a) 1 April 2000, (b) 1 April 2005 and (c) 1 April 2010. [51154]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 July 1998]: I am satisfied that there is sufficient storage space to accommodate safely all my Department's radioactive wastes beyond 2010. Details of my Department's radioactive waste arisings at 1994 are publicly available in the most recent NIREX inventory.

Details about the anticipated percentage usage of the available storage capacity for the dates 1 April 2000, 1 April 2005 and 1 April 2010 are dependent on future decisions about the timing of decommissioning of facilities and the remediation of sites.

Sri Lankan Military Officers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Sri Lankan military officers are currently being taught at United Kingdom educational establishments, including military colleges; which institutions they are attending; and how many are at each institution. [51798]

Dr. Reid: None.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance has been given to the Government of Sri Lanka to establish their Army Staff College; and if any British personnel are attached to the college. [51800]

Dr. Reid: A Short Term Training Team comprising 2 Lieutenant Colonels visited Sri Lanka between 8 September and 21 December 1997 to assist in the establishment of the country's Army Staff College. Since the beginning of this year, one Colonel has served as an instructor at the Sri Lankan Army Staff College.

Bilderberg Meeting, Turnberry

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 659, on the Bilderberg meeting at Turnberry, if he will list the main topics discussed at the meeting and place copies of (a) the agenda and (b) the minutes of the meeting in the Library. [51550]

Mr. George Robertson: I have no Ministerial responsibility for the agenda or production of a record of the Bilderberg meeting which I attended in May this year.

Kneller Hall

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the Government's plans for the future of Kneller Hall; and what recent discussions have taken place on this subject; [51598]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Royal Military School of Music's future occupancy of Kneller Hall. [51600]

Mr. Spellar: There have been no recent discussions on the Royal Military School of Music's future occupancy of Kneller Hall. The Government currently have no plans to move the school from its present site. More widely, Kneller Hall is one of the sites to be considered by the Greater London Strategic Development Plan. This study flows from the Strategic Defence Review and has the objective of identifying opportunities to meet defence estate requirements in the most cost effective manner. A report will be produced at the end of the year and full consultation will take place before we reach any final decisions on those sites that may be affected.

Armistice Anniversary

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce to Parliament the results of his review of death sentences carried out in the Great War prior to the 80th anniversary of the Armistice on 11 November 1999. [51860]

Dr. Reid: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 440; what were the export control categories of the items which went with the Hawk aircraft; how many items of each equipment category went; and if the licences for any of those items were granted after May 1997. [49412]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence said on 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 440, the timing of the delivery of any equipment is a matter for the exporter, subject to the conditions of any export licence. I understand that on 10 July British Aerospace informed officials at the Ministry of Defence that it had delivered no Hawk aircraft to Indonesia between 2 May 1997 and that date.

An applicant for an individual export licence must, of course, provide adequate information to enable the Government to decide whether or not to issue a licence, but there is no requirement that a trade name (such as 'Hawk') be specified on an application, or that the details be recorded on the Export Control Organisation's computer databases. Therefore, it is not possible to compile a list of all standard or open individual export licences granted since 2 May 1997 covering the export to Indonesia of goods intended for, or capable of, use with a particular type of aircraft, except by recourse to the paper records of all licences covering exports to Indonesia, which would entail disproportionate cost.

However, as I stated in an answer to my hon. Friend on 21 July 1997, Official Report, columns 448–49, licences covering the export to Indonesia of Hawk aircraft and equipment, including weapons systems and spares, had been issued on 2 January 1996 and 22 November 1996. The export of this ancillary equipment was controlled under entries ML4, ML5, ML10, ML15, ML16, ML18, ML22, and PL 5017 of Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Workers

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to make to the arrangements for overseas domestic workers who accompany their employers to the United Kingdom. [52283]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have been concerned for some time at reports of abuse of domestic workers accompanying their employers to the United Kingdom. We have been working with Kalayaan, the organisation which represents overseas domestic workers, to see what changes we could make to the conditions under which they are admitted, with a view to improving them and preventing abuse.

With effect from today, only those domestic workers whose duties exceed those set down in the International Labour Organisation's International Standard Classification of Occupations will be allowed to accompany their employer to the United Kingdom. This means that those whose duties are only cleaning, washing and cooking will not qualify. Once in the United Kingdom, they will be allowed to change domestic employment to another employer, provided the nature of their duties meets the above criteria.

These changes, which we shall include in the Immigration Rules at a suitable opportunity, will reduce the number of overseas domestic workers admitted to the United Kingdom. However, once here, they will be able to change to another employer if they suffer abuse from their original employer. We also propose to regularise the stay of those overseas domestic workers who, because of the shortcomings of the provisions in the past, find themselves in an irregular position through no fault of their own.

Firearms Consultative Committee

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the ninth Annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee. [52417]

Mr. Straw: I have placed in the Library today a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Forensic Science Service

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will lay before Parliament the Annual Report for the Forensic Science Service. [52418]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before Parliament copies of the Forensic Science Service (FSS) Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98.

The Report and Accounts details the Agency's performance against its targets. The FSS continues to grow at a significant pace, and efficiency savings are at the highest level since it became an agency in 1991. The FSS passes on these improvements to customers through real price reductions and higher investment in both research and development and infrastructure to improve the quality of products and services.

The achievement on four main indications was as follows:

Full cost recovery

The target was exceeded. The Operating surplus before exceptional items after interest was £3 million, representing a recovery of costs of 105.3 per cent. This is sufficient to recover brought forward accumulated deficit of £2 million;

Unit cost £80.91

The target was exceeded. The unit cost achieved was £79.88, representing an underlying efficiency improvement of 5.8 per cent. (against a target of 3.9 per cent.);

Achieve 90 per cent. of agreed delivery dates;

72 per cent. of agreed delivery dates was achieved. The increased volume of business made it impossible to achieve this target. The number of delivered jobs was well ahead of expectations, but increase in capacity is in hand to meet future customer demands within the target times; and

Maintain quality accreditation (NAMAS M10 and BS EN ISO 9001)

Accreditation was maintained and extended to other scientific areas.

The total number of delivered jobs—which represent individual parts of a case—showed a greater than predicted increase of 28 per cent. Measures were put in place to minimise the impact on turnaround times.

The speed of delivery of DNA jobs will be further improved by the recruitment of more scientific staff and the new DNA unit at Huntingdon.

Prison Accommodation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the certified normal accommodation for each prison in England and Wales (a) in 1998 and (b) for each of the next seven years. [51404]

Ms Quin: The table lists the 1997–98 actual financial year averages and the 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 forecast averages of certified normal accommodation (CNA) for each prison in England and Wales. There are no changes forecast to CNA beyond March 2002, although plans are currently under review.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51273]

Mr. Straw: The information requested in respect of grants and awards directly administered by the Home Office is given in the table.

The Home Office wants its grant and awards programmes to reach as many potential applicants as possible and uses a variety of national and local media outlets, plus its network of contacts, to ensure that this is achieved. I have no plans to produce an aggregated list of these programmes regularly.

CS Spray

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of recorded incidents involving the use of CS gas as a criminal weapon for the most recent five years for which records are available. [51392]

Mr. Michael: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Statistics of the use of firearms in crime are reported by police forces to the Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate broken down into five categories: air weapons; handguns; rifles; shotguns; and other weapons. The 'others' category usually involves the use of some form of prohibited weapons. To provide the detailed information requested would require a manual search of all the returns provided by forces for each of the last five years.

Party Conferences

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what level of special grant to Lancashire Constabulary has been authorised to assist with the cost of policing at the Labour Party Conference in 1998; and how the level was calculated; [51396]

(2) what representations he has received from Lancashire Constabulary on the cost of policing the Labour Party Conference in Blackpool in 1998; [51395]

(3) what charges have been levied by Lancashire Constabulary on political parties to meet the costs of policing party conferences in each year since 1995. [51403]

Mr. Michael: There is no question of any police force levying a charge on political parties to meet the costs of policing a national conference. The power to assist with these costs is quite recent, having been provided for in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

The power to pay special grant to police authorities for the policing of party conferences was set out in the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. No clear criteria for payment was set down, but we are now trying to develop an appropriate and coherent approach.

The costs of policing party conferences at Blackpool since 1995, as estimated by Lancashire Constabulary, are set out in the table.

Year	Labour Party	Conservative Party
1995	—	[1]662,000
1996	2,620,000	—
1997	—	2,245,000

[1] Lancashire were only able to provide information on additional costs for 1995

The Lancashire Police Authority was given a special grant of £750,000 towards the additional costs of policing the Conservative Party Conference in 1997. For 1998–99, we have authorised a payment of grant of up to £750,000 as a contribution to the costs of safeguarding national security at this year's Labour Party Conference in Blackpool. A similar sum is being made available to Dorset Police Authority in respect of this year's Conservative Party Conference. Only £1.5 million was available for allocation between Dorset and Lancashire forces this year. As both forces were expecting to incur similar additional costs, we decided that the grant should be divided equally between them.

I met members of the Lancashire Police Authority in January about the funding settlement for 1998–99 when they expressed concern at the level of the special grant available for policing party conferences and I have recently met representatives of the Dorset Police Authority to discuss similar issues. I have asked for the views of the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities about the future allocation of this grant, with a view to determining a fair way of assisting police with the activities which are related to the main party conferences. The views of Lancashire and Dorset will be borne in mind at that stage.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what public funds have been made available to political parties to assist with the cost of (a) the policing and (b) other security measures at party conferences in Blackpool in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998. [51402]

Mr. Straw: (a) No public funds have been paid to political parties in respect of policing costs at party conferences.

1996: £529,000.00

1997: £575,268.92

1998: None as yet.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality are currently outstanding. [51538]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 30 June 1998, there were approximately 95,500 applications awaiting determination.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents have involved armed officers of the Metropolitan Police in the Greater London area in each of the last three years. [51540]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the number of incidents involving armed officers in the Metropolitan Police District is as follows:

Year	Number of incidents
1995	1,438
1996	1,637
1997	1,660
1998	[1]923

[1] 1 January to 24 June

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of drug related deaths in prisons in England and Wales in each of the last five years. [51541]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table.

Drug related deaths in prisons in England and Wales

Year	Number of drug related deaths
1993	7
1994	9
1995	5
1996	1
1997	2
Total	24

Shootings

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of shootings with handguns have been reported since their possession was made illegal; and how many were reported over the last similar period before the ban was introduced. [51654]

Mr. Michael: The Criminal Statistics are collected and published on a yearly basis to 31 December. The figures for the year ending 31 December 1997 are not yet available. Because of this, it is not yet possible to provide the information requested. In the year ending 31 December 1996, there were 2,956 notifiable offences recorded by the police in which handguns were reported to have been used.

The Firearms (Amendment) Acts 1997 were passed in order to ensure as far as possible that the terrible events which took place at Dunblane Primary School on 13 March 1996 would never be repeated.

The legislation was not intended specifically to reduce the use of handguns in crime. Nevertheless, the legislation will mean that the several hundred handguns misappropriated from private homes and cars each year will no longer be available to swell the number of illegally held weapons.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the planned date for the introduction of the integrated caseworking system in the Immigration and Nationality Department; what problems have been encountered in relation to the supporting technology and software for the system; what was the original estimated cost of introducing the system; what is the revised estimated cost of introduction; and if he will make a statement. [51601]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 633, and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 436. I have undertaken to write to both hon. Members when the timetable for the introduction of the system is known. The resolution of the technical difficulties which have caused the delay is a matter for the service provider, Siemens Business Services (SBS). Under the Private Finance Initiative contract, the costs of introducing the system fall to SBS. After the system is introduced, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will pay a scale of service charges calculated in relation to the level of improvement in efficiency actually achieved.

Criminal Attempts and Forgery and Counterfeiting Acts

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are currently held at HMP Wormwood Scrubs following their conviction for offences contrary to (a) Section 1 of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 and (b) Section 3 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981. [51604]

Ms Quin: The information requested could be obtained only by examining individual prisoners records at the prison, which would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were arrested at (a) Heathrow airport and (b) other United Kingdom airports for offences contrary to (i) Section 1 of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 or (ii) Section 3 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981, in (1) 1995–96, (2) 1996–97 and (3) 1997–98. [51603]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not normally collected centrally. However the Metropolitan police have been able to provide information on persons accused—that is, a count of persons arrested and subsequently proceeded against. The information relates to persons accused in the Heathrow division of attempting to commit a notifiable offence and those accused under sections 3 and 4 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981. The information is given in the table.

To obtain similar information from all police forces which have an airport located in their area would incur disproportionate cost, since manual searches through individual records would be required.

Persons accused at Heathrow airport	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Accused of attempting to commit a notifiable offence	201	232	206
Accused of offences under sections 3 and 4 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981	50	43	66

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what projections have been made of the number of asylum applications to be (a) determined and (b) refused by his Department in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999, (iii) 2000, (iv) the financial year 1998–99 and (v) the financial year 1999–2000. [51606]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I would ask the hon. Member to await the major announcement my right hon. Friend shall be making on immigration and asylum next week.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the immigration-related applications for leave to move for judicial review in 1996–97 were (a) asylum-related and (b) non-asylum related. [51611]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Of the 1,830 immigration related applications for leave to move for judicial review lodged in the financial year 1996–97, it is estimated that 70 per cent. related to applications for asylum and the remaining 30 per cent. to other non-asylum cases.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many non-asylum immigration appeals have been (a) received by his Department, (b) sent to the Immigration Appeals Authority and (c) determined by the Immigration Appeals Authority in each month of 1998; and how many such appeals are currently awaiting hearing by adjudicators of the Immigration Appeals Authority; [51613]

(2) how many appeals against a refusal of asylum have been (a) received by his Department, (b) sent to the Immigration Appeals Authority and (c) determined by the Immigration Appeals Authority in each month of 1998; and how many such appeals are currently awaiting hearing by special adjudicators of the Immigration Appeals Authority. [51612]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested in points (a), (b) and (c), relating to asylum and non-asylum appeals is given in the table.

As regards appeals awaiting hearing, the Immigration Appellate Authority reports that, at the end of June 1998, there was a total of 26,670 adjudicator cases outstanding. Of these, 20,870 related to applications for asylum and 5,800 to other immigration matters.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were determined by his Department in each month of 1998; and with what result. [51605]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the reasons for the adjournment of asylum and immigration appeals. [51609]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. It is a matter for the Immigration Appellate Authority to decide whether an appeal should be adjourned. Adjournments may be requested by the appellant or the respondent, or initiated by the Authority itself.

Bargoed Fire Station

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what access the South Wales fire authority has had to the reports and assessments made available to his Department by Her Majesty's Inspector of Fire Services on the proposed closures of the Bargoed Fire Station; [52017]

(2) if he will list those to whom his Department has sent Her Majesty's Inspector of Fire Services' report on the proposed closure of the Bargoed Fire Station. [52016]

Mr. George Howarth: Such reports have not been made available outside the Home Office.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 23 June, if he will list the long-standing differences to which he refers between the European Union and the United States over US sanctions under the Iran Libya Sanctions Act; and what is his estimate of the time scale for Libya complying with UN resolutions. [51525]

The Prime Minister: The long-standing differences between the European Union and the United States to which I referred related to secondary boycotts and legislation with extraterritorial or retroactive effect. The agreement at the EU/US Summit of 18 May has laid the basis for resolving these differences, specifically those over the Iran Libya Sanctions Act and the Helms Burton legislation on Cuba.

The time scale for Libyan compliance with UN Security Council resolutions is in Libya's hands. We continue to press them to fulfil their obligations. UN sanctions will remain until they do.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 389, (1) how many telephone calls were made by Roger Liddle from No. 10 Downing Street to (a) Derek Draper and (b) GPC Market Access in the four weeks prior to 24 June; [51908]

(2) if he will list the telephone calls made by Roger Liddle to newspaper reporters on 25 June. [51909]

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's annual report, for 1997, has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(6) of the Intelligence Services Act 1994. The confidential annexe to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section of 8(7) of the 1994 Act. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under the Security Service Act 1989 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [52370]

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's eighth annual report, for 1997, has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 4(6) of the Security Service Act 1989. The confidential annexe to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 4(7) of the 1989 Act and in line with the Commissioner's recommendation. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in providing assistance to the Tribunal which operates under the Act and for reviewing the issue of warrants under the Intelligence Services Act 1994.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Prime Minister when the annual report of the Commissioner appointed under section 8(1) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will be laid before the House; and if he will make a statement. [52371]

The Prime Minister: A copy of Lord Nolan's annual report for 1997 has been laid before the House today in accordance with section 8(7) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The confidential annexe to the report has been excluded from that copy in accordance with section 8(8) of the 1985 Act in accordance with the Commissioner's recommendations. I am grateful to the Commissioner for his work in reviewing the issue of warrants during the year. I note in particular the Commissioner's view that interception of both postal communications and telecommunications remains an effective and an essential operation in the interests of national security and the economic well-being of the United Kingdom, and the prevention and detection of serious crime.

Council of Europe and WEU

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the latest information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union covering the period October 1997 to April 1998. [52037]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister who by convention, in addition to the Leader of the Opposition, makes regular nominations to the Prime Minister of candidates for possible ennoblement as life peers. [51951]

The Prime Minister: The Leader of the Liberal Democrats makes regular nominations for life peers. In addition, I receive nominations from a wide range of people including leaders of other political parties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acts of paramilitary violence took place in (i) April, (ii) May and (iii) June; to which paramilitary organisation the RUC has attributed responsibility; and what were the equivalent figures for the same period in 1997. [48299]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The table indicates the number of acts of paramilitary violence which took place during April, May and June of this year and the equivalent figures for the same period last year.

	Loyalist		Republican		Unknown		Security Forces		Total

Notes:
1. It is not possible to be more specific on attribution which is based on information available and may be subject to change or adjustment
2. Care should be taken not to add all the incidents together as some are included in more than one heading e.g. deaths in April 1998 were as a result of shooting incidents
3. These figures are based on verified statistics and in a previously published form

Disappearances

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what records her Department maintains on those people who disappeared during the Troubles; and if she will urge paramilitary groups to release any information which they have on their whereabouts. [48296]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office does not maintain records on people who disappeared during the Troubles. The RUC, however, hold open files on those known as "The Disappeared". The Government have urged paramilitary groups and representatives of such groups to convey information about this matter to the RUC, and will continue to do so in the future. It is vital that the issue is resolved within the context of the Agreement.

Parades Commission

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on setting up the Parades Commission; and if she will estimate its annual running costs for a full year broken down into (a) payments to the members of the Commission and (b) administrative expenditure. [50147]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Parades Commission has, since its creation, occupied the rented premises previously used by the Parades Review Team and inherited most of its office equipment and material from that team. Staff were deployed from duties elsewhere in the Northern Ireland Office. Actual start-up costs were therefore minimal,.

The estimated outturn figure for 1998–99 is £1 million, made up of £260,000 Departmental Running Costs, comprising staff pay and general administrative expenditure such as travel and stationery and £740,000 Non-Departmental running costs, including payments to members, accommodation costs for rental, rates and electricity, grants to the Mediation Network, including the salary and support costs of the Authorised Officers and research and consultancy costs.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Asylum Appeals

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many asylum and immigration appeals were adjourned in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997; and what proportion of these adjournments were a consequence of (a) an application by the appellant, (b) an application by his Department and (c) other reasons. [51608]

Mr. Hoon: The Immigration Appellate Authority does not retain accurate historical information on the volume, proportion or breakdown of asylum and immigration appeals that are adjourned.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what international comparisons his Department has made of the availability of legal aid for representation at (a) asylum appeal hearings and (b) non-asylum immigration appeal hearings; [51614]

(2) what international comparisons he has made on the availability of legal aid for representation at asylum appeal hearings. [51610]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has not undertaken any research on this subject.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many further appeals to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal against a refusal of asylum were awaiting a hearing on (a) 31 December 1996, (b) 31 December 1997 and (c) 30 June 1998. [51602]

Mr. Hoon: The number of outstanding applications/ appeals before the Immigration Appeal Tribunal were:

	Applications	Appeals
(a) 31 December 1996	'350	'250
(b) 31 December 1997	1,125	1,018
(c) 30 June 1998	1,576	1,316

' Estimated figures as historical data for this period are not accurate

The number of outstanding appeals before the Immigration Appeal Adjudicators were:

(a) 31 December 1996: 20,104

(b) 31 December 1997: 22,484

(c) 30 June 1998: 20,869.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of (a) asylum and (b) immigration appeals were determined on the basis of the papers only in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998 to date. [51607]

Mr. Hoon: The Immigration Appellate Authority does not differentiate between, or keep accurate records of, appeals that are dealt with and disposed of in court, against those that are dealt with on the basis of the papers.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to increase the number of (a) adjudicators and (b) special adjudicators employed by the Immigration Appeals Authority during the financial year (i) 1998–99 and (ii) 1999–2000. [51615]

Mr. Hoon: There is a rolling programme of recruitment to increase the number of adjudicators and special adjudicators. This will continue at least into the year 2000.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what projections have been made of the number of (a) asylum and (b) immigration appeals to be heard and determined by the Immigration Appeals Authority in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999, (iii) 2000, (iv) the financial year 1998–99 and (v) the financial year 1999–2000. [51616]

Mr. Hoon: It is projected that there will be 38,455 cases disposed of by the Immigration Adjudicators in 1998 of which 25,865 will relate to asylum. During the same year a further 16,628 cases will be disposed of by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal of which 12,191 will relate to asylum. The comparable figures for 1998–99 are 38,910 Adjudicator disposals of which 27,142 will be asylum and 17,357 Tribunal disposals of which 13,084 will be asylum.

There are no reliable projection figures of the number of appeals which will be dealt with after April 1999, but as a result of the comprehensive spending review significant extra resources will be made available to the Immigration Appellate Authority (IAA) over the period 1999–2003, enabling it to increase the number of appeals disposed of substantially.

Legal Aid

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the block contracts for immigration/asylum legal aid to cover England and Wales will be awarded by the Legal Aid Board. [50906]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has asked the Legal Aid Board to complete the provision of civil advice and assistance, including immigration and asylum cases, exclusively through contracts by the end of 1999.

WALES

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50692]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

North Wales Coast

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Environment Agency has an independent working computer model of the hydrographic regime of the inshore waters of the North Wales coastal region for planning and management purposes. [51381]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This is a matter for the Environment Agency. I understand the Agency has identified no need for such a model to discharge its planning and management responsibilities. If it required one, it would commission other organisations to produce it.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish the factors underlying the recent high turbidity in the inshore waters along the North Wales coast. [51386]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The June rainfall for 1998 has been one of the highest for any June on record. High river flows as a result of the rain will have generated a larger than normal sediment load into inshore waters at this time of the year. In co-operation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which has responsibility for the regulation of dredging, the Environment Agency is also investigating whether possible illegal dumping of dredged material in the area has been a contributory factor.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will take steps to treat non-toxic algal blooms accumulated on the North Wales coast. [51388]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The dispersion of accumulated non-toxic algal blooms by natural forces usually occurs as quickly as the accumulations themselves. Non-toxic algal blooms are a naturally occurring phenomenon and do not pose a threat to public health; consequently, there are no plans to treat them.

Agri-environmental Programmes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish his budget allocation for agri-environmental programmes for 1998–99. [51531]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer my hon. Friend to the Government's Expenditure Plans 1998–1999 as published in the Departmental Report by the Welsh Office (Cm 3915) and placed in the Library of the House.

Higher Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of applicants to each higher education institution in Wales in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [51749]

Mr. Ron Davies: The names of the Lord-Lieutenants in Wales are:

Dyfed: Sir David Mansel Lewis KCVO, appointed on 14 February 1979.

Lord-Lieutenants may serve until their 75th birthday.

HEALTH

North Essex Health Authority

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what factors underlie the provision of NHS resources to the North Essex Health Authority at a rate per head of population of 10 per cent. below the English average; [43313]

(2) if he will increase the level of NHS funding per head of population in the North Essex Health Authority to the average for all English health authorities. [43310]

Mr. Milburn: In 1998–99, the allocation per weighted head of population for North Essex Health Authority is 2.3 per cent. below the England average.

The underlying principle of resource allocation in the National Health Service is equity.

A capitation formula is used to inform the distribution of hospital and community health services funding between health authorities which weights their populations for relative need.

The speed at which health authorities are moved closer to their weighted capitation targets is decided annually. For 1998–99, North Essex Health Authority received a real terms increase of £7.8 million or 2.2 per cent. compared to the England real terms average increase of 1.9 per cent.

In addition, North Essex Health Authority has received £4.7 million to target waiting lists in 1998–99.

Civil Servants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise. [50894]

Mr. Milburn: At the present time, there are 61 civil servants within the Department who form the Scientific Group and fall within the responsibility of the Head of Profession for scientists. Of these, 60 have held positions using their scientific expertise. Other civil servants within the Department and its agencies will also have science degrees and will have held positions using that expertise, but information on educational qualifications for those staff is not held centrally.

Hospital Discharge Procedures

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 611, concerning hospital discharge procedures, what timetable departmental officials are working to; and when he expects to publish his decision. [50939]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: We expect the conclusions of the review of guidance on hospital discharge to be available towards the end of the year.

Continence Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 451, concerning continence supplies, what monitoring his Department will conduct on how the extra resources are deployed by the health service. [50938]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Deployment of these resources will be monitored by regional offices of the National Health Service Executive as part of their performance management role.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51271]

Mr. Boateng: The Department funds a number of nationwide schemes through which voluntary organisations can bid for grants. None prohibits applications from Wakefield.

Scheme	Deadline for applications
Section 64	18 September 1998
Opportunities for Volunteering	Varies according to the 17 agents administering the scheme
Ethnic Minority Health	Yet to be finalised, but likely to be around December 1998/January 1999
Shared Training grants—learning disabilities	Yet to be finalised

The Department will consider the most effective way of producing this list on a regular basis in the light of the Better Regulation Task Force's report on Access to Government Funding for the Voluntary Sector.

Hearing Aid Services

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the data collated centrally by his Department concerning adult audiology and hearing aid services; [51420]

(2) what performance indicators his Department (a) has used and (b) proposes to use for the providers of adult hearing aid services. [51408]

Mr. Milburn: The Department does not collect specific information about adult audiology and hearing aid services, although some data are available about Ear, Nose and Throat (ENT) services which will include adult and paediatric audiology data.

Information on the number of ENT outpatient attendances, broken down by clinical speciality, is contained in "Outpatients and Ward Attenders, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the number of ENT day case and ordinary admissions by clinical specialty is contained in "Ordinary and Day Case Admissions for England", copies of which are also available in the Library.

There are no national performance indicators for adult hearing aid services.

Dentists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities have advertised (a) in Scandinavia and (b) elsewhere in the European Union for dentists since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [51456]

Mr. Milburn: Information about which health authorities have advertised to recruit dentists from Scandinavia or elsewhere in the European Union is not available centrally. The General Dental Council keeps a record of dentists coming from elsewhere in the EU, whom it registers to practise in this country.

NHS Medicines

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the costs of procuring medicines for the NHS. [51052]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: We intend to approach the procurement of medicines with a view to obtaining effective health care for patients at a cost which is fair.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last reviewed the pharmaceutical pricing scheme for the NHS. [51046]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The prices of branded medicines sold to the National Health Service are governed by the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme, a voluntary agreement between the health departments and the pharmaceutical industry, represented by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry. The last full review of the scheme was at the negotiation of the current agreement, which runs from 1 October 1993.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current rate of return used in calculating drug prices for the NHS. [51049]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS) sets target rates of return for companies supplying branded medicines to the National Health Service around which there is a margin of tolerance. The prices of medicines reflect this indirectly. The overall return on capital (outturn) for companies' PPRS business was 18.1 per cent. for 1994 (the latest year for which full figures are available); further details are contained in the Second Report to Parliament on the PPRS (December 1997) copies of which are available in the Library.

Heart Transplants

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many heart transplant operations have been performed in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [51542]

Mr. Boateng: In 1995 there were 319 heart transplants and 58 heart/lung transplants; 278 heart and 53 heart/lung transplants in 1996; and 266 heart and 44 heart/lung transplants in 1997.

Dental Services

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the quality of root canal fillings carried out within the General Dental Service and of the level of remuneration for dentists for that work. [51534]

Mr. Milburn: The quality of all types of dental treatment from simple to complex, including root canal fillings, are regularly assessed on an individual patient sample basis by the Dental Reference Service. The level of remuneration for dental treatment is set down in a fee scale in the Statement of Dental Remuneration which is reviewed each year in the light of recommendations made by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body after considering evidence from both the dental profession and the Department.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to withdraw the use of aldehydes as an ingredient for root canal sealers within the National Health Service. [51535]

Mr. Milburn: This is a matter of clinical judgment. Dentists have a duty under the arrangements they make to provide general dental services to employ a proper degree of skill and attention and use only suitable materials.

Stroke Units

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many stroke units there are in the NHS; and where they are located. [51077]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 21 July 1998]: We do not collect data centrally on the numbers and distribution of specialist stroke units.

The organisation of health services, including services for people who have had a stroke, and the manner in which they are delivered are matters for health authorities, taking account of the needs of the local population and the priorities set for the use of the available resources.

The Clinical Standards Advisory Group published a report on clinical effectiveness on 3 June 1998, using stroke as a marker condition. The report contains recommendations to help ensure consistency of treatment across the country. This includes access to appropriate rehabilitation services, including physiotherapy, occupational therapy and speech and language therapy, where they can effectively assist recovery.

Breast Implants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total costs to the public purse of the work undertaken by the Independent Review Group into silicone gel breast implants. [51674]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 July 1998]: The total cost to date of the work undertaken by the Independent Review Group into silicone gel breast implants is approximately £250,000.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the countries in which silicone gel breast implants have been banned. [51677]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 July 1998]: To our knowledge, the only country that currently has a ban on the use of silicone gel breast implants is France.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget will be allocated for the monitoring and registration of women by the National Breast Implant Registry over the next five years. [51675]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 July 1998]: It is not currently possible to estimate the budget required by the National Breast Implant Registry over the next five years. This will be decided once the Department and the Registry have assessed the resources necessary to implement the recommendation of the Independent Review Group on silicone gel breast implants.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Annual Report and Accounts of the Medicines Control Agency. [52423]

Ms Jowell: We have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

NHS Estates Executive Agency

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 of the NHS Estates Executive Agency. [52574]

Mr. Milburn: We have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with section 5 of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Head Lice

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representation he has received during the last 12 months on head lice; and what assessment he has made of current trends in the incidence of head lice in children of primary school age. [50766]

Ms Jowell: We have received occasional representations on the effect that head louse infestation can have upon children and their families. Information on trends in the number of cases of head lice amongst children of primary school age is not collected centrally. Cases are not notifiable and are generally detected and treated within the family home, making accurate counting difficult. The Department will continue to work with the Department for Education and Employment to promote best practice in detection and treatment of this problem.

Smoking

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the recommendations of the Fowler report, A Call for a More Effective Policy on Smoking Cessation and the Use of Nicotine Replacement Therapy; and if he will make a statement. [52044]

Ms Jowell: Our policies on these and other matters relating to smoking will be set out in a White Paper later in the year. Officials are studying the report and its recommendations.

NHS Pension Scheme

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of including staff employed by general practitioner co-operatives in the NHS pension scheme; and if he will make a statement. [51790]

Mr. Milburn: The information to estimate the cost of including general practitioner co-operative staff in the National Health Service pension scheme is not available centrally.

Retired Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultants from ethnic minorities retired from the NHS in each of the last three years; and how many of these were receiving discretionary merit awards at the time of retirement. [51777]

Mr. Milburn: Data concerning medical staff retiring from the National Health Service each year are not collected centrally.

Euthanasia

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of allegations of involuntary euthanasia by (a) hospital staff and (b) general practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [51904]

Ms Jowell: Euthanasia is illegal. Anyone alleged to have undertaken such action would be open to a charge of murder or manslaughter.

It is the responsibility of the police to decide whether to bring charges in individual cases and for the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether a prosecution should proceed.

We have no centrally available information on investigations into such allegations.

1995 EU Budget

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led to his decision to continue the United Kingdom challenge to the EU Commission's use of the 1995 Budget to fund demonstration projects in the field of poverty and social exclusion. [50945]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 17 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 4 November 1997, Official Report, column 103.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Papua New Guinea

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken to provide humanitarian aid to the people of Papua New Guinea. [51903]

Mr. Foulkes: We are in close contact with the Papua New Guinea authorities through the British High Commission in Port Moresby. In response to the initial appeal for assistance, we have offered up to £250,000 to meet the immediate recovery needs of those affected by the tidal wave. Of this contribution, £75,000 has been allocated to the International Federation of the Red Cross to provide family rehabilitation kits containing basic household items, and materials to rebuild houses. We have asked other humanitarian organisations active in the region urgently to submit proposals for the remaining funds.

We shall continue to monitor the situation closely through our High Commission and through the regular reports we receive from the United Nations and the Red Cross and are ready to consider any further appeals for assistance.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 533, concerning the 150/500 KV sub-stations project in Indonesia, what has the project achieved to date; what is her assessment of the project's value for money; and if she will place in the Library copies of the project appraisal, monitoring and evaluation reports completed to date. [51733]

Mr. Foulkes: Of the 13 substation sites covered by the project, two have so far been completed and handed over to the Indonesian authorities. Constraints on local expenditure on civil works, as a result of the financial crisis, are delaying the completion of five sites and work on the remaining six has been suspended for twelve months. Discussions are continuing between DFID, the Indonesian authorities and the contractor to assess the situation and action required in response of it. It is not possible at this stage to make an assessment of value for money. I will place in the Library copies of the project memorandum, which contains information relevant to the appraisal of the project, and of monitoring reports to date.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list for (a) her Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49236]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 6 July 1998]: (a) The Department for International Development (DFID) owns no vehicles in the UK. The following details are in respect of vehicles owned by DFID's overseas offices. The figures do not include vehicles provided under the aid programme for the benefit of partner Governments.

	Number
Total owned	26
Petrol	17
Diesel	9
2000cc or less	14
Over 2000cc	12
Likely replacements in year
1998–99	4
1999–2000	3
2000–2001	6

DFID does not lease any vehicles either in the UK or overseas.

(b) The only public body listed in the National Asset Register for which DFID is responsible which owns vehicles is the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC). The CDC owns a vehicle fleet worth in excess of £1 million dispersed across a large number of locations overseas. The details requested in respect of these vehicles could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuba Mountains, Sudan

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to secure access to the Nuba Mountains of Sudan for the purpose of humanitarian aid. [51536]

Mr. Foulkes: Britain and the rest of the donor community together with the United Nations are pressing the Government of Sudan to agree to a UN assessment of humanitarian needs in the Nuba Mountains; and to allow the necessary assistance to be delivered.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Payment of Bills

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of bills were paid on time by Government Departments and their agencies during the financial year 1997–98. [52148]

Mrs. Roche: I am pleased to announce that there has been an improvement in the payment performance of Central Government as a whole. The majority of Departments are now meeting the target of paying 95 per cent. of their suppliers bills on time.

There is no room for complacency, however. New tougher targets for Departments and their agencies will be set by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General, which will ensure that this improvement in performance continues.

The target for paying undisputed bills on time in the 1998–99 financial year will be 97.5 per cent. and for the 1999–2000 financial year 100 per cent.

We are committed to improving Britain's payment culture. It is important that the public sector sets an example to business and is seen to pay its bills on time.

Late payment is a serious problem for business and particularly for small businesses. Not knowing when customers' bills will be paid means uncertain cashflow, increased borrowings, higher costs and reduced profits.

Government Departments and their agencies are required to monitor their payment performance and to publish the results in their departmental or annual reports. The following table lists, by Department, the proportion of bills paid within 30 days, or other agreed credit period, of receipt of a valid invoice for financial year 1997–98. Similar information for earlier years is held in the House of Commons Library.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Borrow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of (a) the contribution of the UK aerospace industry to the UK economy and (b) the role played in the past 10 years of the biennial Farnborough Airshow in securing business for the industry. [51194]

Mr. Battle: Aerospace is one of the most important high technology manufacturing sectors of the UK economy. It had a turnover of £15 billion last year (of which 75% is exported). This constitutes around 8% of the total turnover of the UK's engineering sector. The industry makes a positive contribution to the UK balance of trade of over £3 billion and, in 1997, it employed around 120,000 people.

Over the last ten years the UK industry's turnover has grown from £9.5 billion to the current £15 billion. Some 450 UK companies have exhibited at Farnborough over this period and, at the last show, some £1.8 billion of UK business was announced by the industry, which sees the show as an important competitive advantage for this sector of UK industry. The biennial Farnborough Airshow, which is organised by the Society of British Aerospace Companies, is the world's premier airshow and provides the industry with a vital shop window to display its products to customers around the world. The UK base which the Farnborough Airshow provides is an important competitive advantage for this sector of UK industry.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to publish the results of consultations on the Working Time Directive. [51635]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 22 July 1998]: The views expressed in the responses to the consultation exercise on the draft regulations have been taken into account in finalising the regulations. These will be laid before Parliament before the recess.

Many respondents also asked for some issues to be clarified in the accompanying guidance. This will be published in the Summer.

Dounreay

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate memorandum, A Summary of the Dounreay FCA Inspection Findings, was brought to her attention; what assurances she (a) sought and (b) received from the HSE that Dounreay was a suitable destination for the waste from Georgia; what action she took in response to the document; and if she will make a statement. [46786]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 June 1998]: The existence of this memorandum was first brought to my attention on 29 May 1998 and it was published by the Health and Safety Executive on 15 June 1998. HSE had sent a copy of the memorandum to DTI officials in June 1997 and they discussed its contents with UKAEA at the time, in particular to satisfy themselves that UKAEA had sufficient resources to address any necessary improvements at the Dounreay site.

The Health and Safety Executive was consulted before it was decided to accept the Georgian consignment, and it was satisfied that the material could be safely stored at Dounreay.

Many of the issues raised in the memorandum are now being scrutinised carefully by the safety audit being conducted by the Health and Safety Executive and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. Any recommendations arising from this audit will be made public, and I will expect UKAEA to take all appropriate action.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the TRIGA fuel from Billingham to be reprocessed under Dounreay's contract with ICI has been delivered to Dounreay. [48035]

Mr. Battle: It has not been delivered. At present UKAEA are not accepting any new nuclear material onto the Dounreay site, and they will not do so until after they have satisfied their regulators.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the executive agencies sold to private buyers since the inception of the Next Steps programme indicating (a) the date of the transaction, (b) the type of transaction, (c) the name of the buyer or buyers and (d) the price agreed. [51618]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Eleven agencies have been wholly sold and two agencies have been part sold to private buyers since the inception of the Next Steps programme. They are as listed.

SCOTLAND

Health Service

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if health care purchasers are required to set health and safety performance standards in their contracts with NHS trusts. [51108]

Mr. Galbraith: Health and Safety statutory standards, which are not optional, are the responsibility of NHS Trusts and are not a matter for Health Boards.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if NHS trusts are required to include reports on their health and safety records in their annual reports. [51104]

Mr. Galbraith: No, but the information contained in the Annual Report is being reviewed.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many medical and nursing staff have worked in occupational health in the NHS in the last five years for which figures are available in (a) each health board and (b) Scotland; and what were the grades of those employees. [51115]

Mr. Galbraith: As the tables containing this information are rather lengthy, I am arranging for copies to be placed in the House Library.

Prison Accommodation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the certified normal accommodation for each prison in Scotland (a) in 1998 and (b) for each of the next seven years. [51405]

Mr. McLeish: The concept of "certified normal accommodation" is not applied in the Scottish Prison Service. However, the official design capacities for prisons in Scotland together with projections to 1 April 2001 are as set out. Projections beyond that date are not available and will be dependent on a review of capacity in the light of prisoner number forecasts and the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Ayr Road Route Compensation

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sums of compensation paid to landowners in respect of the construction of the Ayr road route (M77). [51462]

Mr. McLeish: Individual sums of compensation paid to landowners are confidential and cannot be disclosed without their prior consent. In the case of M77 Ayr Road Route compensation payments for the section of the route within Glasgow City Boundary prior to 1 April 1996 were made by Strathclyde Regional Council and subsequently by Glasgow City Council. My right hon. Friend has no knowledge or records of these payments, although he is responsible for meeting the compensation payments on the section of the M77 south of the city boundary to Malletsheugh.

Trees

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the advantage of amending legislation to allow complaints relating to the height or position of trees to be actionable in terms of the Statutory Nuisance provisions of the current Environmental Protection Act 1990 or the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897. [51461]

Mr. Macdonald: At present, there are no plans to introduce amendments to statutory nuisance legislation. Existing provisions within the statutory nuisance elements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 allow local authorities to investigate complaints about possible statutory nuisance occurring on premises, which includes land within its area. If satisfied that such nuisance exists, or is likely to occur or recur, they must serve an abatement notice on the person responsible. Any person can make a complaint to their local authority Environmental Health Department, or alternatively they may make a summary application to the sheriff court about the existence of a statutory nuisance. Although not tested at law so far as I am aware, depending on the particular circumstances of the case, it is possible that a local authority could consider a nuisance was being caused by the height of trees. However, ultimately the decision as to what constitutes a nuisance is for the courts. The statutory nuisance provisions in the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897 were repealed by the Environment Act 1995.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of payment ceilings on the take up of environmental grants in ESAs. [51532]

Mr. Macdonald: We have monitored the impact of payment ceilings carefully since the inception of the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme. There is no evidence that the maximum amounts which apply to payments under the Scheme have had a restrictive effect on uptake.

Agri-environmental Programmes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to increase the resources available to the Countryside Premium Scheme; [51530]

(2) if he will publish his budget allocation for agri-environmental programmes for 1998–99. [51533]

Mr. Macdonald: The provision for the Scottish agri-environment programme for 1998–99 is £13 million (as compared with £9.7 million in 1997–98). Of this, £5 million is allocated to the Countryside Premium Scheme (£2.5 million in 1997–98). Decisions on allocations for individual schemes within the agri-environment programme, including the Countryside Premium Scheme, post 1999 cannot be finalised until Agenda 2000 negotiations are completed. Meantime, following the Comprehensive Spending Review, spending on the agri-environment programme is planned to increase to £22 million by 2001–02.

Prison Staff

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the staff to prisoner ratio (a) in each prison and (b) in total in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [51746]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is in the table.

Staff to prisoner ratio

Rehabilitation

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners completed (a) sex offender treatment programmes and (b) programmes accredited as helping rehabilitation in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [51744]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Prison Service has key performance indicators for the numbers of prisoners completing sex offender programmes and cognitive skills programmes. However, targets in this area were established only from 1996–97 onwards, and reliable figures for earlier years are not available centrally.

The figures for 1996–97 and 1997–98 are shown in the table.

Programme	1996–97	1997–98
Sex offenders	67	91
Cognitive skills	381	635

Although other programmes aimed at reducing reoffending are also available, detailed information on the numbers of prisoners completing such programmes is not held centrally at present.

Recidivism

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the recidivism rates of custodial and non-custodial sentences in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [51660]

Mr. McLeish: A study of recidivism rates among a sample of offenders released from custodial sentences "Predicting Recidivism in a Scottish Prison Sample" was published in 1997. A study of life sentence prisoners has been commissioned and will include an analysis of reconvictions.

A number of studies which aim to evaluate the impact of non-custodial disposals have been commissioned. Evaluations of two community based intervention programmes for persistent young offenders were commissioned in 1995 and will consider reconviction rates as part of the evaluation. An evaluation of pilot programmes for diversion from prosecution to social work and other services was commissioned earlier this year and will assess the effectiveness of the programmes in changing offender behaviour and reducing re-offending.

Evaluation of effectiveness will continue to be an important part of the criminal justice research programme.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 145–46, what assessment he has made of the reasons for the increase between 1994 and 1996 of those prosecuted and charged with driving a motor vehicle while unfit through drink or drugs. [51848]

Mr. McLeish: No specific assessment has been made of the reasons for the increase between 1994 and 1996 in the number of prosecutions for the offence of driving a motor vehicle while unfit through drink or drugs. The increase is believed to reflect a better awareness by the police of the types of driving and behaviour displayed by drivers who are unfit through drink or drugs, leading to an increase in the number of drivers who are charged and then prosecuted.

Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quantities of tritium were discharged from Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station in each month since January 1990. [51597]

Mr. Macdonald: SEPA has maintained monthly records of discharges of tritium since January 1996. That information is given in the following table, in units of radioactivity discharged per month.

	Gaseous TBq	Aqueous TBq

Prior to 1996, information on discharges from Chapelcross was published by The Scottish Office in the series of Statistical Bulletins entitled "Radioactive Waste Disposals from Nuclear Sites in Scotland". The discharge information was supplied by year, although the report was not an annual publication. Copies of the reports are available in the House Library.

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for public investment. [50518]

33. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his plans for public investment for the next three years. [50520]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Investing In Britain Fund will—within the Government's tough fiscal rules—double net public investment over the lifetime of this Parliament, providing for the renewal, reform and modernisation of the public infrastructure.

34. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the Comprehensive Spending Review and its impact on levels of public infrastructure investment. [50521]

Mr. Darling: The Government consulted widely during the course of the Review. The outcome of the review has underlined the Government's commitment to renew, reform and modernise the country's infrastructure through the Investing in Britain Fund which will—within the fiscal rules—double net public investment by the end of the Parliament.

Exchange Rate

14. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met employers to discuss the implications of the current exchange rate. [50500]

Mrs. Liddell: Treasury Ministers receive many representations from business organisations. The Government listen carefully to all viewpoints and experiences, and fully recognise the worries of exporters and manufacturers about the current level of the exchange rate.

Bingham Report

15. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he proposes to publish the confidential parts of the Bingham report. [50501]

Mr. Darling: The appendices to the Bingham report contain information that was supplied in confidence. At the outset of the inquiry, Lord Bingham's invitation to submit evidence made it clear he would respect confidentiality. I do not believe we can now break that undertaking. To do so would compromise future inquiries. However, Lord Bingham did draw on all the information supplied to him when preparing his report and reaching his conclusions.

Public Spending

16. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the priorities for public spending over the planning period contained in the comprehensive spending review. [50503]

Mr. Darling: The Government received a very wide range of views during the course of the Review and Members of the House have made their views known on many different issues. The terms of reference were made available early in the process and individual departments approached interested bodies. Extensive consultation was conducted with experts and outsiders as part of the CSR process.

21. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the reordering of priorities for public spending as a result of the comprehensive spending review. [50508]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith) today, Official Report, column 1244.

Savings

17. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to encourage the growth of the level of savings. [50504]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's economic policy is set to achieve stability and the right conditions in which individuals can save with confidence. Our plans for the Individual Savings Account (ISA) are specifically designed to develop and extend the savings habit.

22. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on tax relief for savings. [50509]

Mrs. Liddell: This Government's policy is to encourage individuals to save. We believe tax-free saving can play a part in this and we are introducing the new individual savings account for this purpose.

27. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in support of his proposals for CAT marking of ISA financial products; and when he expects to produce his final regulations. [50514]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has received 143 responses to the consultation document "Making Saving Easy". The CAT standards will be finalised once those responses have been analysed.

Dividend Tax Credits

19. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from charities regarding the abolition of dividend tax credits. [50506]

Mrs. Liddell: We know that many charities regret the effects of this reform for them. We made generous transitional arrangements for charities last year. About 250 charities have written about tax credits.

Personal Taxation

20. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the simplification of personal taxation. [50507]

Mrs. Liddell: Income tax rates and allowances, along with other aspects of the tax system, are kept under review. Ways to simplify the system are considered as part of the review process.

Scotch Whisky (Taxation)

23. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has held with the Scotch whisky industry relating to the level of tax on Scotch whisky. [50510]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Financial Secretary to the Treasury met representatives of the Scotch Whisky Association on 24 February to discuss the level of duty in the run up to the Budget. Officials at Customs and Excise meet the association regularly to discuss all aspects of spirits duty.

Public Debt

24. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he has determined that a prudent level for public debt is less than 40 per cent. of gross domestic product. [50511]

Mr. Darling: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has explained to the House, the Government's policy on public debt combines prudence and stability in the public finances with investment and reform in public services.

Capital Projects (Private Finance)

26. Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to replace public funding of capital projects in health and education with private finance. [50513]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: As we said in "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform", the deciding factor is whether public or private investment offers the best means of securing improved public services. This is the test that my hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health and the Secretary of State for Education will apply when planning future capital investment for which their Departments are responsible.

Capital Expenditure

28. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to promote capital expenditure projects. [50515]

Mr. Darling: The Investing in Britain Fund will—within the Government's tough fiscal rules—double net public investment over the Parliament to renew, reform and modernise the national infrastructure. This will be enhanced by the role of PFI/PPPs in providing public investment and services.

Charities Taxation

29. Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to complete his review of charities taxation. [50516]

Mrs. Liddell: The Review of Charities' Taxation will be completed following a public consultation exercise, phase II of which will start later this year.

Cross-border Savings (EU Tax)

30. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the European Commission's proposal for a Europe-wide withholding tax on cross-border savings. [50517]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are in favour of international co-operation in effective action against tax evasion. However, we are determined to protect European Community financial markets against damage by provisions which might be ineffective if confined to the Community. We are holding urgent discussions with the financial sector on the likely impact of the current proposals.

Strong Pound

32. Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the impact of the strength of the pound on manufacturing industry. [50519]

Mrs. Liddell: Treasury Ministers receive many representations from business organisations. The Government listen carefully to all viewpoints and experience, and fully recognise the worries of exporters and manufacturers about the current level of the exchange rate.

Resources (Regional Distribution)

35. Gillian Merron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations his Department has received on the impact of the Comprehensive Spending Review on the regional distribution of resources, with particular reference to Lincolnshire. [50522]

Mr. Darling: The Government consulted extensively in the course of the review. The regional distribution of resources is a matter for spending departments. But the plans announced in the outcome of the Comprehensive Review will provide investment, modernisation and reform for the whole country.

Pensions

36. Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the mis-selling of free-standing additional voluntary contributions to pension schemes. [50523]

Mrs. Liddell: I have received one representation.

Design, Technology and Innovation Investment

37. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what incentives he is assessing to stimulate investment in design, technology and innovation. [50524]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government issued a consultative document "Innovating for the Future" on Budget Day, which sought views from business and others on ways of improving the UK record on R&D and innovation.

The Government are currently considering responses to the consultation document as part of their wider review of R&D.

Inland Revenue Offices

38. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the provision of Inland Revenue offices in remote rural locations. [50525]

Mrs. Liddell: The Inland Revenue is looking at the way it organises its work following the outcome of its Strategic Review, which Ministers recently approved as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The Department generally expects to maintain a presence in those locations where it is currently represented.

Taxation (Investment Income)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allow non-tax payers, of all ages, to continue to be able to reclaim a 10 per cent. tax credit on investment income from April 1999. [51575]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 21 July 1998]: As I said at the Report stage of the Finance Bill I was sympathetic to the case of non-taxpayers who will be affected by the withdrawal of payable tax credits from 6 April 1999, and I have the matter under review. That remains the position.

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 570, if the Government are assessing alternative options to the ICL Pathway Project. [51497]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The ICL Pathway project is designed to introduce a modern method of benefit payment over post office counters, reducing fraud and improving efficiency. The Government are fully committed to achieving these objectives.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of the ICL Pathway Project. [51491]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 570.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 570, what representations he has received on the progress of the ICL Pathway Project. [51490]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Treasury has received no representations on the progress of this project other than through discussions with the parties involved.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 570, which outside consultants the Government have employed to assist in the monitoring of the ICL Pathway Project. [51498]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Government have employed consultants with expertise in IT project management to assist in the monitoring of the ICL Pathway project.

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply he received from the Financial Secretary on 11 June 1998, Official Report, column 650.

Indirect Taxation

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 135–36, on indirect taxation, if he will provide forecasts for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99. [51728]

Mrs. Liddell: Forecasts of tax receipts, including indirect taxes, in 1997–98 and 1998–99 were published in Table B9 of the March 1998 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". However, forecasts of indirect taxes paid per person derived from these figures will not be fully consistent with those given to my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Derbyshire, (Mr. Barnes) by the Director of the Office for National Statistics on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 135–36, which were based on data from the Family Expenditure Survey.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated number of (a) men and (b) women working in the Greater London area who will benefit from the proposed national minimum wage. [51649]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the proposed national minimum wage.

The proposed national minimum wage (NMW) which is due to come into effect in April 1999 has been set at £3.60 per hour for workers aged over 21. A development rate of £3.00 per hour has been proposed for those aged 18 to 21. Workers aged 16 to 17 and all those on apprenticeships will be exempt.

Estimates of the number of employees below the NMW thresholds have been based upon the results of the Spring 1997 Labour Force Survey (LFS) and the April 1997 New Earnings Survey which are currently the latest available sources, and have used the methodology described in David Wilkinson's article in the May 1998 issue of Labour Market Trends. Copies of Labour Market Trends are available in the House of Commons Library.

The estimated numbers of men and women in the Greater London area who earn less than the proposed NMW are set out in the following table. To reflect the uncertainty, the estimates are expressed in the form of a range, based on the sampling errors associated with the surveys from which the estimates have ben derived. In order to ensure comparability with the proposed NMW rates which would come into force in April 1999 the analysis in the table is based upon hourly rates of £2.80 and £3.40 which use the Low Pay Commission's methodology to take into account inflation between April 1997 and April 1999.

Estimates of number of employees aged 18 to 21 earning below £2.80 and employees aged over 21 earning below £3.40 in Greater London in April 1997

	Lower estimate	Upper estimate
Males	51,000	85,000
Females	57,000	74,000

The above estimates do not take into account workers aged over 21 who whilst receiving accredited training during the first six months of a new job with a new employer would under NMW proposals be entitled to a rate of £3.20 per hour in April 1999.

Death Certificates

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer If he will issue guidance on the consistent completion of death certificates, when the death occurred in hospital, in respect of the contributory and principal causes of death. [49899]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay, dated 23 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on guidance on the consistent completion of death certificates, when the death occurred in hospital, in respect of the contributory and principal causes of death.

The ONS places great importance on the quality of the information collected through the deaths registration system and constantly seeks to ensure that this remains fit for purpose, reliable and authoritative.

Guidance notes on completion are contained in every book of death certificates. This meets the legal obligations for the inclusion of such instruction and the recommendations of the World Health Organisation. These notes were last updated in 1997.

In July 1997, the Deputy Chief Medical Statistician wrote to all consultants and principals in general practice reminding them of the need to certify deaths promptly and accurately, to refer deaths to the coroner for further investigation where appropriate, and also to remind them of the existence of the guidance notes in each booklet of death certificates.

The ONS recently produced a video and reading material entitled "Deaths counts", aimed at medical students and doctors, to teach them how to complete the death certificates, including the legal obligations on doctors and registrars. These have been sent to all medical schools and post-graduate deans in England and Wales.

National Savings

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the interaction between possible private sector involvement in National Savings' operational services and changes to its financial products. [51809]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of National Savings. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Marsden, dated 23 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question 51809 about the assessment that has been made of the interaction between possible private sector involvement in National Savings' Operational Services and changes to its financial products.

The Invitation to Negotiate issued to the bidders specified the requirement that they should provide the flexibility to introduce new products quickly and economically. Their response to this request will be a key element of the evaluation of proposals.

While EDS and Siemens have been invited to bid for their administration, any change to the design of savings products would remain the responsibility of National Savings, which will continue to be a Government Agency.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

TECs

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made on the review of training and enterprise councils in England. [52421]

Dr. Howells: The Government issued a consultation document on 9 July 1998 on the future role of TECs/CCTEs in meeting our strategic objectives. Copies of the document have been circulated widely to the many organisations and individuals with whom TECs work at local, regional, national and sectoral level. We have asked for comments by 30 September so that we can take them into account before issuing new Strategic Guidance for TECs in the Autumn. Copies of the consultation document have also been placed in the Library and sent to all Members.

Employment Service

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Employment Service Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 will be laid before Parliament. [52420]

Mr. Blunkett: I have today laid before the House the Employment Service's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98 which give full details of the Agency's performance and expenditure for that year.

The Annual Report notes the very significant achievements of the Employment Service in 1997–98. In particular, the Employment Service prepared for and launched the Government's New Deal for young unemployed people in twelve pathfinder areas within some 160 working days of the Government taking office. Subsequently it has successfully launched nationally the New Deal programmes for both young and long-term unemployed people. This has involved the Employment Service working in partnership with a wide range of public, voluntary and private sector organisations to make the best possible help available to our young people.

The Agency has also played a key role in implementing the Government's wider Welfare to Work agenda involving Employment Zones, the New Deal for lone parents, and the New Deal for disabled people, all of which have started, or are due to start, this year.

At the same time, the Report notes that the Employment Service maintained its existing services and helped many people to find work. In 1997–98 the Employment Service handled 2.7 million job vacancies and placed nearly 1.4 million unemployed people into work, including some 300,000 people who had been unemployed for more than six months, and 83,000 people with disabilities.

Although the Employment Service did not succeed in meeting all of its targets for the number of unemployed people placed into jobs, its performance should be seen in the context of rapidly falling unemployment over the year and the action the Employment Service has taken to ensure that job placings are recorded strictly in accordance with its procedures. I have underlined to the Employment Service the importance, in the current year, of improved performance against targets, successful implementation of the New Deal programmes and continued rigour on the accurate recording of job placings, building on the action taken which has reduced the scale of this problem very substantially over the past year.

Overall, 1997–98 was a highly successful year for the Employment Service. I am also particularly pleased that, by the end of 1997–98, overall customer service results were at record levels. As the Chief Executive points out in his Report, none of this would have been possible without the quite remarkable effort and commitment from people throughout the Employment Service. I too am very grateful to them.

Scottish Fee Support Review Committee

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce the Chairman of the Scottish Fee Support Review Committee to be established under the Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998. [52543]

Mr. Blunkett: I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Northern Ireland and for Wales are pleased to confirm that Sir George Quigley has agreed to chair the independent committee to be set up under Section 25(4) of the Teaching and Higher Education Act 1998 to review financial support for fees for students in the final honours year of first degree courses at Scottish institutions. Other members will be announced at a later date.

New Deal

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many New Deal clients have taken up voluntary sector placements or work on the environmental task force in Cornwall; [51816]

(2) how many New Deal clients have gone into full-time training or education in Cornwall; [51817]

(3) how many (a) subsidised and (b) unsubsidised jobs have been offered by employers to the Employment Service for the New Deal in Cornwall. [51818]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government Statistical Service figures for clients leaving Gateway to go into jobs show that, to the end of May 1998, 233 young people have gone into unsubsidised employment and 192 into subsidised jobs.

To the end of May 1998, 65 New Deal clients have started the Full-Time Education and Training (FTET) Option, 28 have started the Environment Task Force (ETF) Option, and 41 have started the Voluntary Sector (VS) Option.

Smoking (School Education)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been his Department's expenditure on school education on the dangers of smoking during the last 12 months. [51867]

Ms Estelle Morris: The dangers of smoking form a vital part of education about drugs. We have made increased support of £7 million available to LEAs this financial year, through the Standards Fund programme, to assist primary and secondary schools and the youth service to deliver effective education about drugs. This builds on the £6 million of support which has been made available each year since 1995–96 through the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme to fund LEA's drug education initiatives, including teacher training and innovative projects.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the selection of candidates for training as millennium bug busters; who is responsible for their training; what is the standard and qualification they will obtain; and how they will be matched to job opportunities. [51858]

Dr. Howells: Employers participating in the Millennium Bug Training initiative will select which of their employees to put forward for training. The training is delivered through providers, and to specific standards, that have been approved by the Information Technology National Training Organisation (IT NTO). Certificates that contribute to national and industry recognised qualifications will be issued upon successful completion of the course.

Internet (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects all children in Gloucestershire schools to have ready access to the Internet; and if he will make a statement. [50068]

Dr. Howells: The Government's consultation paper 'Connecting the Learning Society' set out a target date of 2002 for the connection of all schools, colleges, universities and libraries and as many community centres as possible to be connected to the National Grid for Learning via the Internet.

The Department is supporting £750,000 of ICT-related expenditure in Gloucestershire in 1998–99 through Standards Fund Grant for the National Grid for Learning. The grant is to support networking and infrastructure, and is funded equally by the Department and the relevant local education authority.

Key Stage 1

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools did not submit results of Key Stage 1 tests for moderation in 1997. [40942]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 7 July 1998]: 92 maintained mainstream schools did not submit 1997 Key Stage 1 National Curriculum Assessment results. The number of schools not submitting results is falling year on year, and the 1997 figure is less than half that for 1996. The corresponding figures for 1995 and 1996, are 401 and 189 respectively. It is not possible to determine the number of special schools who did not submit results, as it is impossible to differentiate between those schools whose pupils were all disapplied from the National Curriculum Assessments, and therefore had no results to return, and those schools who chose not to return results. Participation by independent schools in the National Curriculum Assessment tests is voluntary and, therefore, they have not been included in this analysis.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

School Sports

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many schools in England play (a) cricket and (b) rugby league. [51293]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Neither this Department nor the Department for Education and Employment collects this kind of information.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what amount of EU funding has been used for tourism information technology initiatives in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [51544]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The figure is not available in the form requested. However, £31 million of European Regional Development Funding (ERDF) is available in the current year for DCMS policy areas, of which tourism is the main beneficiary.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what advice his Department gives to (a) tourist boards and (b) tourist information centres who wish to set up compatible computerised booking systems. [51555]

Mr. Tom Clarke: DCMS sponsors the English Tourist Board (ETB) which has established a Tourism Technology Forum. The Forum comprises representatives of public and private destination marketing organisations as well as commercial systems developers and is looking at issues concerning compatibility and information exchange.

The ETB has appointed a Tourism Technology Co-ordinator to provide impartial advice to Tourist Information Centre Managers about the availability of systems and has produced a report, analysing the functions and costs of existing systems.

The Tourism Technology Forum has established a working group and is investigating the commercial viability of reservation systems. A planned Tourist Boards

Intranet is currently under development and should be completed shortly, through which information and experience of booking systems will be shared.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the number of local tourist information centres which provide web pages for their area on the Internet. [51554]

Mr. Tom Clarke: None. However, the English Tourist Board, in collaboration with the Local Government Association and the Tourism Management Institute, has recently surveyed all Tourist Information Centres (TICs) and Local Authority Tourism Departments to establish the extent to which new technology is being used in the promotion and management of tourism destinations. 55 per cent. of TIC respondents and 50 per cent. of local authority respondents indicated they had a website.

BBC Archives

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Medi and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage the BBC to allow increased access by academics and other scholars to the BBC's archive material. [51648]

Mr. Fisher: The obligations placed on the BBC in respect of its archives are set out in the Royal Charter and Agreement. These include broad requirements to establish and maintain archives containing material relevant to the objects of the Corporation, and to make reasonable arrangements for public access to the archives, with or without charge. How the BBC chooses to meet these obligations is a matter for the Corporation itself.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51269]

Mr. Fisher: The only grants of this type which we administer are the Museums Challenge Fund, set up to assist the national museums and galleries in England which currently offer free access to continue to do so; the DCMS/Wolfson Foundation Public Libraries Challenge Fund, available to all local authorities in England and with a deadline for 1998–99 of 12 June 1998; and the Heritage Grant Fund in England.

Grants from the Heritage Grant Fund are normally restricted to national voluntary organisations or to voluntary bodies undertaking projects of national significance.

Exceptionally, local organisations may be awarded a grant for projects which are particularly innovative and may be used as an exemplar. This year's scheme is likely to have a deadline of the end of September. Individual grant schemes receive wide publicity, and we have no plans to produce a list of this sort on a regular basis.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters per day her office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50689]

Mr. Field: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

The correspondence section attached to Minsters' offices, which has 14 staff, receives all correspondence and seeks advice from officials, including those in the Policy Correspondence Unit which had 38 staff at 1 June 1998. Other units and officials elsewhere in the Department also deal with correspondence as part of their normal duties.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the assessment procedure determining eligibility for incapacity benefit. [51411]

Mr. Denham: We have made clear our intention to reform Incapacity Benefit for future claimants, to develop a more effective test which assesses what sick and disabled people are able to do, and not just what they cannot do. The information which a new test would provide on people's capacity could then be used to give them the help they need to improve their employability and return to work.

Disabled People

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to introduce a disabled persons tax credit disregard in the assessment of means-tested social security benefits. [51989]

Mr. Denham: The Disabled Persons Tax Credit will replace Disability Working Allowance from October 1999.

There is no disregard of payments of Disability Working Allowance when assessing eligibility for other income-related benefits. To do so would duplicate payments from public funds for the same purpose. There are no plans to change this policy.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if confirmation has been given to all successful organisations that bid to execute pilot projects under the New Deal for sick and disabled people. [51990]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Social Security, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Education and Employment announced the ten successful bidders for the first tranche of Innovative Schemes funded under the New Deal for Disabled People on 16 July. The schemes are as follows: Leonard Cheshire Workability; Centrica North West Project; Status Employment Ltd; Back to Work proposed by Libra Health Ltd; Manchester Mental Health in Employment Project proposed by Manchester TEC;

West of England Centre for Integrated Living; Disability Business Partnerships proposed by RNIB; Urban World proposed by Grimsby College; Integration for Opportunity—Jobs4All proposed by Thurso College; and Gateway Partnerships proposed by Disability Matters Ltd.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Aylesbury will receive a substantive reply from the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency to the letter of 7 May to the Dudley CSA office about case reference 1008385662; and if she will make a statement. [50873]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. David Lidington, dated 22 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about your letter of 7th May (case reference 1008385662) to the Child Support Agency Business Unit Manager in Dudley.

The Agency aim to respond to letters from Members of Parliament within 20 working days. I am afraid this did not happen in this case and I apologise for this.

In this particular case, information needed to be sought from the non-resident parent's employer, and a written agreement regarding the arrears of child support maintenance needed to be obtained from the parent with care before a full response could be made. While investigations were being made the Midland Business Unit Manager sent two interim replies explaining that investigations were still being made. A full response to your letter was made on 14 July.

Benefits Agency

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance she plans to issue to the Benefits Agency on its forthcoming obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to produce generic benefits information and information on individual benefits in a range of formats which blind and partially sighted people can access; [50923]

(2) what assessment she has made of the difficulties which blind and partially sighted people have in obtaining access to information on benefits. [51023]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for its Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 22 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what guidance she plans to issue to the Benefits Agency (BA) on its forthcoming obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to produce generic benefits information and information on individual benefits in a range of formats which blind and partially sighted people can access; and what assessment she has made of the difficulties which blind and partially-sighted people have in obtaining access to information on benefits.

The BA is currently overhauling its leaflet programme to improve the standard of information that we provide for all our customers by simplifying the range of materials and focusing it entirely to the customers' needs. To continue equal access to the social security system, the Agency plans to produce the new material for various customer groups in large print, audio cassette and Braille.

The BA regularly conducts formal customer research and consults with customer representative organisations about their information needs. We have also looked at the benefit information needs of blind and partially sighted people as part of the customer research for Project Access, which aims to simplify the range of materials we provide for customers.

The research explored how information should be provided, to whom it should be targeted and how it should be distributed.

Consultation with customer representative organisations for various groups, including blind and partially sighted people, has also been part of the research process. Products are being developed in response to their feedback.

The policy of Project Access will ensure that existing products will not be withdrawn until we are confident that the new information in alternative formats replaces them in an acceptable way for the various groups.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the additional annual cost of administering a one-off winter fuel payment. [51822]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel Payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million was committed for two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 704, a further £0.5 billion has been allocated to extend the scheme beyond next winter. This will provide each eligible pensioner household with a £20 winter fuel payment.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Rendel, dated 22 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the additional annual cost of administering a one-off Winter Fuel Payment.

Last winter, Winter Fuel Payments were made to almost ten million eligible pensioners. The total administration cost of the exercise was in the region of £20 million. The annual average cost of making each payment was approximately £2.

I hope that this is helpful.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Environmental Performance (Small Businesses)

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to improve the environmental performance of small business. [52005]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are to revamp their support to small businesses to help them improve their energy efficiency and environmental performance. The Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme has an established reputation for helping businesses to improve their energy efficiency. The Programme is currently stimulating savings of around £500m each year across the economy. We now want to make the benefits of this programme more readily available to small and medium sized businesses by building up a network of locally based consultants who will be accessed through a freephone hotline.

These new arrangements, which replace the smaller SCEEMAS programme which has had a very disappointing take-up, will be developed jointly with the Government Offices in the Regions and with local businesses and business support agencies at a cost of some £2m p.a.

Businesses value authoritative advice that takes account of local needs and the EEBPP will also look at ways of working with Government Offices and local providers of advice to establish a more coherent programme of local support, providing small businesses with access to a greater range of local specialist advice services. The existing EEBPP energy helpline is to be improved to help small businesses access the information on energy efficiency they need. This will include the introduction of a new freephone helpline.

The new arrangements will help bring energy efficiency advice on to the same footing as that delivered through the successful helpline and consultancy advice service run via the joint DTI/DETR Environmental Technology Best Practice Programme. When a small business wants to go green, it is important that the Government are there to help. This is part of our continuing efforts to rationalise the Government's support to businesses on energy and environmental performance via the Government Offices of the Regions and other organisations such as the Energy Saving Trust, Business Links, Training Enterprise Councils and local authorities, in providing a more effective support.

For this reason we are going to phase out SCEEMAS grants as from 31 August 1998, which will be the deadline for all first time applications, and to terminate the scheme at the end of January 1999, the deadline for all claims. The resources from SCEEMAS will be diverted to contribute to the development of a coordinated network of energy efficiency advice underpinned by the EEBPP and designed to be complementary with other local providers.

Further details of the developments to the Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme, including the pilot phase of the new service to SMEs, are to be announced separately.

Empty Government Homes

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how his Department, the Home Office and the Ministry of Defence performed against last year's targets for reducing empty Government homes; and what new targets have been set for 1998–99. [52611]

Mr. Raynsford: Details of achievement against targets for 1997–98, and new targets for 1998–99 are listed.

I am disappointed to have to report that, despite considerable effort on the part of my Department, the Ministry of Defence and the Home Office, the overall number of empty homes held by the Government has shown a small rise between 1 April 1997 and 1 April 1998. This does, however, mask a 19 per cent. fall in the number of empty homes held by the Home Office and the success of the Ministry of Defence in exceeding its target over the period. Both my Department and the Ministry of Defence have faced difficulties in responding to need with uncertainties over the Strategic Defence Review and the ongoing review of road schemes. In the case of the Highways Agency up to 50 per cent. of its vacant properties were in the process of being sold when the figures were collected.

We are concerned by the number of properties that remain vacant—we simply cannot afford to have substantial numbers of Government-owned homes lying empty and we will be working closely with colleagues to ensure that the targets set for the next year are met. These targets for 1 April 1999 all represent a significant improvement over last year's achievements and reflect realistic opportunities for reducing the numbers of vacant properties.

Departments continue to liaise with the Empty Homes Agency and other interested parties to investigate ways of bringing properties back into productive housing use and I hope next year's figures will reflect our continued efforts to improve the Government's own record.

Properties that are "habitable" include all properties except:
a) derelict properties that await demolition (eg to make way for road schemes)
b) those that are expected to be demolished in the near future where the expenditure required to make them habitable would be disproportionate to their expected life (eg where substantial investment would be required to connect essential services such as water, sewage or electricity)
c) those that cannot be made accessible (eg due to adjacent construction works)

Fishing Vessel Accidents

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the consultation paper on fishing vessel accidents and the recovery of those lost at sea; and if he will make a statement. [52419]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am publishing the Consultation Paper today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House and it will be distributed widely to representatives in the fishing industry, and to others who have written to Ministers on this subject. The consultation period will extend to 31 October and the Government will announce the results by the end of the year.

Ordnance Survey

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review was for the Ordnance Survey. [52367]

Mr. Raynsford: The resources that have been made available to Ordnance Survey for the three year Comprehensive Spending Review period are as follows:

Year	£ million
1999–2000	23
2000–2001	19
2001–2002	18

These resources reflect this Government's recognition that a significant part of Ordnance Survey's work is vital to the national interest, rather than simply commercial in nature. To this end, a National Interest in Mapping Service Level Agreement (NIMSA) is being negotiated between the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, as customer, and Ordnance Survey, as supplier. It is intended that the agreement will commence on 1 April 1999. NIMSA will comprise a set of explicit targets and Ordnance Survey's performance against these will be monitored annually.

In addition to resources for NIMSA, resources are also available for other investment required by Ordnance Survey.

Special Waste Regulations

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) of 2 April 1998, Official Report, columns 601–02, how many responses have been received to the consultation exercise for amending the Special Waste Regulations 1996 and Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994. [52282]

Angela Eagle: My Department received 53 direct responses. The Scottish Office received a further 30 responses and the Welsh Office two. I am depositing a list of those who responded in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies of the letters will be placed in the relevant Departmental Library. I will issue a response once a full analysis has been undertaken.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Mike Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the Government's proposals for the payment of board members of the new regional development agencies. [52281]

Mr. Caborn: As we stated in our White Paper "Building Partnerships for Prosperity" we propose that all Regional Development Agency board members be paid. The Regional Development Agencies Bill currently before Parliament provides for remuneration of board members to be determined by the Secretary of State. Subject to Parliamentary approval of this provision, we propose to pay the chair of each Agency a notional full time rate of £100,000 per year—this would amount to £44,000 for two days per week. We propose to pay the deputy chair a notional full time rate of £70,000—this would amount to £14,000 for one day per week. Other board members will be paid at the rate of £7,000 per year for two days per month. These payments are in line with those made to members of similar Non Departmental Public Bodies.

Speed Trap Detectors

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to prevent the advertising for sale of equipment designed (i) to warn of speed traps and (ii) to adjust odometers. [51183]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. The Advertising Standards Authority and the Independent Television Commission are responsible for preserving advertising standards. My noble Friend the Minister for Roads has referred objectionable advertisements to the ASA and has been successful in having them withdrawn.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51274]

Angela Eagle: The principal programme currently administered by my Department which requires bids from applicants in the Single Regeneration Budget (SRB). The announcement on the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) explained that there would be new rounds of the SRB. Partnerships in England will be eligible to bid, including those in the Wakefield Metropolitan District. An announcement on future bidding arrangements, and hence the deadline for applications, will be made shortly.

In addition, the announcement on the outcome of the CSR, 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–94, referred to the New Deal for Communities which will offer intensive help to the most deprived neighbourhoods, focusing on enhancing economic and employment opportunities, improving the quality of life and offering better neighbourhood management. The detailed arrangements for the New Deal for Communities have yet to be announced.

Details of any bidding rounds for grants would be published at the appropriate time.

Railway Targets

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the rail routes on which the achievement of target journey times deteriorated substantially between 1993 and 1998. [51372]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The table shows the percentage of scheduled trains arriving on time comparing the annual average performance for 1992–93 with the annual average performance in 1997–98, where information is available. For 12 route groups average performance in 1997–98 was worse than in 1992–93; for 35 route groups it was better. 18 route groups have changed or been created since the end of 1992–93 and therefore no comparison can be made.

A train is deemed on time if it arrives within a specified period of the scheduled arrival time. In respect of the former InterCity and long distance Regional services this is 9 minutes 59 seconds; in respect of the former Network SouthEast and short distance Regional services this is 4 minute 59 seconds; and in respect of Scottish sleeper services this is 30 minutes. Prior to April 1995 on time was defined as within 10 minutes 59 seconds of the scheduled arrival time for the former InterCity and long distance Regional Services, and within 5 minutes and 59 seconds of scheduled arrival time for the former Network SouthEast and short distance Regional services. Certain services may be excluded from the calculations.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the reports on MEL's traffic modelling for the Birmingham Northern Relief Road prepared by (a) his Department and (b) advisers to his Department following the report by Transport Planning Associates on the three Birmingham Northern Relief Road bids and preceding the signing of the concession agreement for the Birmingham Northern Relief Road; and if he will indicate who undertook them. [51512]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. I do not have access to papers prepared for the previous Administration. Substantial evidence on traffic was, however, put before the Public Inquiry and the Inspector's Report on the evidence put before him was fully considered before the decision was reached to approve the proposed scheme.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional market research was carried out by MEL into the potential use of the Birmingham Northern Relief Road following the report by Transport Planning Associates on the three Birmingham Northern Relief Road bids and preceding the signing of the concession agreement for the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. [51513]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Any such market research is a matter for MEL, which bears the full revenue risk on this project.

Airports

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to (a) review the environmental impact of airports and (b) assess the need for further legislation to control the impact of aircraft noise on residential areas; and if he will make a statement. [51390]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The environmental impact of airports is kept under review. We have considered the need for further legislation on the control of aircraft noise and we announced in the White Paper on integrated transport policy our intention to consult on this issue.

A40

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road traffic related (a) accidents, (b) fatalities and (c) injuries have been reported on the A40 trunk road between Gloucester and Shipton Solers in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [51387]

Accidents and casualties on the A40 trunk road between Gloucester and Shipton Solers: 1988–97

Bridleways

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reinstate bridleways severed by motorway construction and road improvement works; and if he will make a statement. [51382]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has powers, conferred on him by the Highways Act 1980, to stop up or divert bridleways affected by highway works. The power to stop up bridleways is not used unless the Secretary of State is satisfied that another reasonably convenient route is available or is to be provided. Reinstatement of any particular bridleway will depend on the circumstances.

Planning Applications

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications have been called in during each of the last 10 years and how many to date in 1998. [51409]

Mr. Raynsford: The number of planning applications in England called in during each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Number
1988–89	117
1989–90	103
1990–91	132
1991–92	140
1992–93	101
1993–94	99
1994–95	167
1995–96	144
1996–97	139
1997–98	147

Each of the years listed is a financial year 1 April to 31 March. A further 41 applications have been called in between 1 April and 30 June 1998.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by total site area the amount of development within the Thames planning area which has been granted permission since February 1997, indicating those developments which (a) did not and (b) did follow the Strategic Planning Guidance. [51730]

Mr. Caborn: Comprehensive information on planning permissions granted by local planning authorities is not held centrally. Whether an individual development accords with the principles and policies set out in Strategic Planning Guidance for the River Thames is in some respects likely in any case to be a matter of interpretation and degree.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his powers and the circumstances in which they are involved with regard to local planning authorities which fail to follow the Strategic Planning Guidance for the River Thames when reaching decisions on planning applications within the Thames planning area. [51729]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State has the power to "call in" planning applications for his own decision. The circumstances in which he would do so are as set out in the answer which I gave my hon. Friend on 7 July 1998, Official Report, columns 469–68. The Secretary of State also has the power to direct the alteration or replacement of all or part of a local planning authority's Unitary Development Plan or the modification of proposals, including where these are inconsistent with Government policy or guidance. The planning authority must determine any application in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Voluntary Organisations

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by council in England the percentage of each budget allocated to voluntary organisations in each financial year since 1992–93. [51287]

Ms Armstrong: This information is not collected centrally.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average cost of a driving test per applicant at (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens test centres. [51545]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Based on the throughput of tests in the first three months of 1998, the estimated local staff and property cost per test centre is as follows:

Test centre	Average cost
Crosby	29.84
Norris Green	19.00
Southport	14.26
Garston	28.65
St. Helens	20.75

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the maximum number of tests which could be carried out per month with existing staff at (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens driving test centres. [51549]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is as follows:

Test centre	Maximum number of tests
Crosby	1,680
Norris Green	1,680
Southport	1,120
Garston	1,680
St. Helens	1,120

The figure for Crosby is assessed on the number of staff at the test centre before it was closed in April 1998.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many driving tests were conducted at the (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens driving centres during (i) January, (ii) February, (iii) March, (iv) April, (v) May and (vi) June. [51547]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is as follows:

	January to March	April to May
Crosby	915	0
Norris Green	1,594	822
Southport	805	694
Garston	970	1,040
St. Helens	836	606

The statistics requested have not been collated by monthly total. Figures including July 1998 are not yet available.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the individual revenue costs including salaries, building costs, leasing costs and any other expenditures in excess of £1,000 per annum of running (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens driving standards test centres in the last year for which figures are available. [51548]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The local staff and property costs of providing driving tests in 1997–98 at each of the centres listed were as follows:

Test Centre	Revenue Cost
Crosby	109,249
Norris Green	121,069
Southport	45,872
Garston	111,053
St. Helens	69,491

Housing

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for monitoring the provision of affordable housing to be provided under the terms set out in Circular 6/98. [51731]

Mr. Caborn: In revising Planning Policy Guidance note 3: Housing we are considering the need for monitoring the provision of affordable housing provided through Circular 6/98. We will shortly be consulting on the draft guidance later this year.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who will be responsible for finding a replacement to complete the second phase of the CTRL in the event that Railtrack decides not to exercise its option to complete it. [51526]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the terms of the revised agreement, London and Continental Railways (LCR) will retain the obligation to complete the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) if Railtrack does not exercise its option to commit to the second phase of construction. However, Railtrack has publicly stated that it fully intends exercising its option and there is a strong financial incentive for it to do so.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what aspects of the CTRL restructuring remain to be negotiated; and if he will make a statement. [51738]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the statement of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, much work has been done by the principal parties involved in the restructuring of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) deal to document the details of the new arrangements. Although there is much to do, the work is on course to enable London and Continental Railways (LCR) to begin construction of the link later this year.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if construction of the Thames Link 2000 St. Pancras Box is dependent on finalisation of plans for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [51739]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The two projects are physically integrated, which is why the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) promoter is contractually committed to construct the Thameslink Box. The Department is discussing the full implications of the CTRL agreement outlined by my right hon. Friend on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 367–70, with London and Continental Railways, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF) and Railtrack.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the scope of the powers of the regulator for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [51527]

Ms Glenda Jackson: S16 of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996 excludes the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) as a "licensed activity" under the Railways Act 1993 and it is therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the Rail Regulator. The rights and obligations of the parties are regulated principally through the Development Agreement between HM Government and London and Continental Railways (LCR), together with a suite of further agreements between HMG, LCR and Railtrack.

East-west Rail Link

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the conclusions of the current assessment of the East-West Rail Link. [51736]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that this refers to Railtrack's study of the Crossrail project. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 7 May 1998, Official Report, columns 439–40.

Parking Fines (London)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what data his Department collates in respect of levels of unpaid parking fines in London boroughs. [51529]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. The Transport Committee for London, which co-ordinates the local authority parking regime, collects statistics on enforcement, including tickets issued, those cancelled and those paid, at a London wide level.

Two-wheeled Vehicles

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the Journey Times Survey 1998, inner and outer London, includes sample journeys by powered two wheelers. [51813]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1993 the Department initiated the Journey Times Survey as a means of assessing long-term changes in accessibility in London, and how complete door-to-door journey times vary between modes. Motorcycling is not included in the survey as it is considered that the journey times recorded would not be a sufficiently reliable indicator of changing traffic conditions.

NHS Trusts (Wales)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the NHS trusts in Wales which (a) have been prosecuted under health and safety legislation and (b) have received prohibition or improvement notes since 1991; [51594]

(2) if he will list the NHS trusts in Wales which have been found since 1991 to be in breach of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974; and if he will give details of the breaches. [51595]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 22 July 1998]: Between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1998, Mid Glamorgan Area Health Authority was prosecuted by HSE on 28 November 1991 for a breach of the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 5 and 8. South Glamorgan Area Health Authority was prosecuted on 28 February 1996 for a breach of section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. No other prosecutions have been taken in Wales.

Improvement Notices have been issued against the following NHS trusts by HSE's Field Operations Division in Wales between 1 April 1996 and 31 March 1998:

Bridgend and District NHS Trust
Carmarthen and District NHS Trust
Glan Hafren NHS Trust
Morriston Hospital NHS Trust
South East Wales NHS Ambulance Trust
Wrexham Maelor Hospital NHS Trust
Cardiff Community Health Care NHS Trust
Ceredigion and Mid Wales NHS Trust
East Glamorgan NHS Trust
Clwydian Community Health NHS Trust
Gwent Community Health NHS Trust
Powys Health Care NHS Trust.

A Prohibition notice has been issued against Glan Hafren NHS Trust. Prior to 1996–97, notices against the NHS cannot be identified from HSE's computer databases. HSE holds no information on the number of "breaches" which do not result in a prosecution of the issuing of an Improvement or Prohibition Notice.

Transport White Paper

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of funds raised by local authorities from proposals in the White Paper on transport will be available for reinvestment in local transport plans. [51976]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details will be published in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 3.210 of the White Paper, A New Deal for Transport, if the duty given to the Strategic Rail Authority to consider rail access to major ports will encompass Newhaven. [51947]

Angela Eagle: In principle, yes.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the rail investment proposals within the White Paper, A New Deal for Transport, will provide for the reopening of disused rail lines. [51967]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director will control additional funds vis two new schemes. The Infrastructure Investment Fund will relieve infrastructure "pinch points" on the network which could not be tackled without additional public sector financial support. The Passenger Rail Partnership is designed to encourage and support innovative proposals at the regional and local level that develop rail use and promote modal shift. Such proposals could include new or enhanced local rail services, better facilities for passengers and re-opening of disused lines.

Details of the operation of the proposed schemes will be announced in the Autumn. Meanwhile, local authorities are encouraged to submit to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising proposals consistent with out integrated transport policies.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the dates of the consultation process relating to the implementation of proposals set out in the White Paper on transport. [51977]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A number of further documents have been promised and we will be publishing the first of these shortly. Others will follow over the summer and through to the end of the year.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 2.36 of the Comprehensive Spending Review and to the Transport White Paper, if he will estimate what revenues will be raised from (i) charges on parking spaces and (ii) charges for road access or congestion charges, in each of the years 1998–99 to 2005–06. [51950]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Table under paragraph 2.36 of the Comprehensive Spending Review estimated, for indicative purposes, that some £1 billion in transport investment might be funded by new revenue streams by 2005–06. This assumes that local authorities and others respond positively to the new powers, subject to the necessary legislation being in place. The actual revenue raised, the yearly income profile, and the proportions that will come from road user charging and from workplace parking charges, will depend upon the level and speed of take-up. We shall be consulting in due course on the detail of how schemes will be implemented.

Hare Hunting

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will seek to amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to introduce a statutory closed season on hare hunting. [51972]

Angela Eagle: An objective under the brown hare biodiversity species action plan is to review the use of legislation pertaining to shooting and selling of hares in the light of research findings on the seasonality of reproduction. Any decision on restrictions on hare hunting will not be made until the outcome of that review is known.

Transport Policies and Programmes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department has provided or will provide for local authority Transport Policies and Programme bids in each of the years from 1997–98 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [51952]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information for past allocation is as follows:

Year	£ million
1997–98	746
1998–99	583

My Department has provisional plans to allocate the following amounts under the TPP system, or its successor, in the next three financial years:

Year	£ million
1999–2000	598
2000–01	695
2001–02	987

The figure for 1997–98 includes £50 million for Croydon Tramlink. Provision for that project in subsequent years is accounted for outside the TPP system.

The figures for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 are guidelines. Final allocations for each of these years will be decided following the assessment of local authorities' bids. Unlike the figures for earlier years those for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 do not include supplementary credit approvals (SCA) set aside to match ERDF grant, or the receipts that we allow local authorities to use as part of their TPP allocations.

Figures for those elements in past years were:

Year	ERDF SCA	Receipts
1997–98	35	39
1998–99	26	33

The amount to be allowed for each of these elements in future years has yet to be decided.

Expenditure plans have not yet been formulated beyond 2001–02.

Motorcycling

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) motorcycle drivers and (b) pillion passengers have been killed in road accidents in England and Wales in each of the last three years. [51245]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table.

TWMV[1] Fatalities: England and Wales: 1995–1997

	Riders	Passengers
England
1995	363	23
1996	371	21
1997	410	27
Wales
1996	17	2
1997	33	2

[1] Two Wheeled Motor Vehicle

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the issues raised at the special consultative meeting of motorcyclists at his Department on 25 November 1997. [52018]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The consultative meeting with representatives of motorcycle, environment and safety groups discussed all the transport aspects of motorcycling.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of commuter motorcycling as an aid to reducing pollution and congestion in urban areas. [52020]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The environmental and congestion implications of motorcycles are not clear cut. Much depends on the size of the motorcycle; whether the journeys are in addition to or a substitute for journeys previously made; and whether they substitute for journeys previously made by car, on foot, by bicycle or on public transport.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to establish a Motorcycle Strategy Group to consider the role of motorcycling within an integrated transport policy. [52038]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The White Paper 'A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone' (Cm 3950) announced that we would be setting up an advisory group to bring together motorcycle interests and other interested parties, to allow discussion of issues of concern to those who ride motorcycles and of the ways we can work together on policies, including encouraging further improvements in the safety and environmental impact of motorcycling.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the recent trends in accident deaths among motorcyclists aged over 25 years in rural areas. [52019]

Ms Glenda Jackson: 318 riders and passengers of two wheeled motor vehicles died on non built-up roads in 1998—20 per cent. more than in 1996. Deaths increased in all age groups 25 years and over except those aged 45–49 and 55–59. This increase is most disturbing and Departmental officials will be considering, with representatives of the motorcycle rider groups and industry, how these deaths and injuries can best be avoided.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of motorcycle accidents in urban areas are caused by other road users; and if he will assess ways of modifying the car driving test to take into account motorcycle awareness. [52025]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on the causation of injury road accidents is not yet collected on a national basis. We have introduced more questions in the driving theory test to increase awareness of vulnerable road users, including motorcyclists. We are also considering what improvements, if any, need to be made to the practical car driving test.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make representations to the Corporation of London to introduce loading bays specifically for the use of motorcycle couriers in the City of London. [52022]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. This is a matter for the City Corporation. We have issued Traffic Management and Parking Guidance for London which makes it clear that we expect the London authorities to consider the need for motorcyclists in developing their traffic management strategies.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the consultation document on amending the requirement for learner motorcyclists to face a one year ban if they fail to pass their motorcycle riding test within two years of receiving their provisional licence. [52021]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We shall be publishing a Consultation Paper shortly.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the North Yorkshire Police Bikesafe 2000 scheme. [51973]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has not made a formal assessment of the North Yorkshire Bikesafe 2000 scheme.

Rivers Drone and Rother

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the water quality in the rivers Drone and Rother; and if he will make a statement. [51847]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency is responsible for monitoring water quality. The General Quality Assessment (GQA) scheme classifies stretches of rivers into six classes of chemical water quality, from A (very good) to F (bad), based on biochemical oxygen demand and concentrations of dissolved oxygen and ammonia.

The Agency advises that the River Rother is classified as class C (fairly good) from its source, near Clay Cross, until Danesmoor, where it falls to class E (poor). The river improves to class D (fair) downstream of Wingerworth and further improves to class C just downstream of the River Hipper. It then fluctuates between classes C and D until Woodhouse Mill sewage works in Sheffield, where it becomes class E until it meets the River Don on Rotherham.

The River Drone is too small to be classified under the GQA scheme until it flows through Dronfield. It is then classified as class E for 4.2 km until its confluence with the Rother.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the increases in education spending will be financed by (a) revenue support grant, (b) business rates, (c) council taxes and (d) reductions in other services for each of the next three years; and what estimate he has made of the average cumulative increase in council tax over each of the next three years to pay for education spending increases. [51599]

Ms Armstrong: Local authority spending is financed partly through Aggregate External Finance (AEF), which includes both redistributed non-domestic rates and revenue support grant, and partly through locally raised revenue, including council taxes. It is not possible to separate the financing of education from that of other services. We have provided for an average increase of 4.9 per cent. per year in Standard Spending Assessments (SSAs) overall. If local authorities increase their overall expenditure in line with the increases in SSA totals, council taxes would go up by 4.5 per cent. each year.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to discourage car use by his Department's employees. [51824]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Measures to reduce the environmental impact of transport activities will be included in the Green Transport Plans being prepared for each of the Department's key buildings. The Plans will be completed by end March 1999 and will be tailored to each location and its operational needs.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what activities his Green Minister has undertaken relating to his environmental responsibilities since being appointed. [51828]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As Green Minister for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions I have attended all three meetings of Green Ministers; held a discussion with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment (in his role as Chair of Green Ministers) to review activity on greening Government with DETR; spoken at one of the regional seminars to launch Opportunities for Change, the Government's consultation on a new sustainable development strategy; issued guidance on Green Transport Plans to Green Ministers in all Departments; issued the Government's Policy Guidance on Environmental Appraisal to DETR staff; and held discussions with key DETR staff to consider systems for environmental appraisal and consider the Department's strategy for greening its operations.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled at present; and what targets he has set for the future. [51826]

Angela Eagle: My Department is conducting a survey of its property managers to find out the percentage of waste recycled in 1997–98 and to agree a target to increase that percentage in future years.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the current energy consumption is of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans there are for including energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [51825]

Angela Eagle: The latest available energy consumption figures available are for 1996–97. The energy consumption of the then constituent parts of DETR totalled 144,758,340 kWh. My department is working towards achieving government targets described in the Model Policy Statement for Greening Government Operations, and publishing its achievements in its annual report.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what efforts he has made to raise awareness of environmental and sustainable issues within his Department; and if specific training will be made available to staff where appropriate. [51827]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government consultation paper, Opportunities for Change, was put on the Department's internal "intranet"; copies of the accompanying leaflet were circulated to all staff and publicised in the Department's in-house magazine Grassroutes. The Government Offices for the Regions (GORs) organised a programme of regional events, and are now working on the revised strategy. Policy Guidance on environmental appraisal was distributed widely within the Department, its Agencies, NDPBs and GORs in April and placed on the DETR intranet. We are planning further initiatives to foster staff awareness, building on the on-the-job training for staff who work on environmental policy issues, Work of the Department induction courses for staff and internal seminars for staff on the outcome of Kyoto and sustainable development strategy consultation.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department will provide or has provided to local authorities for road maintenance in each of the years from 1997–98 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [51949]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The majority of the funding for the routine maintenance of local authority roads is provided through one element of the Revenue Support Grant (RSG): the Highways Maintenance Standard Spending Assessment (HMSSA). Additional funding for the structural maintenance of principal roads (local authority "A" Roads) is provided by the TPP system. Figures given in the table are for all English local authorities.

Funding of local road maintenance

£ million

Year	HMSSA	TPP	Total
1997–98	1,759	92	1,851
1998–99	1,767	80	1,847
1999–2000	1,813	100	1,913
2000–01	1,859	130	1,989
2001–02	1,905	180	2,085

The TPP figures—and therefore the totals—for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 are guidelines. Final allocations for each of these years will be decided following the assessment of local authorities' bids. Expenditure plans have not yet been formulated beyond 2001–02.

Figures for spending by local authorities on local road maintenance in 1994–95 to 1996–97 were given in an answer on 16 July 1998, Official Report, column 243, to Named Day Question 50885 asked by the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton).

Red Routes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will widen the exemption on red route loading bays to allow the delivery and collection of goods by motorcycle couriers and other light delivery vehicles. [52023]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Loading bays on the red route network are available to any vehicle carrying out legitimate loading or unloading. This is subject only to the signed limits on time and duration.

Virgin Rail Services

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received about the performance of Virgin rail services on (a) the West Coast Mainline and (b) cross country routes; and if he will make a statement. [51907]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department and the Franchising Director's Office have received 72 representations on all aspects of Virgin West Coast performance and 43 representations on Virgin Cross Country performance since the beginning of this year. Virgin Train's performance has been affected recently due to problems with rolling stock and infrastructure on West Coast, and problems with rolling stock on Cross Country. Virgin Trains have taken action to bring about improvements. We look to the Franchising Director to work with Virgin to ensure that improvements are sustained. In his statement on transport policy on 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 784–88, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced our plans to set up a Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) with stronger powers to enforce the delivery of contractual obligations by train operators. We also expect the SRA to specify more demanding performance standards for new or renegotiated franchises.

Road Safety

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on road safety in (a) Staffordshire and (b) the West Midlands Region. [51905]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Road safety is a high priority in the West Midlands Region as it is at national level. The Transport White Paper published on 20 July makes it clear that as part of the New Deal for transport we will set a new road safety target for Great Britain for 2010, together with a strategy and programme of measures for achieving it. It is, however, for Staffordshire County Council and the other local authorities in the region to promote and implement, with partners, schemes to improve road safety on roads in their area.

As part of the local safety schemes allocation in the 1998–99 Local Transport Settlement we allocated £0.378 million to Staffordshire County Council and £5.123 million to the West Midlands Region.

Workplace Parking Charges

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to paragraph 4.107 of the White Paper, A New Deal for Transport, if Westminster City Council will be empowered to levy charges for workplace parking within the Parliamentary Estate. [51953]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government stated in the White Paper that they proposed to legislate to enable the parking charge to apply to all types of workplace parking, wherever situated. We shall issue a consultation document in due course that will discuss, among other things, the institutional arrangements for London.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish draft legislation relating to the creation of a strategic rail authority. [51945]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We shall bring the necessary legislation before Parliament at an early opportunity.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drug Abuse

Mr. Clappison: To ask the President of the Council how much is to be spent in 1998–99 on prevention and treatment services for drug abuse; and how much is planned to be spent on these services in each of the next three years. [51117]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Figures for 1998–99 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures available, as collected for the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review, relate to 1997–98. In that year, expenditure on drugs prevention and education is estimated to have totalled £50 million. This included central Departments' funding and a proportion of teacher time spent on drugs education in the classroom. Funding for treatment interventions, relating primarily to health and social services projects, and anti-drugs initiatives in the Prison Service, is estimated to have amounted to £103 million. In the same year, expenditure on international supply reduction, including HM Customs and Excise, is estimated to have amounted to £153 million; and on proactive drugs enforcement, £77 million.

On 14 July, we announced that extra resources, amounting to £188 million in total up to 2001–02, will be made available to fund proactive work to tackle drug misuse under the anti-drugs strategy. Details of the breakdown of this expenditure will be announced in due course.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and

(B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49237]

Mr. Fatchett: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has 1,256 official vehicles, including dedicated flag cars used by Heads of Post, as well as pool cars, mini buses, trucks and motor cycles. These are divided between 45 based in the United Kingdom, and 1,211 in use at British Diplomatic Posts overseas. The total figure includes 26 leased vehicles, all of which are operating overseas, but it is intended to increase the number of leased vehicles where this represents better value for public funds.

Details of the fuel types and engine cubic capacities for the 45 vehicles based in the United Kingdom are as follows:

34 Diesel			11 Petrol
Engine size	Quantity	Engine size	Quantity
1.5	1	1.8	5
1.7	7	2.0	3
1.8	2	2.3	1
2.0	1	2.5	2
2.3	1	—	—
2.5	16	—	—
2.9	1	—	—
3.0	1	—	—
4.5	1	—	—
10.0	1	—	—
12.0	2	—	—

Detailed information about the fuel types and engine cubic capacities of all the official vehicles held overseas is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The following are the number of vehicles expected to fall due for replacement:

1998–1999: 194

1999–2000: 263

2000–2001: 168.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50682]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Few staff are solely employed to handle correspondence and for most staff this is part of their normal duties.

Special Operations Executive

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to release more records of the wartime Special Operations Executive. [52365]

Mr. Robin Cook: The records of the Special Operations Executive (SOE) have been released progressively since 1993. The next batch of records, covering Western Europe, have been transferred to the Public Record Office, and will be opened today. Further SOE records will be released in due course.

Angola

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken to implement United Nations Security Council Resolution 1173 (1998) which imposed further sanctions on UNITA as from 1 July. [52366]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Resolution 1173 imposed a freeze on the funds and financial resources of UNITA, its officials and their immediate families; a ban on most official contacts in Angola with UNITA; a prohibition on the import of diamonds outside the governmental certificate of origin regime; and prohibitions on the sale or supply of equipment which may be used in mining or transportation, and on transportation services.

We have instructed all our diplomatic missions overseas to avoid any contact with UNITA, whether locally or in Angola.

The prohibition on the importation of diamonds will be given effect in the United Kingdom by amendment to the Open General Import Licence.

The remainder of the prohibitions are to be implemented in the UK by the Angola (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1998 and in the Overseas Territories by the Angola (United Nations Sanctions) (Dependent Territories) Order 1998 made on 21 July and laid yesterday.

Similar Orders have been made to give effect to the Resolution in the Crown Dependencies. These orders restrict the sale or supply of certain goods which may be used in mining or transportation and the supply of transportation services; impose a freeze on the funds and financial resources in relation to UNITA and persons connected with UNITA, and, for the Overseas Territories and Channel Islands, restrict the importation of diamonds exported from Angola on or after 1 July 1998. There is provision for medical and humanitarian exceptions.

East Timor

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of the report by the European Union Troika mission on East Timor in the Library. [52541]

Mr. Fatchett: The Conclusions of the EU Heads of Mission Troika visit to East Timor (27–30 June) have now been published. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Human Rights Fund

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he is using in making allocations of funding from the Human Rights Fund. [49740]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 13 July 1998]: Priority is given to projects which contribute to the following themes:

children's rights, including commercial sexual exploitation;

media, including training;

rule of law co-operation, including training and prison reform;

support for the development of civil society;

country specific projects outside the scope of the above but which contribute to the human rights strategy of missions and FCO Geographical Commands.

Additional priority is given to projects in any of these areas which promote the advancement of women and equality of opportunity for men and women.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the examination of the Algerian Government's report on civil and political rights which will be considered by the United Nations Human Rights Committee on 20 and 21 July in Geneva. [51845]

Mr. Fatchett: The Algerian Government's second periodic report under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) has now been examined by the Human Rights Committee in Geneva. We welcome this example of Algeria's co-operation with UN human rights mechanisms. We note the concerns expressed by the Committee and hope that Algeria will act upon the Committee's recommendations concerning the full protection and promotion of all human rights in Algeria, including the right to life.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the mandate of the United Nations Secretary General's six person special mission to Algeria. [51843]

Mr. Fatchett: The mandate of the special mission is the responsibility of the United Nations. We welcomed the UN Secretary-General's 7 July announcement of the forthcoming visit to Algeria, under UN auspices, by a panel of eminent persons. We look forward to hearing the mission's findings.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the findings of the United Nations Secretary General's special mission to Algeria will be published by the United Nations. [51844]

Mr. Fatchett: The forthcoming visit of a special mission to Algeria is taking place under UN auspices. We are not aware of the United Nations' intentions about publication of the mission's report.

Iran

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to upgrade diplomatic relations between Britain and Iran; and what plans there are for ministerial visits to Iran. [51992]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no immediate plans to upgrade the level of our diplomatic relations with Iran or for a ministerial visit to Tehran.

Gibraltar

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards (a) integration and (b) free association of Gibraltar with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [51966]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the context of the recent review of the Overseas Territories, we have re-examined these options. We have concluded that neither integration nor free association with the UK offer appropriate options for modern Overseas Territories. That includes Gibraltar.

Vienna Summit

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he is planning to put forward for the Vienna Summit; and if these will include the idea of a second Chamber for the European Parliament. [51993]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No decision has yet been taken about what proposals the Government may make to either the Vienna European Council or the meeting of Heads of State or Government on 24/25 October.

Counter-drug Agreement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the counter-drug agreement between the US and the UK signed in Washington on 13 July. [51881]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A copy of the Agreement by the UK and US concerning maritime and aerial operations to suppress illicit trafficking by sea in waters of the Caribbean and Bermuda, signed in Washington on 13 July, will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

It will be published as a Command Paper in the Miscellaneous Series, accompanied by an Explanatory Memorandum, and will be subject to the Ponsonby Rule.

Alois Brunner

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 397, if he will now make representations to the Syrian Government in support of the French Government's application to extradite Alois Brunner on war crime charges. [51946]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no evidence of the whereabouts of Alois Brunner, or if he is still alive. We have no plans to make representations to the Syrian Government about this matter.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who authorised, and for what purpose, Britain's High Commissioner to Sierra Leone to accompany the Kabbah Government into exile following the military coup. [51877]

Mr. Robin Cook: Following the military coup, like the rest of the international community, the United Kingdom continued to regard President Kabbah as the head of the legitimate Government of Sierra Leone. We were in the lead in efforts to achieve the peaceful restoration of that Government.

Although the junta was in power in Freetown, large parts of Sierra Leone were under the control of forces loyal to President Kabbah, and it was widely expected that the junta would not remain in power. It was important to remain in close contact with the President and to maintain the High Commissioner's strong relationship with him. Ministers therefore agreed that the High Commissioner should, on a temporary basis, stay in Conakry, where he had been evacuated after the coup in Freetown.

Legg Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish the report of the Legg Inquiry. [52007]

Mr. Robin Cook: I have not yet received the report of the investigation by Sir Thomas Legg and Sir Robin Ibbs. I will publish it as soon as possible after receiving it.

UN Covenant on the Rights of the Child

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what official representations the British Government have made to the Government of Somalia regarding that Government's non-ratification of the UN Covenant on the Rights of the Child; and on what dates; [52032]

(2) what official representations the British Government have made to the Government of the United States of America regarding that Government's non-ratification of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child; and on what dates. [52026]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom has regularly played a leading part in securing the adoption of United Nations resolutions calling upon States to accede to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child as a matter of priority. At the 1998 session of the Commission on Human Rights the UK, on behalf of the European Union, reiterated this call. We have made no direct representations to the United States, which signed the Convention in 1995. Nor have we made representations to Somalia where, as a result of Civil war, there has been no government or recognised national authority since 1991.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella (Eggs)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter 114760 of 26 June 1998, when he expects the ACMSF to report on factors which determine the presence of salmonella contamination in or on eggs. [50645]

Mr. Rooker: It is hoped that the ACMSF Working Group will be able to begin its work shortly. No timetable is being imposed on the Group for completing its work. The ACMSF will report as quickly as possible, commensurate with the need to tackle the question thoroughly and subject to the constraints imposed by the Committee's wider work programme.

Coastal Fishing Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 June 1998, Official Report, column 424, on coastal fishing, which of the definitions referred to is applied to UK coastal fisheries limits. [51551]

Mr. Morley: There is no single definition of UK coastal fisheries limits. All of the definitions contained in my answer of 22 June 1998 are relevant.

Fisheries Limits

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of the word "region" in the context of fisheries limits. [51552]

Mr. Morley: The word "region" is open to varying definitions. The appropriate one in any given case will depend on the precise circumstances in which the word is used.

Woodlands

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what acreage of new woodlands has been planted in England and Wales in each of the last five years. [51557]

Mr. Morley: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. All areas are in hectares.

Year ended 31 March	Area planted in England	Area planted in Wales
1994	6,357	636
1995	5,375	566
1996	4,708	442
1997	4,654	411
1998	4,369	498

Meat Imports

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a requirement for (a) pork and (b) bacon sold in the United Kingdom to be provided on a basis that meets British welfare regulations to ensure that United Kingdom animal welfare measures are not circumvented by import of meat from stall and tether units in Europe. [50699]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 16 July 1998]: Single market rules do not allow the banning of imports of pork, bacon or other animal products on the ground that they have been produced to lower welfare standards than apply in the United Kingdom.

We have made clear our intention to work to raise EU minimum welfare requirements for pigs. That is why we have urged the Commission to follow up the report published last year by its own Scientific Veterinary Committee and bring forward early proposals to improve the standards laid down in EU law.

I also consider it important for retailers, wherever practical, to reassure their customers by applying high welfare standards to their purchases regardless of origin, as I understand some already do.

Research

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the effect that the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review will have on the future funding of public-good research into the horticulturally related areas of (a) GMOs, (b) reduction in pesticides usage and (c) food quality; [51457]

(2) pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review of the amount of money spent on agriculture and horticulture research by his Ministry with outside bodies, if it will remain unchanged in real terms. [51486]

Dr. John Cunningham: Precise budget allocations to individual MAFF programmes have not yet been finalised. The Ministry's expenditure plans for the years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 will be announced as soon as possible.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in support of an EU-wide ban on the export of live horses for slaughter. [51379]

Mr. Morley: The Government have received representations from welfare organisations, and from a number of individuals, advocating a ban on the export of live horses from the EU for slaughter in third countries.

Fishing Industry (EU Assistance)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current EU assistance projects to the fishing industry, indicating the amount spent on each by country in the last year for which figures are available. [51465]

Mr. Morley: Aid is available to Member States from the EU Financial Instrument for Fisheries Guidance (FIFG) under Objectives 1 and 5a for investment in the following areas (not all applied in the UK):

- the permanent cessation of fishing activities, including decommissioning;
- the re-orientation of fishing activities (joint ventures/enterprises with third countries);
- vessel construction and modernisation;
- aquaculture;
- enclosed marine areas (e.g. artificial reefs);
- fishing port facilities;
- processing and marketing;
- promotion;
- early retirement; and
- compensation for cessation of fishing.

Aid is also available under PESCA to assist the restructuring and diversification of the fisheries sector in fisheries dependent areas and to help it deal with problems such as overcapacity and market weakness.

Member States' plans for total expenditure in their FIFG Sectoral Plans and PESCA Programmes in the five-year period 1994–1999 are:

Country	FIFG objectives 1 and 5a (Mecu)	PESCA (Mecu at 1996 prices)
Austria	2.00	—
Belgium	24.87	2.94
Denmark	139.90	23.03
Finland	27.00	3.91
France	228.10	39.05
Germany	158.00	23.47
Greece	130.00	34.33
Ireland	47.00	8.86
Italy	367.40	40.13
Luxembourg	1.10	—
Netherlands	55.10	14.96
Portugal	213.20	32.44
Spain	1,114.60	49.53
Sweden	44.10	4.55
United Kingdom	123.62	49.49

No figures are currently available on actual annual expenditure in other Member States, but EU expenditure in the UK in the latest available years was:

FIFG Objectives 1 and 5a (1997–98): £17.4m

PESCA (1997): £0.92m.

In addition, fisheries expenditure on grants to UK ports under the European Regional Development Fund in 1997–98 was £0.09m.

Cumberland Rum Butter

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he is making regarding the impact of EU Commission Regulations 623/98 on the manufacture of Cumberland rum butter. [51455]

Mr. Rooker: Rum butters with a minimum milk fat content of 34 per cent. are unaffected by the Commission Regulations. The Ministry's officials are currently working with manufacturers of "ambient" brandy and rum butters in order to minimise any disruption to their business arising from this unnecessary Regulation. In particular, assistance and advice are being given in the preparation of an application, on behalf of a number of companies, for a derogation permitting traditional ambient alcoholic butters, including "Cumberland rum butter", to continue to be so described. The Government will be submitting this application to the European Commission under the provisions of article 4(1) of Commission Regulation 577/97.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the ethical principles which apply to solicitors who are employed by the Crown Prosecution Service as Crown prosecutors. [52712]

The Attorney-General: After consultation with the Director of Public Prosecutions, I have today published a Statement of Ethical Principles, which applies to all solicitors who are employed by the Crown Prosecution Service as Crown Prosecutors. The Statement is made in accordance with paragraph 1(h)(v) of the Law Society's Employed Solicitor Code 1990. It meets the Law Society's requirement under the Code that such a statement should be published before solicitors employed by the Crown Prosecution Service can exercise their rights of audience in the higher courts.

The Statement sets out:

1. the inter-relationship between Crown Prosecutors' obligations as civil servants and as members of the legal profession;
2. the position of Crown Prosecutors as prosecutors and Crown Prosecution Service employees; and
3. the position of Crown Prosecutor solicitors who exercise rights of audience in the higher courts.

I am placing a copy of the Statement in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Spending Review

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what conclusions he has reached as a result of his Department's Spending Review; and if he will make a statement. [52422]

Mr. Chris Smith: The outcome of our Spending Review has been a recognition of the importance of all my Department's activities, economically, culturally and socially, for the quality of people's lives. I have secured an extra £290 million over the next three years, an investment which will bring obligations and responsibilities. We will have a new contract with all our funded bodies which will demand improvements in efficiency, access and quality in return for investment in support of our new objectives. To help ensure that this happens, I will establish a tough new team to monitor and improve standards throughout all our sectors.

I have placed in the Library of the House copies of a consultation paper which I am issuing today, proposing a number of changes in the sectoral landscape for which my Department is responsible. This will create a more efficient structure for delivering public money in pursuit of clear objectives. I will make a further announcement in the Autumn on the outcome of the consultation.

WALES

Education Action Zones

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the education action zones designated for Wales. [51619]

Mr. Hain: There are no designated Education Zones in Wales at present. Under Clause 10 of the School Standards and Framework Bill provisions relating to Education Action Zones (EAZs) do not apply in Wales, though the Secretary of State may introduce them at a later date. In the Education White Paper for Wales, Building Excellent Schools Together, published in July last year, the Welsh Office pledged to consult widely before introducing EAZs. Any final decision on the introduction of EAZs in Wales is likely to be a matter for the National Assembly and will be informed by the outcome of any consultation exercise and the experience of EAZs in England.

Urban Task Force

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that his Department receives advice from the Urban Task Force chaired by Lord Rogers. [51815]

Mr. Hain: The Urban Task Force has a remit to identify causes of urban decline in England. Welsh Office officials are being informed of its progress by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and will receive a copy of the completed report in due course.

Transport Plans

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish his plans for the future of transport in Wales. [52819]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Transport Policy Statement "Transporting Wales into the Future" has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Graduates

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of university graduates who attended Welsh secondary schools who are pursuing their careers outside Wales. [51448]

Mr. Hain: Information in the form requested is not available. However, information on the first destination of Welsh-domiciled students in 1995–96 indicates that 2,768 graduates were known to have taken up employment outside Wales.

Pensioners

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the percentage of people over 65 years of age resident in Wales who were not economically active in Wales, in the last year for which figures are available. [51449]

Mr. Hain: In Spring 1998, 96 per cent. of people over 65 years of age who were resident in Wales were not economically active in Wales, according to the Labour Force Survey.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of written parliamentary questions tabled for answer by the Welsh Office on a named day under S.O. No. 22 (4) have been answered substantively on the named day since 1 May 1997. [51450]

Mr. Ron Davies: From 1 May 1997 to 24 July 1998, 89 per cent. of written parliamentary questions tabled to my Department for answer on a named day were answered substantively.

Gross Domestic Product, Powys

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the most recent GDP figures for Powys. [51452]

Mr. Hain: The Office for National Statistics (ONS) has not previously published GDP figures for Powys. However, I understand that GDP figures for various areas in Wales, including Powys, will be issued this summer.

Policy Announcements

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many policy initiatives announced by his Department since 1 May were announced (a) by means of a statement to the House prior to a press conference and (b) by a press conference. [51451]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have made no statements to the House on major policy initiatives since 1 May. I have held a number of press conferences on a variety of subjects since that date.

Economic Indicator Data

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what economic indicator data the Welsh Office collects for each unitary authority in Wales. [51453]

Mr. Hain: Economic indicator data for Wales are mainly collected by Government Departments other than the Welsh Office. Rates of claimant unemployment, economic activity, and employment are published for all unitary authority areas. Unemployment rates from the Labour Force Survey are currently published for six authorities, and average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees for 15 authorities: for these indicators the estimates for other authority areas are subject to excessive sampling variation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to make ministers in the proposed Northern Ireland Assembly subject to the Official Secrets Act 1989 on taking office; and if she will make a statement about the security implications of Ministers from paramilitary-connected parties taking Government office. [42164]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 18 May 1998]: Paragraph 5 (3) of Schedule 13 of the Northern Ireland Bill, which is currently before Parliament, makes provision for the Official Secrets Act 1989 to apply to the First Minister and Deputy First Minister in Northern Ireland and to Northern Ireland Ministers.

We are considering whether any further provisions are necessary to protect national security interests in the context of devolution.

New Deal

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are participating in the New Deal in Northern Ireland. [51022]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Malcolm Moss, dated 22 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training & Employment Agency to reply to your question about the number of people participating in the Government's New Deal in Northern Ireland.

By Friday 17 July, a total of 2,724 18–24 year old clients had entered New Deal Gateway in Northern Ireland. They will progress to the most appropriate of the four options available to them. In addition some 826 employers have signed employer agreements.

The Chancellor's recent initiative means that additional funding is now available to extend New Deal provision for the 25+ age group from November of this year. Plans are also advanced to implement the New Deals for Lone Parents and Disabled people later this year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Beef Exports

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to which countries Northern Ireland beef is currently exported. [51556]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Since the lifting of the beef export ban on 1 June 1998 the only consignment of Northern Ireland beef to be exported went to Belgium.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Open Government

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy on open Government with reference to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies, (c) its non-departmental public bodies and (d) corporate organisations within his Department's control; and what steps he plans to take to encourage the provision of information by such bodies. [51483]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department, together with its Executive Agencies and its executive-NDPBs which come under the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, are subject to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ordnance Survey, the Office of the Passenger Rail Franchising, the Office of the Rail Regulator and the Office of Water Services also come within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner and are subject to the Code.

Those quasi-NDPBs, public corporations and nationalised industries which do not come within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner have their own arrangements on open government but are encouraged by the Department to follow the spirit of the Code.

The Department, and other bodies under its control with public responsibilities, also have a statutory duty to provide information on the environment under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

The Department, its Agencies, NDPBs, public corporations and nationalised industries are considering how to prepare for the requirements of the Freedom of Information legislation.

Eurostar

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the cost of the seven regional Eurostar sets; what is their current location; and what proposals are being considered for their future use; [51741]

(2) what assessment the consortiums bidding to run Eurostar have provided to his Department of the viability of running regional Eurostar rail services. [51655]

Ms Glenda Jackson: These trainsets were purchased as part of a larger procurement contract which included the intercapital sets so it is not possible to give actual costs. However, they are currently being leased at £22 million each. The trains are based at North Pole Depot in North London and at Eurostar's Longsight facility in Manchester and they are currently undergoing tests on the UK and continental rail networks.

The provision of regional Eurostar services are a matter for London and Continental Railways. The consortium chosen by LCR to operate Eurostar have been asked to review urgently the feasibility of regional Eurostar services, and to report to the Government before the end of the year. This report has not been received yet.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Environment Agency has recently relaxed its code governing the treatment of clinical waste derived from hospitals. [51647]

Angela Eagle: Clinical waste is defined in Regulation 1(2) of the Controlled Waste Regulations 1992 and, as controlled waste, must be managed and disposed of in accordance with sections 33 and 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Some types of clinical waste are also classified as "Special Waste" and subject to the additional controls in the Special Waste Regulations 1996. The Environment Agency are responsible for the administration and regulation of the waste management licensing system, which is designed to ensure that waste is handled in a way which does not harm human health or pollute the environment.

The Environment Agency has not relaxed its current codes governing the treatment of clinical waste. The Agency is, however, carrying out research into the risks associated with clinical waste. The Agency will be taking the emerging results into account in its review of guidance on the handling and management of clinical waste which is being conducted jointly with the Health and Safety Executive. Any changes in recommended practice will be the subject of consultation with interested parties.

Huddersfield Canal

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department will provide assistance to ensure the completion of the Huddersfield Canal Project. [51537]

Angela Eagle: The Huddersfield Canal Company—a partnership of three local authorities—is seeking support from English Partnerships and the Millennium Commission in completing the restoration of a significant stretch of the Huddersfield-Rochdale Canal. The Huddersfield Narrow Canal Millennium Project is a large and very complex scheme requiring a significant level of investment from public funds. Regular discussions are taking place between English Partnerships and the Huddersfield Canal Company.

English Partnerships are currently carrying out a full economic appraisal to ensure the project aims and costs are reasonable and; the proposal robust; and that they represent good value for money.

Rail Companies (Complaints)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement concerning recent increases in the number of complaints made to rail companies. [51875]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 466. Since that answer, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced in his statement on transport policy on 20 July, our plans to set up a Strategic Rail Authority with stronger powers to enforce the delivery of contractual obligations by train operators. We also expect the SRA to specify more demanding performance standards for new or any renegotiated franchises.

Mesothelioma

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have received compensation for mesothelioma in each of the last 10 years; and what was the total amount of compensation received. [51900]

Angela Eagle: The table provides details of the number of claimants paid under the Pneumoconiosis Etc. (Workers' Compensation) Act 1979 in each of the last 10 years. A complete breakdown of which claims were paid for mesothelioma is not available. However, virtually all claims received by DETR today under the 1979 Act are for asbestos-related diseases. An analysis of claimants in 1996–97 revealed that over 70 per cent. of all claims received were from sufferers of mesothelioma. The Department does not hold figures for civil claims.

Pneumoconiosis Etc. (Workers Compensation) Act 1979: Statistics

Year	Number of sufferers paid	Number of dependants paid	Total number of payments	Total amount (£)
1988–89	25	30	55	499,098
1989–90	52	53	105	712,184

Chemicals in the Environment

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to carry out the review of policy on chemicals in the environment announced by the Deputy Prime Minister last year. [52544]

Mr. Meacher: I will be launching the first stage of the review process, a consultation paper on "Sustainable Production and Use of Chemicals", on Monday 27 July 1998. Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses and also in the Vote Office. This consultation paper is part of the Government's family of consultation papers on sustainable development.

The consultation paper seeks views on how the mechanisms for identifying and acting on potentially damaging chemicals in the environment can be improved.

The views received during the consultation period will feed into the development of a White Paper on the sustainable production and use of chemicals to be published early next year.

Local Authority Housing

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the number of households in local authority properties who are under-occupying because their household size and structure does not justify the number of bed-spaces provided. [52127]

Mr. Raynsford: The table shows estimates from the Survey of English Housing of the number of local authority households in England in which the number of bedrooms available exceeds the bedroom standard (i.e. the requirement under a longstanding standard for bedrooms, implied by the composition of the household). In certain cases a household may need a spare bedroom, for caring or another purpose, and any assessment of whether a property is under-occupied should take such factors into account.

Local authority households in England, 1996–97: Difference from bedroom standard

	Thousands of household	Percentage
At or below bedroom standard	1,901	55
One bedroom more than the standard	1,114	32
Two or more bedrooms more than the standard	466	13
All households with more bedrooms than the standard	1,580	45
All households	3,481	100

Notes:
Like all estimates from sample surveys, these figures are subject to sampling variability

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local housing authorities operate incentive schemes to encourage under-occupying tenants to move to smaller properties; and how many people have moved in each of the last three years via such schemes. [52126]

Mr. Raynsford: Information about local authorities' management policies, including under-occupation strategies, was formally collected for the first time on the 1996 Housing Investment Programme questionnaire. At that time, of 357 local housing authorities, more than 230—almost two thirds—indicated that they offered direct incentives to their under-occupying tenants to encourage moves into smaller social rented accommodation.

Between 110,000 and 114,000 council tenants have transferred to other properties owned by their local authorities in each of the last three years; around one quarter (26–27,000) have moved into homes with fewer bedrooms, although it is not known how many of these were as a result of incentives offered by the authority.

Road Tax

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the annual cost of collecting road tax on cars; and what estimate he has made of the cost of collecting the tax through a levy on petrol. [52072]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1997–98, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency spent £127 million on vehicle licensing and registration, of which some £60 million is attributable to licensing. This figure relates to the collection of vehicle excise duty (VED) on all vehicles—a figure relating solely to cars is not available.

While it would be possible to estimate the cost of collecting revenue equivalent to VED through fuel duty, this has not been carried out because much of the cost of VED collection would continue to be incurred, to maintain the vehicle register. The current system also serves other functions, such as the checking of MoT certification and insurance.

Water Quality

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to ensure that adequate investment is made by water companies to meet European Union water quality targets by 2000. [52073]

Angela Eagle: Investment by water companies to meet water quality targets implied by European legislation up to the year 2000 was agreed in the 1994 Periodic Review of water company price limits. OFWAT and the Environment Agency, as the water industry regulators, are monitoring progress and have instituted procedures to ensure that companies meet the statutory deadlines.

Tachographs

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations he has made to (a) the EC Commission and (b) his counterparts in each other EU Member state, about compliance and enforcement of legislation relating to tachographs; and if he will make a statement; [52129]

(2) what representations he has received concerning the compliance of other EU member states with legislation relating to tachographs. [52130]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have neither made nor received any representations about the enforcement of the drivers' hours regulations in other European Union Member States.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of tachographs were inspected by his Department in the latest year for which figures are available: what was the equivalent figure in each other EU member state; and if he will make a statement. [52128]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Council Directive 88/599/EEC requires Member States to check a minimum of 1 per cent. of days worked by drivers falling witnin the scope of the EU drivers' hours rules under Regulation 3820/85. All Member States are required to submit a biennial return on the implementation of the Regulation to the European Commission which, in turn, produces a report based on the information received. The last European Commission report covered the years 1993 and 1994. Explanatory Memorandum No. 5051/98 advised Parliament on the content of that report.

In 1997–98 the Vehicle Inspectorate checked a total of 1,770,271 charts, which exceeds the UK target. Comparable figures from other Member States are not yet available.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the treatment of four-by-four vehicles pulling trailers carrying goods in connection with a trade or business and with a gross vehicle weight of 3.5 tonnes or more is regulated under legislation on tachographs in the same way in each EU member state; and if he will make a statement. [52131]

Ms Glenda Jackson: European Union (EU) Regulation 3820/85, which applies to vehicles used for the carriage of goods where the maximum permissible weight of the vehicle, including any trailer, exceeds 3.5 tonnes, is directly applicable in all EU Member States. In the UK it is necessary to augment the directly applicable legislation by including in domestic legislation details of infringements and penalties that can be incurred on conviction for a drivers' hours or tachograph related offence.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received regarding the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. [51912]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our decision in July last year, that the Birmingham Northern Relief Road should proceed, concluded a lengthy statutory process. That process involved a 15-month public inquiry which provided a statutory forum for a wide range of representations. Our decision was reached after considering the Inspector's report that recommended in favour of the scheme. Although the orders for the scheme have been made we have continued to receive various representations from interested parties, including MPs and members of the public, on subjects related to the scheme—most notably the effects on the Lichfield and Hatherton Canals.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of polychlorinated biphenyls on the marine environment in the Irish Sea. [52193]

Angela Eagle: The relevant Government departments and Agencies in the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, and in the Republic of Ireland are jointly taking the lead in the production of a Regional Quality Status Report on the Celtic Seas, including the Irish Sea. Organic contaminants, including polychlorinated biphenyls, form part of this assessment. The final report, which is one of five regional reports on which the Quality Status Report of the North East Atlantic, which is being prepared by the Ospar Commission, will be based is due for publication by the year 2000.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the annual emissions of radioactive liquid discharges from Sellafield of (a) tritium, (b) carbon 14, (c) zinc-65, (d) strontium 89, (e) strontium 90, (f) technetium 99, (g) iodine 129, (h) europium 152, (i) europium 154, (j) total Beta and (k) uranium in each of the past 20 years. [52195]

Angela Eagle: Discharges from Sellafield via the Marine Pipeline, in tetrabecquerels (TBq), were as follows:

Environment Agency

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the quantities of (a) synthetic chemicals, (b) mercury, (c) cadmuim, (d) lead, (e) zinc, (f) nickel and (g) arsenic released into the Irish Sea from establishments in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement on the proposed reduction targets for each. [52194]

Angela Eagle: The 3rd North Sea Conference in 1990 committed North Sea states to monitor substances listed in Annexe 1A of the Ministerial Declaration of the Third International Conference on the Protection of the North Sea. Monitoring has been carried out since 1991 at selected sites (rivers and direct discharges to the sea) and the UK's results have been reported to Ospar on this basis as annual load estimates for the whole of the UK. The reduction targets for Annexe 1A listed substances were agreed by North Sea Ministers in 1990 and were set at 50 per cent. between 1985–1995. The UK has a good record in achieving this target.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of tributyl tin from the hulls of ships on the marine environment in the Irish Sea. [52192]

Angela Eagle: The relevant Government Departments and Agencies in the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, and in the Republic of Ireland are jointly taking the lead in the production of a Regional Quality Status Report on the Celtic Seas, including the Irish Sea. The Marine and Land Based Inputs to Sea Research Programme of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has recently received the final report of a research contract into the effects of tributyl tin in western coastal waters. This report, which is available from the Department's library, will form part of the overall Celtic Seas assessment, one of the five regional assessments on which the Quality Status Report of the North East Atlantic, being prepared by the Ospar Commission, will be based. The Ospar report is due for publication by the year 2000.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the releases of (a) synthetic chemicals, (b) mercury, (c) cadmium, (d) lead, (e) zinc, (f) nickel and (g) arsenic into the marine environment by each EU country in each of the last 10 years. [52191]

Angela Eagle: Data are not available in the form requested. However, the UK has reported on inputs of 35 of the 36 substances listed in Annexe 1A of the Ministerial Declaration of the Third International Conference on the Protection of the North Sea, The Hague, 8 March 1990 for the period 1991–1995. The Annexe 1A list comprises of 36 substances of priority concern in the marine environment, including heavy metals and synthetic chemicals.

Right to Roam

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to introduce legislation to provide greater public access to the open countryside. [52270]

Angela Eagle: We are considering carefully all options, both statutory and voluntary, in the light of extensive consultation. We intend to announce our conclusions later this year. If we decide that a new statutory right of access is necessary, we will introduce legislative proposals as soon as practicable, taking into account competing priorities for Parliamentary time.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Servants

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister which of his Ministers have been selected for assessment by civil servants under his new procedure; and if he will (a) place such assessments in the Library and (b) publish them. [51906]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 July 1998]: There is no such procedure. I have not required civil servants to make assessments of the performance of their Ministers.

Young People

Mr. Singh: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has (a) to appoint a Minister for youth and (b) to set up a youth commission. [52184]

The Prime Minister: None at this stage. The interests of young people are effectively represented across Government by Ministers and officials working closely together and in regular meetings with those bodies representing the interests of young people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Auction Markets

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he is taking to protect auction markets for livestock. [52120]

Mr. Rooker: Livestock Auction Markets are commercial operations. As such, the future of any livestock market is a matter for market forces and not one in which the Government would wish to intervene.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on recent trends in farmers' incomes. [52119]

Mr. Rooker: In 1997, total income from farming in the United Kingdom was estimated at £3.36 billion, a fall of 37 per cent. in real terms compared with the previous year. The figure for 1998 will not be available until December but the indications are that it will be lower than in 1997.

Hill Farming

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the age profile of (a) livestock and (b) hill farmers. [52116]

Mr. Rooker: The age profiles of holders of livestock holdings and holdings in Less Favoured Areas (LFA) for England and Wales in 1995 are given in the table.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of hill farming in England. [52113]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are committed to helping to secure a sustainable future for hill farming, recognising in particular the role that farmers play in maintaining the environment and social fabric of the uplands. From 2000 the system of support will be changed more closely to reflect those social and environmental aims. These changes are being considered in the context of the Agenda 2000 Rural Development proposals for the Less Favoured Areas.

Livestock Farms

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the trends in the number of livestock farms. [52115]

Mr. Rooker: The trend in the number of livestock holdings in England and Wales is given in the table.

Farming (Young People)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives his Department has taken to attract young people to farming. [52117]

Mr. Morley: The farming industry offers a wide range of opportunities. Underpinned by MAFF and Sector Challenge funding, Lantra, the National Training Organisation for agriculture and commercial horticulture and other land-based and related industries, has a programme promoting career prospects and providing information on careers and training in farming. MAFF also provides a grant to the National Federation of Young Farmers Clubs to support education and training. The industry itself has developed a Rural Starters Register. There are also various schemes for building links between schools and farming.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Aid Programme

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the proportion of the aid programme that is best distributed by her Department direct and the proportion best distributed by other agencies and organisations. [51652]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development (DFID) disburses the development assistance budget through a number of channels, including multilateral organisations, civil society organisations and the Commonwealth Development Corporation, in addition to its own programmes in developing countries. As the new White Paper indicates, the primary objective of our development assistance programme—eliminating world poverty—requires building a range of partnerships for development, covering a wide range of interventions, which will vary from country to country. For example, in many countries, it will be helpful to work with the private sector to strengthen development; we are therefore building new partnerships with business.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people her Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52582]

Clare Short: We are currently examining these arrangements and have not at this stage made a formal commitment.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to support the church movement in Sudan. [52074]

Mr. Foulkes: We are supporting Christian Aid's efforts to provide humanitarian assistance through the church movement in Sudan. We also support an emergency relief project in South Sudan implemented by the NGO Association of Christian Resource Organisations Serving Sudan (ACROSS).

Chagos Archipelago (Sharks)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of shark numbers in the Chagos Archipelago. [50021]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 20 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Observations made during the 1996 Chagos Expedition, compared with earlier expeditions in the 1970s, suggest a significant decline in reef shark numbers. Sharks are not a target species for the licensed inshore fisheries. But unwanted by-catches do occur, which are monitored through log-book returns and an observer programme.

Indian Ocean Territories (Fishing)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she is taking to monitor fisheries in British Indian Ocean Territory, and to designate marine-protected areas. [50019]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 20 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

The tools used to monitor the British Indian Ocean Territory fisheries include a licensing regime, enforcement via a fisheries patrol vessel, observer programmes, ad hoc research, and assessment of log book returns. The implications of designating marine protected areas, particularly for enforcement and legislation, are being considered.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has submitted evidence to the inquiry into the matters arising from the death of Stephen Lawrence. [52869]

Mr. Straw: I am today placing in the Library a copy of the Home Office evidence that has been submitted to the inquiry into the matters arising from the death of Stephen Lawrence. The evidence is of a factual and background nature.

The inquiry was established under section 49 of the Police Act 1996. The terms of reference of the inquiry are:

> To inquire into the matters arising from the death of Stephen Lawrence in order particularly to identify the lessons to be learned for the investigation and prosecution of racially motivated crimes.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will collate and publish the number of cosmetics experiments on animals carried out in the United Kingdom each year on behalf of foreign companies. [51119]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not readily available for this year. It may be possible to collect if from 1999.

Mr. Peter Bleach

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many clerical errors have been identified in the information sent to Calcutta in relation to the trial of Mr. Peter Bleach; and if he will make a statement. [51880]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Following a complaint by Mr. Bleach that he had not been given proper access to the evidence forwarded to the Indian authorities by the British police, in the interests of fairness, North Yorkshire Police forwarded to him copies of all the evidence that had been passed to the Indians. This exposed a clerical error by the police, namely that there was a small discrepancy between one of the copy documents passed to the Indians and one forwarded to Mr. Bleach.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Temporary Classrooms

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact his spending plans will have as regards enabling temporary classrooms in the Colchester constituency to be replaced with permanent accommodation by July 2002. [51285]

Mr. Byers: The development of Asset Management Plans by local education authorities (LEAs) will help to identify capital funding priorities across all maintained schools. This should include an assessment of the need to replace temporary classrooms.

The Plan to be developed by Essex LEA will cover the Colchester constituency.

School Funding

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will formally extend the consultation period until 31 December for the "Fair Funding: Improving Delegation to Schools" document. [51936]

Mr. Byers: No. An extension to 31 December would have the effect of precluding the implementation of major changes in the school funding system before April 2000.

Unemployment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) claimants were registered and (b) full-time equivalent staff were employed at each job centre in the East Midlands and Eastern Region of the Employment Service at the latest available date. [51841]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated July 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning Jobcentre staffing and client volumes in the Employment Service East Midlands and Eastern Region. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

You requested a full list of Jobcentres in the East Midlands and Eastern Region detailing the number of full-time equivalent staff employed and jobseekers registered. The details are attached at Appendix A for your information.

Jobcentres are resourced according to labour market conditions. In particular, the East Midlands and Eastern Region contains very diverse labour markets from rural and geographically isolated ones to industrialised conurbations. Offices with a very small register size geographically serve also isolated outlying villages where it would be very difficult for clients to visit alternative Jobcentre sites in larger centres of population.

I hope this is helpful. Alan Read, Deputy Regional Director for the Employment Service, East Midlands and Eastern Region, would be happy to discuss any of the details further.

Schools (Information Technology Access)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures his Department is taking to improve IT access for disabled children and those with learning difficulties in Gloucestershire. [52100]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department is pursuing a number of initiatives to improve IT access for all children, including those with a disability or learning difficulty. These include £11 million in the Schools Access Initiative last year to help mainstream schools become more accessible to children with disabilities. The purchase of information technology equipment was part of this initiative. In addition £100 million is being invested to enable schools to buy the latest technology and educational software to access the National Grid for Learning. The Grid will ensure that children develop the skills they need to be part of an inclusive society.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures his Department is taking to support dyslexic children in Gloucestershire in respect of (a) specialist training and (b) IT projects. [52103]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have made resources available to ensure that teachers are equipped to use new technology and are able to show all young people, including those with specific learning difficulties such as dyslexia, how IT can help them. This is in addition to a new ICT curriculum for the initial training of all new teachers. We have also tasked the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency (formerly known as the National Council for Education Technology) with supporting the Government's commitment to promote the development of relevant teaching and learning resources for ICT, with particular reference to provision for special educational needs.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what representations he has received concerning the (a) beneficial and (b) negative effects of the policy of the Employment Service not to accept vacancies which specified an upper age limit; [51638]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the policy of the Employment Service not to accept vacancies specifying an upper age limit. [51639]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. David Chidgey, dated July 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply direct to your questions about the effects of the Employment Service's decision not to accept vacancies from employers specifying an age limit. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Employment Service ceased to accept vacancies which include an upper age limit in late April 1998. The operation of this policy is due to be formally evaluated in the Autumn when it will have been in force for six months, the minimum period deemed appropriate to fully gauge its impact. At this stage, therefore, I am unable to provide any specific details about the beneficial or negative effects of the policy.

However, early feedback from Employment Service staff working in Jobcentres indicates that the policy has been well received by older jobseekers, who view it as a positive step in helping them to secure employment. The number and nature of the employer queries we have received so far tends to indicate that employers who use Jobcentre services are generally content with the policy and are willing to accept it. We are only aware centrally of two employers to date who have wanted to place vacancies with upper age limits, who have withdrawn their vacancies as a result of our policy. A fuller picture will emerge once the policy has bedded in and the results of the evaluation are known.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he intends to publish (i) the report on his consultations for legislation and (ii) a code of practice to cover age discrimination. [51641]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We aim to publish the report of my consultation on age discrimination in employment within the next few weeks and a draft of the Code of Good Practice for consultation in the Autumn.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made towards the publication of a non-statutory code of practice on age discrimination. [51640]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have made good progress with a code of good practice and aim to publish a draft for consultation in the Autumn.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the Comprehensive Spending Review if he will publish the budget for Ofsted for the next three financial years. [52238]

Mr. Byers: Plans for Ofsted's future expenditure will be published in the Autumn.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide a breakdown of the items included within the £1 billion service development fund included in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [52252]

Dr. Howells: Within the provision announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Government are creating a Service Development Fund of £750 million in 2000–01 and £1 billion in 2001–02. The purpose of holding such a Fund within the overall spending totals is to ensure that the right balance of funding between the existing agenda and those areas where policy is still being developed. Consequently it is not possible at this stage to give a breakdown of allocations from the Fund in those two years.

Skill Shortages (West Midlands)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to tackle skill shortages in the West Midlands. [51910]

Dr. Howells: In the last Budget, £6.544 million was allocated to the West Midlands for projects specifically aimed at addressing skills shortages through the Skills Challenge and Centres of Excellence for IT and High Technology prospectus.

Teachers' Pay

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for performance related pay for teachers. [52253]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend's goals for higher standards in schools require a modern structure for the teaching profession and one which will provide incentives for excellence and ensure that good performance both in teaching and management is recognised and rewarded.

Further details will be included in the Government's Green Paper on modernising the teaching profession which will be published before the end of the year.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to issue a green paper on teachers' pay. [52239]

Ms Estelle Morris: A Green Paper on the teaching profession will be published for consultation before the end of the year. It will not be just about teachers' pay, but is intended to launch a wide-ranging debate about modernising the teaching profession.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Criminal Court

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Rome Conference on the establishment of an international criminal court. [51745]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 803–04.

Indian Ocean Territories (Fishing)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to prevent illegal fishing in the off-shore waters of the World Heritage Site at Henderson Island. [50039]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 20 July 1998]: None. There is no capacity for monitoring fisheries in this area.

Iran

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the EU troika visit to Iran; and if he will make a statement. [52267]

Mr. Fatchett: The Tehran visit was for the first round of substantive talks of the new EU/Iran dialogue. The EU and Iran had earlier agreed that these should be comprehensive, addressing both issues of mutual interest and those of concern to both the EU and Iran. Both sides agreed that the talks were held in a positive atmosphere and that there was a frank exchange of views on all issues. We hope that this dialogue will continue and will lead to a more fruitful relationship between the EU and Iran.

NATO Expansion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimates his Department has made of the likely costs to public expenditure in (i) Hungary, (ii) the Czech Republic and (iii) Poland of membership of NATO. [51886]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As a percentage of their GDP, defence expenditure in 1998 in the Czech Republic, Hungary, and Poland is estimated at 1.8 per cent, 1.51 per cent. and 2.4 per cent. respectively. On joining NATO the Czech Republic has agreed to pay 0.9 per cent., Hungary 0.65 per cent. and Poland 2.48 per cent. of NATO's common funded budgets which currently amount to some one billion pounds per annum. As with existing members of NATO, the contributions of new Member States to the Alliance will be a relatively small element of their total defence budgets.

OSCE

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost for each of the past 10 years of the United Kingdom contribution to the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe; and if he will make a statement on plans for future contributions. [51892]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The costs of the United Kingdom's contribution before financial year 1991–92 could be provided only at disproportionate expense. Approximate costs from 1991–92 to 1997–98 were as follows:

Year	Cost
1991–92	239,157
1992–93	747,414
1993–94	2,039,782
1994–95	2,773,800
1995–96	4,473,113
1996–97	3,912,353
1997–98	5,746,302

The total UK contribution to the OSCE in 1998–99 is likely to be around £10 million, reflecting increased OSCE operational activity in former Yugoslavia. This figure is likely to increase in the next few years as OSCE activity widens in line with the Government's conflict prevention and human rights objectives.

Sierra Leone

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers have visited Sierra Leone since 1 May 1997; and on what dates. [52273]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I visited Sierra Leone on 31 March 1998 as a member of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group (CMAG).

No other British Ministers have visited Sierra Leone since 1 May 1997.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list for (a) her Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49238]

Mr. Field [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information about vehicles owned by this Department is set out in the tables.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what funding her Department has provided in the current financial year for research into improving the provision and effectiveness of women's refuges. [51147]

Ms Ruddock: In order to collect accurate information on the full range of accommodation and support services for women and children escaping domestic violence, this Department, in conjunction with the Women's Unit, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Department of Health, has commissioned a comprehensive package of research.

As part of this package, Women's Aid is undertaking a survey of refuge groups in England which will provide up to date information on refuge provision. The total cost of this element of the research, to be met in this financial year, is £49,000.

Landlord Fraud

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many prosecutions her Department has instigated relating to landlord fraud in the Greater London area in the last 12 months. [51266]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Pensions (Expatriates)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the up-rating of frozen pensions for British citizens living overseas. [51620]

Mr. Denham: There continue to be competing demands and constraints on Social Security spending in the UK. Therefore, we consider that it would be wrong to raise expectations that moves to unfreeze UK pensions paid abroad would be likely to attract priority in the current circumstances.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the potential saving in administration costs if the winter fuel payment were to be combined with the Christmas bonus. [51823]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 July 1998]: While it may appear intuitively appealing to combine the administration of Winter Fuel Payments and Christmas Bonus, there are significant difficulties in doing so. These arise because the two payments are made under different legislation, entitlement to the payments may be established in different ways, and while the Christmas Bonus is paid on an individual basis, Winter Fuel Payments are paid on a household basis to many pensioners.

Pensioners

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of pension advisers to be recruited by her Department and of their total cost. [51888]

Mr. Denham: Plans for taking forward our strategy to help the poorest pensioners on a national basis are currently being developed, and will be informed by the results from the pilot projects and research. Therefore, it is not possible to give an indication of the numbers of personal advisers or their total cost, at this stage.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her oral statement of 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–06, what estimate she has made of the loss of council tax rebate and housing benefit for persons who receive the minimum income supplement; and if she will make a statement. [51883]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There will be no loss of Council Tax Benefit or Housing Benefit resulting from the measures announced on 17 July 1998.

From next April, Income Support rates will be increased to give the poorest pensioners a guaranteed minimum income of £75 per week for a single person. Couples, and older pensioners, will receive more. The full details are in the table.

Pensioners currently entitled to Income Support, and those who newly qualify as a result of the increases and the implementation of our national programme to find those pensioners who are entitled but who do not claim, will normally qualify, as now, for full eligible Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the current number of pensioners who (a) receive council tax benefit and housing beneiefit and (b) are eligible for them but do not claim. [51891]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

The latest available figures for pensioners entitled to, but not receiving, Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit are for 1995–96. For recipients, estimates have been provided for the same period for comparative purposes.

2. When a person reaches State pension age the amount of entitlement to the State Additional Pension is calculated. The formula used for this calculation means there are people with contracted-out employments, an Appropriate Personal Pension (APP) or who only pay Class 2 or Class 3 National Insurance contributions (NICs) who may receive a small amount of State Additional Pension in respect of earnings during these years. The figures quoted exclude any such cases. People who are not contracted-out, who earn over the annual lower earnings limit have been categorised as members of SERPS

3. Married women who have retained the right to pay reduced rate NICs are not entitled to accrue SERPS while the reduced rate authority is retained

4. The figures show a reduction in 1987–88 mainly due to the introduction of APPs

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of (a) the expenditure costs of the state earnings related pension scheme per member and (b) the comparative costs for members of private pension schemes and occupational schemes. [51889]

Mr. Denham: Information on the administration costs of State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) per member is not available. The administration cost to the National Insurance Fund for awarding and paying State Retirement Pension, including SERPS, and collecting and maintaining records of National Insurance contributions was some £622 million in 1996–97[1].

It is difficult to draw meaningful comparisons between the costs of running SERPS, occupational pension schemes and personal pensions. Administration costs for funded pensions include the costs of fund management as well as general administration. Occupational pensions benefit from economies of scale and may be able to reduce costs by using the employer's payroll and data systems. Personal pensions on the other hand are individual arrangements, and charges will include margins for advertising, selling and profit.

A survey of occupational pensions scheme expenses recently published by the Government Actuary's Department[2] shows very wide variations in costs, ranging from 2 per cent. to 44 per cent. of scheme contributions, with an average of 8 per cent. of annual contributions from members and employers.

Charges for personal pensions are measured differently and generally presented as a percentage of the final fund including investment return. They also vary widely. The effect of charges on an individual's accrued fund will depend on factors such as the amount of contributions made and whether the policy runs to retirement or is made paid-up after only a few years. A report[3] in 1997 did, however come up with some broad conclusions. With average charges and no commission, between 15–20 per cent. of the moneys accumulated in a personal pension can be absorbed by charges. With commission, charges can rise to 20–25 per cent. of the accumulated fund. However if contributions are made for only a few years and then stop, charges can rise to absorb 40–50 per cent. of the accumulated fund.

Disabled People

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will announce the results of the second round of bids for the New Deal for Disabled People and the levels of funding allocated. [52237]

Mr. Denham: The New Deal for Disabled People is being funded with £195 million from the Windfall Tax. £5 million of this will be used to fund a number of Innovative Schemes which will test new ways of helping disabled people into work. The results of the first tranche of bids for Innovative Schemes was announced on 16 July and 10 schemes were successful, costing a total of £2.4 million. The closing date for second tranche bids is 9 October and we expect to announce the results in early spring 1999, depending on the volume of bids received. £2.6 million will be available for the second tranche.

We also plan to pilot a new Personal Adviser service for disabled people, initially in twelve areas. These will cover over a quarter of a million people on incapacity benefits, and will offer advice and support on an individual basis to disabled people who want to move towards work. Pilots in the first six areas, to be run by the Employment Service, will start in October. The remainder will be put out to open tender and will start running next year. £5 million has been made available to fund the pilots during 1998–99, and a further £12 million has been set aside for 1999–2000.

SCOTLAND

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49824]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 13 July 1998]: The Scottish Office expects to participate over the summer recess, along with a number of other Departments, in the testing of a system for replying electronically to Written Parliamentary Questions which will make use of the Government Secure Intranet (GSI). The Scottish Office has been connected to the GSI since June of this year. In addition, contact points for electronic mail are given on The Scottish Office's Internet Web site, www.scotland.gov.uk. The use of electronic mail by The Scottish Office to correspond with external organisations and members of the public who have access to electronic mail services is growing and is expected to increase further as more correspondents gain access to electronic mail services.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50691]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 22 July 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363. Correspondence is handled by staff in my Department as part of their normal duties.

Local Authorities (Auditing)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce measures to improve the internal audit procedures in Scottish local authorities. [50872]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 22 July 1998]: Internal audit is a fundamental element of the financial and management controls which local authorities are responsible for having in place. As part of their routing regulatory work, the external auditors of local authorities assess the quality of the internal audit against set CIPFA standards. Where the auditors identify weaknesses in the council's internal audit process, they will recommend action, either to council officials or members depending on the nature of the shortcoming. Any recommendations made by the auditors are checked to ensure that they have been fulfilled. Where they are not, and if there is something fundamentally wrong, the auditor can choose to report this to the Controller of Audit, which might lead to a Special Report being made to the Secretary of State.

Prisoners (Suicide and Self-harm)

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the ratio of the number of suicides to inmates, in each of the last three years, (a) per gender and (b) in total; what discussions he has had with the Home Office concerning the prevention of suicides in prisons; and if he will make a statement. [51743]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is as follows.

	Average daily number of prisoners (including young offenders)			Number of Suicides			Ratio of the number of suicides to prisoners
Year April-March	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total

Consultation between my officials in the Scottish Prison Service and Home Office officials have taken place and the Task Force which has been set up to consider the circumstances surrounding recent deaths include a member from the Suicide Awareness Support Unit in HM Prison Service for England and Wales.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are in place which allow families of inmates to alert prison authorities to a risk of suicide; and if he will make a statement. [51661]

Mr. McLeish: If the family of a prisoner has reason to believe that a relative in prison is at risk, they can let the prison know by telephoning, writing or speaking to a member of management or staff. A poster and leaflet campaign will shortly be undertaken to encourage this. The Scottish Prison Service has also made available in court buildings a "Risk Identification" form which a prisoner's family can complete and which will accompany the prisoner to the prison concerned.

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (i) suicides and (ii) incidents of self harm have occurred (a) in each prison and (b) in total, in each of the last five years broken down by age and gender; and how many of the people concerned were (1) on suicide observation and (2) on remand. [51732]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested on suicides for April to March years, is as follows:

Prison Costs

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual cost of a prison place (a) in each category of prison and (b) in total. [51740]

Mr. McLeish: The budgeted average annual cost of a prison place in Scotland, for the current financial year (March 1998 to April 1999) is (a) £23,575 for secure prisons, £16,959 for open prisons and (b) £23,156 in total. These have been calculated as total budgeted expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters, the SPS Training College and other central costs) divided by the forecast prisoner places available in the year, at the time when the budgets were set.

Forestry

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the consultation paper, Opportunity for Change, when he will be seeking views on how forestry can contribute to sustainable development. [52123]

Mr. Macdonald: We have published a supplementary consultation paper called "The Sustainable Management of Forests", and copies are available in the Library. Comments are invited on how forestry can contribute to sustainable development, and these should be sent to the Forestry Commission before 11 September.

Classroom Assistants

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for the creation of classroom assistants, indicating (a) the total amount of money made available for this purpose, (b) when the jobs will begin, (c) how such classroom assistants will be recruited, (d) what qualifications will be required and (e) the proposed rate of pay. [52121]

Mr. Wilson: I announced our plans for a major expansion in the employment of classroom assistants in primary schools on 14 July as part of our strategy for raising standards in schools. We are committed to achieving a ratio of one adult to every 15 pupils in the primary school system by 2002 and will employ up to 5,000 new classroom assistants to achieve this.

In the light of the decisions taken following the Comprehensive Spending Review this programme will receive funding of £66 million over 3 years from the Excellence Fund which will provide education authorities with assistance targeted on a series of measures, including this: £10 million will be available for assistants in 1999–2000, £20 million in 2000–01 and £36 million in 2001–02.

We would expect recruitment under the initiative to begin as soon as the new resources become available in April 1999 and as is practical, and for the numbers of assistants to grow as more funds become available each year. Local authorities have also been invited to participate in a pilot programme commencing in August this year. There will therefore be a small number of assistants recruited during 1998–99; and a number of authorities already employ some assistants.

Local authorities will be responsible for designing jobs, recruiting classroom assistants and providing training within general guidance which will be considered by a Scottish Office working group involving authorities, teachers, training providers and others. Recruitment methods will not be prescribed. The initiative will, however, provide opportunities for people from local communities.

Any entry requirements for classroom assistants' posts will be for local authorities to determine. However, the working group will consider what guidance should be given and will promote the development of relevant training, leading towards a qualification for classroom assistants.

Local authorities will also be responsible for determining rates of pay and other contractual conditions such as hours worked, in line with the nature of the posts created and local labour market conditions.

DEFENCE

Naval Manning Agency

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Manning Agency for 1998–99. [45616]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency has been set the following key targets for 1998–1999:

1. Greater than 94% of officer billets to be filled.
2. Greater than 89% of Naval Rating billets to be filled.

3. Greater than 88% of Royal Marine Other Ranks billets to be filled.

4. Total strength of Naval personnel to be within plus 1% to minus 2% of the set requirement.

5. Greater than 60% of officers to receive more than 4 months notice for change of employment.

6. Greater than 98% of Ratings/Other Ranks to receive more than the specified notice for change of employment.

7. Greater than 99% of Ratings/Other Ranks to receive the specified levels of Minimum Time Ashore.

8. To achieve a progressive annual 7.5% reduction in the number of manpower gaps within the scope of the Agency's control.

9. To conduct two benchmarking exercises per year.

10. To produce full accruals-based accounts.

11. To operate the Naval Manning Agency within its 1998–99 cash allocation (expressed at 1997–98 prices) of £9.8 million, a reduction of £0.6 million (6%) from the 1997–98 figures.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantity of radioactive liquid in gallons has been discharged from AWE, Aldermaston into the River Thames in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement. [51158]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Liquid discharges from AWE, Aldermaston to the Thames are of treated effluent or trade waste of extremely low radioactivity content. All such discharges are made within the limits set by discharge authorisations from the appropriate regulatory body, most recently the Environment Agency, under the terms of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 and Part V of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Limits are set at values which are well below those which would cause environmental impact or significant public risk and are subject to periodic review. In fact, it has been calculated that in a year the radiation dose from AWE's liquid discharges into the Thames via the Pangbourne pipeline to the most exposed individual is the same as that one would receive from eating half a brazil nut.

Discharges from AWE Aldermaston to the River Thames since 1980 are as follows:

Year	Discharge/gallons
1980	4,983,000
1981	3,696,000
1982	4,125,000
1983	3,498,000
1984	3,498,000
1985	3,366,000
1986	3,399,000
1987	3,315,000
1988	3,135,000
1989	3,036,000
1990	2,771,120
1991	2,970,000
1992	2,739,000
1993	2,309,340
1994	2,233,660
1995	1,698,180
1996	1,353,000
1997	1,566,840
1998 (to end June)	1,273,360

Details of discharges are published annually in AWE's Environment Safety and Health Report.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the metallurgy division at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, was set up; what is the purpose of this division; how many series of technical papers or reports are currently being produced by this division; and what are the names of each series. [51130]

Mr. Spellar: The Metallurgy Division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston was set up in 1995. It is now part of the Metallic Materials business area in the Technology Division. Among its purposes are research and development on a range of fissile, toxic and conventional metals, production of certain components in support of research and development, and work supporting the stockpile stewardship of the UK's nuclear deterrent.

One series of technical papers and reports is currently produced by the Metallic Materials business area, namely Director Technology Technical Reports.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 569, on AWE, Aldermaston if he will place a list of the titles of the 25 reports produced by the Weapon Diagnostic Division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment in the Library, indicating the date on which each paper was produced. [51136]

Mr. Spellar: I am today placing a list in the Library of the House.

Land Contamination

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the compensation claim by Blue Circle International for contamination of their land adjacent to AWE, Aldermaston. [52159]

Mr. Spellar: Following an exceptionally severe storm in July 1989 water bearing low level radioactive material from ponds situated at AWE, Aldermaston overflowed onto adjacent marshland belonging to Blue Circle Industries plc. The company later sought damages for economic loss from the collapse of negotiations related to a possible sale of the Blue Circle Industries estate. The High Court awarded damages of some £6 million against the MOD.

On legal advice, the MOD appealed against this ruling. The Appeal was heard in May and judgment handed down on 10 June with the Court finding for Blue Circle Industries plc and increasing the award by a further £600,000.

As agreed by both sides, there was no physical damage to human or animal health, and the area affected was well away from land regularly used by the company or to which the public had access. The affected sediment was removed at MOD's expense in 1994 by suitable qualified contractors to the satisfaction of the regulatory Authorities and Blue Circle Industries.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission a study on a naval variant of the European Fighter Aircraft. [51868]

Mr. Spellar: I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 433.

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the different types of aircraft able to use the Royal Navy's new aircraft carriers; and if he will assess the potential for using the Eurofighter aircraft on the carriers. [52111]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to him on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 433, and to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 478.

Stockholdings

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) market and (b) book value of stockholdings which his Department intends to dispose of over the next three years. [50956]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The SDR has set out a Departmental target to dispose of holdings of non munitions stores with a book value of £2.2 billion over the next three years.

The market value of these essentially surplus and obsolescent items will amount to only a small fraction of this figure. Receipts from the sales of equipment, spares and munitions over the last three years have amounted to some £80 million per annum. This level is expected to be maintained over the next four years.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 72 of the Strategic Defence Review, Cm. 3999, what were the reactors of origin of the 7.6 tonnes of defence plutonium; and if he will list its isotopic composition. [51418]

Mr. Spellar: The reactors of origin for the bulk of the stock of 7.6 tonnes of plutonium are Windscale Piles, Calder Hall and Chapelcross. We have announced, as part of the Strategic Defence Review, our intention to produce by Spring 2000 our initial report of Defence fissile material production since the start of our defence nuclear programme in the 1940s. It would be contrary to national defence and security interests to reveal the isotopic composition of this plutonium and this information is therefore being withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Sir Lanka (Arms Sales)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the value to the United Kingdom of arms sales to Sri Lanka in each year since 1990. [51799]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence is currently working with the FCO and the DTI to prepare the Government's first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. The Report will include details of export licence applications for UK Military List items and details of such equipment exported with annual values. When the Report has been issued I will write to my hon. Friend in regard to the information requested for previous years.

C-130

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 10, if compensation in excess of the £30 million will be sought for further delays in the delivery of the C-130. [51869]

Mr. Spellar: Liquidated damages will continue to be collected as they fall due. Final amounts will depend on the actual dates of deliveries, and could exceed £30 million.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the sub strategic role for Trident submarines; and if he will make a statement. [51893]

Mr. George Robertson: The credibility of our minimum nuclear deterrent requires that we have the option, in extreme self-defence, of deterring further aggression through a nuclear ("sub-strategic") strike which is limited in scale and nature of target so that it could not be expected automatically to lead to a full scale nuclear exchange.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been put to the NATO Council of Ministers for a no first use policy on the deployment of nuclear weapons. [51954]

Mr. George Robertson: No such proposals have been made to the NATO Council of Ministers.

Armoured Personnel Carrier Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress his Department has made on the Mobility 1, Protection 1 Armoured Personnel Carrier Project. [51074]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The programme for a Multi-Role Armoured Vehicle with a high level of mobility and protection is now known as the Armoured Battlegroup Support Vehicle programme. Studies into this requirement are in progress, looking particularly at possible commonality with the future replacement for the Warrior Infantry Fighting Vehicle, and assessing the operational effectiveness and value for money of using the same components in a number of different vehicles.

Joint Strike Fighter

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent by the United Kingdom on the Joint Strike Fighter to date. [51062]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 July 1998]: Payments made by the UK Government to the US Department of Defense under the Concept Demonstration Phase of the Joint Strike Fighter programme amount so far to approximately £55m.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the future of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. [51070]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 July 1998]: We have said in the White Paper on the Strategic Defence Review (Cm 3999) that we will harness the opportunities offered by Public Private Partnership to strengthen the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency's ability to continue to provide world class scientific research well into the next century.

We are keen to involve all the stakeholders in taking forward our plans and in deciding on the best practical means of achieving our objectives. We shall, therefore, be consulting widely with industry, DERA management and staff representatives, the scientific community and our key Allies before reaching decisions.

Armed Forces

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 424, what proportion of the number of people who will have had some experience in the forces will be under the age of 35 years in 2015 and will have had experience in the Army. [52124]

Dr. Reid: It is not possible to make an exact calculation, but as, at present, the majority of personnel serving in the Armed Forces are under 35 years of age and, as the majority of those who leave the Forces are under 35, it would be reasonable to assume that a large proportion of those people who will have had some experience of the Armed Forces will also be under 35 years of age in 2015.

Boeing C-17 Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) UK aerospace companies and (b) other UK companies, would directly benefit from the leasing or purchase of the Boeing C-17 aircraft; [52069]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of jobs which would be generated from the purchase or lease of the Boeing C-17 aircraft in the UK. [52070]

Mr. Spellar: Bids will be invited to meet the short-term and long-term air transport requirements in parallel competitions. Requests for proposals will be issued later this summer for the long-term requirement, and in the Autumn for the short-term requirement. In both cases, I can assure my hon. Friend that the procurement decision will take account of employment, industrial and all other relevant factors.

Challenger 2 Battle Tank

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Vickers production of the Challenger 2 battle tank. [52112]

Mr. Spellar: Vickers Defence Systems are contracted to provide the Ministry of Defence with 386 main battle tanks, together with associated training equipment, spares and ammunition. Under the delivery schedule, all 386 main battle tanks are to be delivered by February 2002. The company has concluded two export contracts with the Royal Army of Oman, and the Ministry of Defence will continue to provide the normal support in pursuing export prospects.

Europe-wide Defence and Aerospace Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's role in discussions relating to the creation of a unified Europe-wide defence and aerospace company. [52122]

Mr. Spellar: It is for the companies themselves to determine the future structure of the European aerospace and defence industry. Government's role is to facilitate the process. With this objective, the Ministers of Defence of the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, Spain and Sweden signed on 6 July a Letter of Intent which sets out an approach to removing a number of practical obstacles to restructuring in a number of areas.

Heavy Lift Capability

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that the tender specifications for the competition for the near term requirement for an outsized cargo heavy lift capability will allow as many potential bidders as possible to tender for the contract. [52123]

Mr. Spellar: The competition for the short-term strategic airlift requirement will be conducted under normal procurement rules which require that all competitions are as open as possible. The competition will give industry the opportunity to put forward their proposals. A notice was included in the MOD Contract Bulletin on 15 July, and I expect a range of potential bidders to express their interest as requested, before the end of August.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on United Kingdom heavy lift capacity. [49636]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 9 July 1998]: We have decided to enhance our strategic lift capacity by both air and sea. As was explained in the Supporting Essay Six on Future Military Capabilities, which was published on 8 July in conjunction with the Strategic Defence Review White Paper (Cmnd 3999), we have concluded that we cannot at present deploy Joint Rapid Reaction Forces quickly enough to meet operational requirements in the changed strategic environment. Nor is commercial shipping or airlift likely to be available in sufficient quantities to meet rapid deployment deadlines, although it will have an important place in transporting follow-on forces.

We have therefore decided that the most effective alternative in military and resource terms is: to acquire four additional roll-on roll-off container ships to join the two now entering service (it may be possible to do so using Public Private Partnership); in the short term, to meet our strategic airlift needs with four C-17 aircraft or their equivalent; and in the longer term, we need to consider a suitable replacement for our remaining elderly transport aircraft, for which the proposed European Future Large Aircraft is a contender.

Bids will be invited to meet the short-term and long-term air transport requirements in parallel competitions. Requests for proposals will be issued later this year, and we would hope to make decisions on procurement by early 2000.

Correspondence

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters per day his office receives; how many staff are employed to answer these; what targets are set in respect of such letters; and what is the current performance against targets. [50684]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 363.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 180, if he will list in respect of (a) AWE Aldermaston, (b) Rosyth dockyard and (c) Devonport dockyard the quantities of all radioactive materials held on site which are not defined as low-level waste or intermediate-level wastes, giving the forms in which such material is held. [51226]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 July 1998]: No high level waste is held at any of the sites.

AWE, Aldermaston holds approximately 960 cubic metres of very low level waste comprising soil contaminated with plutonium removed from around Aldermaston Court and the Pangbourne pipeline valve pits. Devonport Dockyard currently holds approximately 20 cubic metres of very low level waste, made up of protective clothing, material and equipment contaminated with activation products, principally cobalt 60. Rosyth Dockyard currently holds no very low level waste.

Rosyth Dockyard currently hold spent fuel equivalent to one submarine reactor core and Devonport Dockyard one and three-quarters submarine reactor cores of spent fuel. In accordance with IAEA and Euratom definitions, spent fuel is not categorised as waste while reprocessing remains an option. The decision as to whether this and other spent fuel owned by the Department is to be reprocessed remains open.

Two decommissioned submarines, HMS Valiant at Devonport and HMS Renown at Rosyth, still contain spent fuel. Plans are in place to remove this fuel at the earliest operational programmed opportunity. HMS Repulse which was referred to in the reply I gave the hon. Member on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 180, has now been defuelled and the spent fuel transferred to BNFL Sellafield.

TRACER Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the TRACER project. [51250]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor) on 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 529.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 405, on parliamentary questions, for what reasons the text of the answer to Q25826 was not (a) printed in the relevant Hansard daily part and (b) delivered to the office of the right hon. Member for Wokingham. [52235]

Mrs. Beckett: An envelope containing the written answers given by my Department on Tuesday 3 February was delivered to the Hansard office during the afternoon and they were printed by Hansard in the daily part for Wednesday 4 February, columns 607–611. The answer to Q25826 was omitted due to an oversight by Hansard.

In accordance with normal and long-standing practice, envelopes, containing the answers addressed to relevant hon. Members, including one envelope addressed to the right hon. Gentleman, were delivered by a member of staff from parliamentary branch to the letter board in the Members' Lobby.

Drinks (Ministerial Offices)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent on the provision of drinks in ministerial offices at her Department since 1 May 1997. [25826]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 January 1998]: As at 27 January, the cost of drinks purchased by the seven Ministers' offices since 1 May was some £4,000. The figure for the equivalent period the previous year was some £4,400.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on progress in her review of the rules governing the conduct of employment agencies. [51642]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We aim to publish a consultation document seeking views on updated regulations to govern employment agency conduct in early autumn.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which her Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if she will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if she will produce this list on a regular basis. [51272]

Mrs. Roche: There is a range and diversity of grants and awards, both departmental and through EU funding, which are available via Government. All Wakefield constituents are entitled to make application for these awards where appropriate.

I understand that officials from the Department supplied some constituency-based information for my hon. Friend recently. The information requested is not, however, held centrally or in the form requested, and to collate such a list would involve disproportionate cost. However, general information on grants available to the public can be obtained from local business links.

Sombrero Island

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons the environmental impact assessment on Sombrero Island was not carried out during the bird nesting season. [51256]

Mr. Battle: Beal Aerospace is proposing to develop a rocket launch site on Sombrero island, which is part of the UK overseas territory of Anguilla. Beal Aerospace has contracted an environmental consultancy—ICF Kaiser—to perform an environmental impact assessment on the proposal. It is for Beal Aerospace to decide when and how the assessment should be conducted. The relevant authorities will then consider the adequacy of the assessment when it is submitted.

I understand that ICF Kaiser is aware that its initial ecological survey conducted earlier this year did not coincide with the nesting season of many of the birds on Sombrero, and is expected to visit the island again this month to carry out further studies when more birds will be nesting.

Export Licence Applications

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications awaiting decisions on 24 June had been waiting for (a) 20 days, (b) 40 days, (c) 60 days and (d) more than 60 days. [48228]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 June 1998]: At 24 June 1998, a decision had not yet been taken on 2,110 applications for new individual export licences received since 2 May 1997. These are broken down as follows:

	Standard individual export licences	Open individual export licences
Applications received between
2 May 1997 and 26 March 1998	449	140
27 March 1998 and 27 April 1998	230	27
28 April 1998 and 27 May 1998	417	16
28 May 1998 and 24 June 1998	817	14

The figures for open individual export licences do not cover amendments, extensions or OIELs for protective clothing for the media.

However, this information should be considered in light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) of 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 256–58.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent consultations she has had with local authorities on the negotiations regarding the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [50759]

Mrs. Roche: Officials from this Department, HM Treasury, and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, have met the Local Government Association's international bureau, and my noble Friend the Minister for Trade has exchanged correspondence with them as well as with many local authorities. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment recently addressed the LGA's environment and regeneration board, and discussed the multilateral agreement on investment. In addition, there have been numerous letters to Ministers from local authorities, as well as letters and other informal contacts with officials. Our view is that no current lawful local government practice will be affected by the MAI.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has commissioned on the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on (a) restrictive trade practices and (b) consumers in the United Kingdom. [50760]

Mrs. Roche: We have not commissioned any such research.

The UK already has an open and liberal economy, and has benefited greatly from the inward investment we have attracted as a result. If the multilateral agreement on investment increases inward investment even further, we would expect this to lead to increased competition and hence benefits for consumers. The UK and EU regulatory framework for competition policy exists to deal with anti-competitive behaviour.

HEALTH

Chlamydia

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for a public education programme on the precautions necessary to exclude chlamydia infection. [42118]

Ms Jowell: The Department already commissions health promotion work for sexually transmitted infections including Chlamydia and has recently funded leaflets and radio advertising. We are currently considering further measures to increase public awareness of Chlamydia.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has initiated into the effects of chlamydia infection. [42117]

Ms Jowell: I recently announced that the Department will be setting up two pilot studies to test the feasibility of opportunistic screening for chlamydial infection later this year. In addition, the National Health Service health technology assessment programme will shortly be issuing a call for research proposals on topics identified by expert advisers as needing further work.

Ovarian Cancer

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the results of the Intergroup Study with Taxol-cisplatin and the national Ovarian Cancer Chemotherapy Consensus Statement; and if he will make a statement. [51659]

Mr. Boateng: Some clinical trials on the place of "Taxol" (Paclitaxel) in the treatment of ovarian cancer have already reported results but others are still underway. An updated analysis of the survival benefit of using Taxol in combination as a first line treatment of advanced ovarian cancer was considered earlier this year by clinicians who issued the national Ovarian Cancer Chemotherapy Consensus Statement. A full presentation of the analysis was made in May at the meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology. These have undergone close scrutiny by the profession.

Early indications are that these results are encouraging and we have asked the Trent Development and Evaluation Committee to review their earlier work on the use of Cisplatin and Paclitaxel as a first line treatment in ovarian cancer in the light of these new data. This is being considered by the Standing Medical Advisory Committee alongside guidelines being prepared by the Joint Council for Clinical Oncology and following that, advice will be issued to the National Health Service.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the United Kingdom haemophilia population receiving NHS treatment before 1986 were infected with HIV; and what plans his Department has to make financial assistance available to those who were infected with hepatitis C. [51621]

Mr. Boateng: Around 1,200 members of the United Kingdom haemophilia population were infected with HIV as a result of National Health Service treatment before 1986.

We have received a number of representations on the issue of special payments for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through NHS treatment. The issues involved are complex and we are exploring them fully before reaching a decision.

Psychiatric Units (Secure Beds)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the current waiting times for persons who need a secure bed in a psychiatric unit in England; [51753]

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the number of secure beds available in psychiatric units in England; [51751]

(3) how many secure beds are available in psychiatric units in England; [51752]

(4) how many of the secure beds available in psychiatric units in England are currently occupied. [51750]

Mr. Boateng: In 1992 the Department carried out a "Review of Health and Social Services for Mentally Disordered Offenders and Others Requiring a Similar Service". This recognised that the provision of secure places is an important part of the strategy to meet the needs of mentally disordered offenders, and gave added impetus to the Glancy report (1974) which proposed a target of 1,000 medium secure places nationally.

Between 1991 and 1995 the Department invested over £47 million in a capital programme with the aim of developing 1,250 purpose-built medium secure places in the National Health Service. The programme is now almost complete and the target of 1,000 places nationally has been met. This programme has also been supported by the NHS regions.

Currently there are 1,504 medium secure places and 1,070 low secure places in England, making a total of 2,574 beds. This does not include the high security hospitals. Information on the number of places occupied and on waiting times for secure beds is not available centrally.

Mesothelioma

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) conducted and (b) evaluated into the causes of mesothelioma; how much his Department has spent on researching mesothelioma in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [51899]

Mr. Boateng: The main agency through which the Government support bio-medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC has not supported any research, in the last five years, specifically to evaluate the causes of mesothelioma. However, it does provide support for more basic research in related areas which may provide insights into the aetiology of mesothelioma and have an impact on treatment in the future. For example, the MRC Toxicology Unit at Leicester has been working on projects to better understand the cellular mechanisms by which the lung responds to certain toxic materials. These include many toxins that circulate throughout the body and yet cause selective injury to particular types of lung cell, as well as inhaled mineral fibres such as asbestos and zeolites.

In addition, the MRC's Committee on Toxic Hazards in the Environment and Workplace produced a report in 1995 (ISBN 1 899110 03 8) entitled "Natural and man-made mineral fibres: UK research priorities"—this was based on workshops organised by the Institute for Environmental Health. This report considers, inter alia, mesothelioma. It is available from the Institute of Environment and Health, University of Leicester, PO Box 138, Lancaster Road, Leicester LE1 9HN (telephone 0116 252 5530 or fax 0116 252 5146).

Medicines Commission

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the Annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1997. [52820]

Ms Jowell: We have received the report, and copies have been laid before both Houses of Parliament today in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1997 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Advisory Board on the registration of Homeopathic Products, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission and the Veterinary Products Committee.

We are glad to acknowledge the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act Advisory Bodies and thank them for the time and effort dedicated in the public interest to this important work.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to allow community health councils to represent those residents of nursing homes who are not funded by the NHS. [52240]

Ms Jowell: Community health councils' role is to represent the interests in the health service of the public (including the residents of nursing homes whether or not they are funded by the National Health Service) in their districts. We have no plans to extend community health councils' role to represent the public's interest in non NHS funded services or care.

Child Migrants

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will open to public scrutiny the documents (a) 1406, 1948 to 1957, Emigration of 100 children to Fairbridge Farm School, Piryarra, Western Australia: reports on inspection of premises, 894024/28, (b) 1557, 1947, Information about Fairbridge Farm School, Western Australia, given to Home Office by a former worker, 903435/18 and (c) 1592, 1947 to 1949, Emigration of British children to Northcote Farm School in Australia: details of organisation of school, 904404/2 held in the Public Record Office. [52272]

Mr. Boateng: The three files referred to are all subject to closure for 75 years because they contain personal and confidential references to individual children. This is consistent with Government policy concerning all public records. In the light of this policy, and in the context of the Health Select Committee's concerns, we are considering again whether these three files and some others can be opened. Hon. Members, bona fide researchers, representatives of the Child Migrants Trust, or the sending agencies for child migration, including Fairbridge, or individual former child migrants, may see these files subject to a condition preserving the confidentiality of the personal information in them. Arrangements can be made with Departmental officials.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

People's Panel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 362, if he will estimate the cost of the second wave of research planned for later in the year. [52234]

Dr. David Clark: The cost of the second wave of research using the People's Panel is not yet known. It will depend on the number of issues that are covered and how many other Departments take part.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio on what date the air-conditioning system for the Millennium Dome is planned to be installed. [49153]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Installation of the air cooling system has already begun in line with the critical path for delivery of the project in time for 1 January 2000.

Millennium Dome (Transport)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) how many park-and-ride car parking spaces will be provided for the Millennium Dome; [47822]

(2) what plans the Government have to offer park-and-sail facilities to the Millennium Dome; [47787]

(3) what plans he has to discourage the use of private cars by visitors to the Dome; [47812]

(4) where the park-and-ride car parks for the Millennium Dome will be located. [47786]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has recently produced a detailed park-and-ride strategy for Greenwich Council as part of its planning requirement. This document, which gives full and detailed answers to the questions raised, has been placed in the Library of the House.

CABINET OFFICE

Lobbyists

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what communications have been sent to GPC Market Access through his Ministerial fax machine. [52255]

Mr. Mandelson: My office sends numerous faxes every day to different individuals and organisations and a record of these is not kept.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is his policy on (a) receiving representations from lobbying companies, (b) initiating meetings with lobbying companies and (c) passing on representations made by lobbying companies. [51969]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Ministers receive deputations and representations from many groups who are concerned to press their own interests or those of their clients which Ministers take due care to consider within the wider public interest and Government policy. All contacts with outside interest groups are conducted in accordance with the principles set out in the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Code.

Official Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he last travelled by train on official business. [51970]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: I travelled from London to Newport and back by train on 10 July.

Freedom of Information White Paper

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the nature of the representations he has made in respect of the proposed Freedom of Information White Paper. [51968]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 1 and 20 July 1998, Official Report column 362.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the overseas visits he has undertaken at public expense since 1 January, indicating the purpose of each visit. [51974]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: I have undertaken the following official visits since 1 January 1998:

Date	Venue	Event
1998
2–5 January	Florida and Washington	Official programme, including meetings at Epcot and the White House
30 January-1 February	Florence	Speech to European University Institute in UK Presidency series of lectures
2–3 February	Brussels	Official programme, including discussions with the European Commission, MEPs and the UK Permanent Representation
2–4 March	Bonn	Official Programme, including speech to seminar on European Integration and National Sovereignty

8–9 June	Paris	Speech to Seminar at National Assembly on Blair-Jospin: One Year On
18–22 July	Brazil	Official programme, including meeting with President Cardoso and speeches at University of Brasilia and British Chamber of Commerce, Sao Paulo

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the speeches he has made since 1 May, indicating their dates and audience; and if he will place copies in the Library. [51971]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: I undertake numerous speaking engagements and address many different groups in the course of my ministerial duties.

TREASURY

BCCI Report

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the confidential sections of the Bingham report into the collapse of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International; and when he proposes to publish these clauses. [43079]

Mr. Darling: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 649.

Working Families Tax Credit

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure the adaptability of the Working Families Tax Credit to recipients' changing circumstances. [50580]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The broad outline of the Working Families Tax Credit was published on Budget day and the Inland Revenue is continuing to work on the precise details of the scheme.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the details of the operation of the Working Families Tax Credit will be published; and if he will make a statement. [50579]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The broad outline of the Working Families Tax Credit was published on Budget day in "The Working Families Tax Credit and work incentives"—number 3 in the series "The Modernisation of Britain's Tax and Benefit System". We intend to bring forward the necessary legislation to implement it in detail as soon as possible.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how soon after moving into work parents will start to receive the Working Families Tax Credit. [50581]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: As the Chancellor announced in his Budget, the effective and efficient delivery of the tax credits will be key indicators of its success, and the Inland Revenue expects to maintain the current high standards of service seen in the speed of delivery of Family Credit.

Local Authority Assets

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1195–1201, if he will make a statement on the process by which he will achieve the annual sale of £2.75 billion of local authority assets. [50834]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 16 July 1998]: It will be the responsibility of individual authorities to determine and deliver their asset disposal plans. But from 1 September 1998 they will also have the added incentive that they will be able to spend more of the proceeds, as the Government will no longer require to set aside a percentage of the proceeds from sales, other than sales of council housing and associated land.

National Asset Register

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 June 1998,

Official Report, columns 1195–1201, if he will list the central Government disposals from the National Asset Register which he plans for 1998–99 in order to achieve £1 billion revenue. [50835]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The estimates for 1998–99 were set out in the FSBR. The estimate of £1 billion a year over the next 3 years is projected from the level of sales achieved in previous years, the enhanced incentives announced at the time of the National Asset Register for Departments to dispose of assets, and discussions with Departments in the Comprehensive Spending Review on prospects for sales in the next 3 years.

National Parliaments

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Treasury will enter into public service agreements with (a) the National Assembly for Wales and (b) the Scottish Parliament. [51464]

Mr. Darling: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has agreed Public Service Agreements with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales. Once formally established it will be for the National Assembly for Wales and the Scottish Parliament to determine what arrangements they want to introduce to ensure that public expenditure on devolved services represents best value for money.

Income Tax

Kate Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are currently paying (a) schedule C and (b) schedule D tax. [51653]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Schedule C was abolished for income tax purposes from 6 April 1996. The tax charge was transferred to Schedule D from that date.

It is estimated that about 21 million individual taxpayers have income taxable under Schedule D or Schedule A.

Gas-powered Vehicles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reduce duty on auto-LP gas to the European Union minimum of 6.8/kg for a period of not less than five years; and if he will make a statement. [51857]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: There are no plans to reduce the duty rate on gas used as road fuel to the EU minimum.

The freezing of the rate since November 1996 represents a reduction in real terms which, taken in conjunction with increases in duties on other fuels, recognises the environmental benefits associated with road fuel gases.

The widened duty differential with conventional fuels offers a clear incentive for high mileage fleets, vans and buses to convert to cleaner gas power and will help offset the cost to motorists of vehicle conversion.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what environmental requirements will be built into the public service agreements between the Treasury and other Government departments; and if he will make a statement. [51975]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The Government are committed to taking the environment into account across all areas of policy. Public Service agreements between the Treasury and other Government Departments will be consistent with the objective of sustainable development. Where relevant, specific environmental objectives will be reflected in the aims and targets in the agreements.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his announcement on the Comprehensive Spending Review, on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–211, if he will publish a table listing expenditure on science, research and development for each Government department and the total for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02. [51846]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Figures of Government Departments' plans for expenditure in 1998–99 on science, engineering and technology and on research and development are published in Tables 2.1 and 3.1 respectively of 'Science, engineering and technology statistics 1998'(Cm 4006 Department of Trade and Industry and Office of Science and Technology). Copies are available in the Library of the House. Provisional figures for the following three years will be available later this year.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the purpose of his most recent visit to the United States; what was the total cost to public funds; and how many people, holding what posts, accompanied him. [51885]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I travelled to the United States last week to give a speech setting out Government policy on economic reform in the UK, Europe and in the world economy. All arrangements for the visit were fully in line with the Ministerial Code.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the Ernst and Young ITEM Club forecast of growth for 1999 of one per cent. [52236]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury regularly monitors a wide range of independent forecasts for the UK economy. Based on the published July comparison, the Ernst and Young ITEM Club forecast for growth in 1999 is now the third most pessimistic out of the forty-five organisations surveyed by the Treasury. The Budget projections for the public finances are based on a forecast for growth of $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. in 1999 which, by contrast, is very much in line with the independent consensus.

Life Offices

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the inherited estates of life offices. [52749]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's position on the inherited estates of life offices was set out in a statement by the then Minister for Corporate Affairs in February 1995. The DTI, which was then the responsible regulatory authority, applied the principles set out in that statement in reaching agreement with four life offices for a restructuring of their long-term funds, and a clarification of the attribution of the interests of policyholders and shareholders in the long-term fund.

A common feature of these cases is that they involved a particular type of business known as "industrial business". Historically, there was a lack of clarity over the development of these companies' approach to dealing with surplus arising in respect of some industrial business policies written earlier this century. Consequently, there was no clear evidence as to how surplus which had built up from these policies should be properly attributed between policyholders and shareholders. The DTI therefore reached agreement with the companies on an attribution based on reasonable assumptions, in line with the February 1995 statement.

In considering any other proposals for clarification on unattributed assets, the Treasury will continue to be guided by the principles set out in the DTI statement of February 1995, and apply them to the particular circumstances of each case. In doing so, the Treasury will be particularly concerned to ensure that policyholders' interests are fully protected.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 316

SESSION 1997–98

13th July—24th July 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
